[Question] The FRG has been clearly affected by the Community's agreement on a smaller contribution by Britain to the Community budget in 1980 and 1981, and will be one of the principal contributors in the event of subsequent increases in the budget. Doesn't this represent an obstacle to the FRG's maintaining its stance in favor of the Community's enlargement?

[Answer] The FRG has undertaken considerable financial burdens as a result of this agreement, but this has not affected its stance at all in favor of the Community's southward expansion. The FRG has always contributed generously to the Community's burdens. This was already the case when the Spanish Government submitted its membership application 3 years ago. In any event, the Federal Government is in favor of the necessary adjustments in the common financial and agricultural policies; that is, it advocates a search for solutions which will be tolerable from the financial viewpoint and will lead to a fair distribution of burdens.

[Question] The French authorities have emphasized the need for a strengthening of the Common Agricultural Policy in some of its rules. Does the FRG believe that the reform or strengthening of some aspects of the Community's agricultural policy must be carried out, and, if so, is this something which should be resolved before the negotiations on Spain's entry into the Community are completed?

[Answer] The Community is confronted by financial problems irrespective of the southward expansion, if "expansion" is the right word, which will entail high costs and makes these structural readjustments even more necessary. The most urgent thing is the adjustment of the Common Agricultural Policy: The expenditure on the agricultural sector represents over 70 percent of the Community budget, especially with respect to surpluses. However, these structural readjustments should not lead us to abandon the basic principles of the Common Agricultural Policy of the cornerstone of the financing, which is also on a common basis.

[Question] Do you believe that in the time between now and 1 January 1983, which has frequently been cited as a target for Spanish entry into the Community, it will be possible to implement the reforms which are necessary in the Community in order to go ahead with expansion? What, in the FRG's opinion, are the reforms necessary within the Community, and should these reforms be started, completed or merely outlined for Spain to be able to attain the status of a member country? Does the FRG intend to take initiatives on a plan of reforms within the Community, and, if so, when does it intend to propose them?

[Answer] It is impossible at this moment to set a precise date for carrying out the structural changes to which I have just referred. As you know, the issue is being closely studied in each of the member countries. For its part, the Commission has been instructed to submit its own proposals by 1 June 1983. So everything will depend on these proposals being turned into jointly adopted decisions as soon as possible. However, we cannot postpone the equally important issue of expansion until these decisions have been made. The structural adjustments and the southward expansion must be given impetus simultaneously.

Entry Into NATO

[Question] In particular, does the FRG believe that institutional reforms such as on the rule of unanimity in the Council's decisions should be implemented, and, if so, should or should not these reforms precede the others which are necessary?

[Answer] We fully endorse the principle of making decisions by a majority in the Council which is laid down in the Community's treaties. At the same time, we are in favor of greater efficiency in the Community's institutions. The current deliberations within the Community on the basis of the report of the so-called "three wise men" are also proceeding in this direction. However, it might be excessive to describe them as "reforms."

[Question] Does Spain's entry into the Community pose special or specific difficulties for your country--there has been talk, for instance, about German sensitivities with respect to the free movement of people--and in what way does the FRG believe that they can be resolved? Do you believe that these difficulties, if they exist, are of such a nature that they could delay or prevent Spain's entry into the Community?

[Answer] Free movement is certainly an important item in the membership negotiations. But the case of Greece has demonstrated that this issue can also be resolved satisfactorily.

[Question] What is your opinion of the concept of a "variable geometry" Europe, in the sense that, just as at present certain Community member countries do not take part in some Community programs such as the European Monetary System, should some freedom be allowed in a future 12-member Community for participation by each of them in the common policies?

[Answer] The idea of a "variable geometry" Europe is not new, but it entails considerable dangers for the Community's unifying power.

[Question] Your country is in favor of Spain's entry into NATO. Could you give us the reasons for this stance on the FRG's part?

[Answer] The decision on joining an alliance or a community should be a sovereign decision of the country at issue. Thus it was a sovereign decision by Spain to seek membership of the Common Market. In the same way it is Spain's sovereign right to decide with full responsibility and competence on entry into the Atlantic alliance. If Spain decides in favor of entry into NATO, the FRG will welcome it.

SPD'S WISCHNEWSKI REVIEWS 1-WEEK TALKS IN U.S.

[Text] Bonn, 6 August (DPA)--In the view of Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, no break would occur in the good relations between Bonn and Washington even if Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan wins the election. Following his return from 1 week of talks in the United States with representatives of the Carter administration and members of Reagan's campaign staff, Wischnewski told journalists in Bonn today: "Whoever is U.S. president, whoever is governing the Federal Republic, relations between the United States and Federal Republic are of decisive importance for both us and the irrespective of the elections. For us, the relationship with the United States is a vital issue." The SPD politician assessed current relations between Bonn and Washington as good.

Wischnewski stressed, however, that at present Reagan's team was not interested in a ratification of the SALT II agreement between the United States and the USSR on limiting strategic arms, of which Bonn and the other EEC states are in favor. The Reagan team's reaction to this issue had been "restrained." On the other hand, Wischnewski underlined Carter's unaltered interest in ratifying SALT II and in progress toward a further SALT III agreement, and disarmament talks on troops reduction in central Europe. There is also "full understanding" in the United States for the Federal Republic's special problems with regard to Berlin and intra-German relations.

In his evaluation of Reagan's goals, the SPD politician limited himself to saying that election platforms in the United States should be seen from the viewpoint of winning the election to a greater extent than in the Federal Republic. The Republican Party's foreign policy ideas have not yet been conclusively defined.

With regard to the situation in Afghanistan and the Persian Gulf, Wischnewski noted that no one in the United States expected Bonn to involve itself within NATO beyond the alliance's existing regional borders. On the question of the U.S. attitude toward the EEC initiative for solving the Middle East problem, he underlined several times that there was no opposition to this in the United States. It was important, however, to utilize fully all opportunities for consultations between Europe and America.

The SPD politician also devoted much time to relations between the United States and Latin America. Washington's policy in this respect had changed recently. In support of this, Wischnewski mentioned the conclusion of the agreement with Panama, support for Nicaragua and the rapid reaction to the military coup in Bolivia.

With regard to developments in El Salvador, Wischnewski said that no one in the SPD was interested in making difficulties for the United States either there or in any other region of Latin America. He pointed out that the representative of the party belonging to the Socialist International in the El Salvador military junta resigned from office at the beginning of this year and has gone over to the opposition. As the Federal Republic is at present not represented by an ambassador in El Salvador, the SPD regards appointing a suitable expert to gather on-the-spot information about the situation as urgent and necessary.

POLITICAL SCENE DOMINATED BY REACTION TO BOLOGNA BOMBING

AU060900 Rome ANSA in English 08-5 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] Rome, 6 Aug (ANSA)--The Italian political scene is still almost exclusively dominated by comments on and reactions to the bomb-provoked massacre at Bologna's train station Saturday.

An article by Italian Communist Party (PCI) Secretary Enrico Berlinguer yesterday, in which he lamented a government vacuum and the desolate lack of political guidance in the country, sparked considerable controversy in political circles.

The PCI chief, writing in the party's daily L'UNITA said that the present situation was objectively conducive to subversion and antidemocratic strategies. He claimed that the current state of political instability made it inevitable that a certain segment of the dominant groups and certain political and government figures would start preparing for a solution farther to the right.

Berlinguer then proceeded implicity to put forward the theme of "national solidarity", which in Italy's political jargon means the PCI's entry into the government, "to take innovative action commensurate with the seriousness of the problems facing the country 'and to give Italy' that consensus and confidence which it currently lacks".

In response to the Berlinguer article, Christian Democratic Party (DC) Secretary Flaminio Piccoli today lambasted what he called the shoddy opposition role the Communists were playing, with a leadership "that preaches sectarianism and expects solidarity".

Piccoli also voiced stupefaction over the fact that the Bologna episode was being shamelessly used to further political maneuvers aimed against the government.

Social Democratic Party (PSDI) Deputy Secretary Puletti said the brains behind the massacre and its perpetrators must be uncovered but that a different kind of government and leadership group was needed for this. Puletti said that Berlinguer was right in claiming that the present government was inadequate to the task. However, the PCI leader was not convincing when he seemed to see a Communist entry into the government as the only means by which to restore credibility and strength to democratic institutions, he said.

Proletarian Democracy accused the parties and the institutions with having begun an ignoble rivalry to exploit "this horrible crime" and accused the "Cossiga-Craxi government" with using the massacre as a way to rally popular anger around the institutions.

Socialist Deputy Falco Accame said he would not be surprised to find Libyan agents behind the Bologna massacre. The Libyans consider Italy a no-man's land, he added. Accame noted that the former military secret services, SIFAR, used to have close contact with Libya. Since SIFAR men are prominent in the current military security services, a close look should be given to their structures with a view to renovation, he said.

Speaking for the Italian Social Movement (Neofascist), Mirko Tremaglia said that the unequivocable view of his party was that the criminals responsible for Bologna, no matter what their political stripe, were beasts and not men. The party has long asked for a return of the death penalty which should certainly be invoked for cases like this one, he said.

Meanwhile, Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani said that once he had conferred with House Speaker Nilde Jotti, every step would be taken to see to it that law decrees were used in future only in cases of urgency or extreme need as stated in the constitution.

FINLAND

FINLAND REPORTEDLY TURNS TO FRANCE FOR NUCLEAR KNOW-HOW

WA061500 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 2 Aug 80 p 9

[Article: "Finland Accepts New Reactor Offer"]

[Text] Finland no longer intends to work exclusively with the Soviet Union and Sweden in the field of nuclear energy, but rather is considering France as a partner as well. The state power company Imatran Voima has announced that it will seek the expertise of the French firm Sofraton for the construction of a 1,000 megawatt reactor even though this project was already included in a long-term commercial agreement with the Soviet Union. According to information provided by the Finnish company, the surprising announcement is one of the results of the recent state visit of French President Giscard d'Estaing with his Finnish counterpart Kekkonen. In the words of Imatran Volma director Kalevi Numminen, the offer to Sofraton is to be seen in light of the knowledge that in contrast to the Soviet technology, the French "directly corresponds to the Finnish standard."

Two of the 420 megawatt reactors in Loviisa on the southern coast of Finland delivered by the Soviet Union, the first of which has already been in operation for about 3 years, have had certain difficulties recently, and the charging of the second unit has been repeatedly delayed due to cracks found in the pressure system. What was at first seen as a model of East-West cooperation in the field of nuclear technology--the instrumentation for the plant switchboard galleries in Loviisa came largely from the Federal Republic, while Westinghouse contributed the plans for the so-called ice capacitor--has now in practice obviously not turned out to be completely free of problems.

NORWAY

FRYDENLUND ON PROBLEMS OF NORWAY'S FOREIGN POLICY

LD060953 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 31 Jul 80 p 7

[Elisabeth Holte interview with Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund: "Criticism Arises Too Easily"; date and place of interview not specified]

[Text] There has been an unusually large number of foreign visitors to Osl recently, on top of the foreign minister's own visits to Poland and to the NATO meeting in Ankara. The guest list is imposing: French Premier Raymond Barre, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, EEC President Roy Jenkins, Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua, Saudi Petroleum Minister Shaykh Yamani and French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet. There were also the meetings with the other NATO ministers in Ankara. The topics for discussion were many and urgent.

"The world is facing considerable changes in a number of areas--we are in a period of upheaval," Frydenlund said. "There is West Europe's development in the direction of greater foreign policy self-confidence. We have the arms race, which it is important to stop, and Norway, through its involvement in NATO work for a platform for missile negotiations, feels a special responsibility to follow this up. We have North-South relations, where global changes have reached a deadlock which we must break. We have aid program policies which must be thoroughly discussed from time to time and where a particularly acute problem at the moment is the controversial question of the role of industry in the aid process. And not least, before the visit to Moscow in the fall, it is necessary to reexamine things so as to gain an overall picture of all the outstanding issues between our two countries."

In the circle of Foreign Minister Frydenlund's diplomatic guests, the number of EEC representatives has been especially striking.

"This is a clear response to the state of affairs that the European movement also pointed out in the report it gave to me recently--the danger that Norway, as a nonmember of the EEC, might become increasingly isolated in the European context. At the international meetings I have noted how friendly and informal the tone has been between the EEC ministers--something that is at least partly due to the fact that they meet often and under informal circumstances. This is why we on the Norwegian side have planned this informal and personal exchange of visits, in the mountains for example, in order to expand contacts at the personal level. It is of course not a goal in itself that we should have close personal contacts. But it is quite clear that through such personal contacts considerable political capital is built up which can be of great benefit in other contexts. It is especially interesting in the period of upheaval that we find ourselves in now, both as regards East-West relations in Europe and West-West relations, that is, those between the United States and West Europe."

[Question] Might not this new European self-assurance in international politics have a negative effect on the international standing of the United States?

"If this new European role were to lead to conflict between West Europe and the Americans, of which we have seen small signs, this would have an adverse effect. But if West Europe and the United States could, on the other hand, supplement each other then this would be a great gain. For 20 years we have been talking about an Atlantic partnership without its being a reality, because the United States has been so dominant. With this new European self-confidence there could be a more real partnership. And as Norway is placed--in alliance with the Americans in NATO, but outside the EEC--it is obvious that it is in our national interests that a great gulf does not emerge between West Europe and the United States," said Knut Frydenlund, who is continuously preoccupied by what is taking place around him these days, and who looks a little tired after all his hard work recently.

[Question] But generally speaking, the worst of the international chill attributable to Afghanistan is over now?

"That will depend on the future development of the Afghanistan question. But I think that Federal Chancellor Schmidt's visit to Moscow was important. Not that the visit in itself was turning point, but the talks in Moscow showed that both East and West are interested in ensuring that events do not get out of control. As far as the recent announcement of a military withdrawal from Afghanistan is concerned, it has to be said that the scale was too small to have any decisive military significance. But it could have been a Soviet signal...and it is also very important that real negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe get under way.

"Norwegian foreign policy makers have got it in the neck in the last year. If it was not the modernization resolution in NATO, then it was criticism that we avoided taking up a firm position on the Olympic boycott and instead hid behind the sports organizations, to say nothing about contingency stockpiling....

"Criticism is part of our political system and the political game. But to be sure, Norwegian foreign policy only has a narrow margin in which to maneuver before there is trouble! We saw this in the reaction to the sports organizations' resolution to boycott the Olympics. We saw this in connection with the NATO resolution on the missile modernization program and on a 3-percent growth target in defense budgets. This brought about the charge that Norway wanted to be the smartest boy in the class. And when voices were raised against this, we heard immediately the other variation that Norway was slipping in the foreign policy area. This business about slipping which we were so troubled by during our first years we have managed to counteract little by little, but instead we start hearing this business about the smartest boy. And before long we will be back to the 'Norway is slipping' version. We have not much room to maneuver before we are criticized from one side or the other," Knut Frydenlund said.

NORWAY TO EXPEL FISHING BOATS BREAKING REGULATIONS

LD301555 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 25 Jul 80 p 4

[Rolf L. Larsen report: "Soviet Fishing in Jan Mayen Zone: Norwegian Fishermen Want Concessions in the Barents Sea"]

[Text] "We will demand compensatory concessions for the pollack fishing that Soviet fishing vessels are now undertaking inside the newly established fishing zone around Jan Mayen. But we must first see how much the Russians are fishing before we can demand compensation in the form of capelin and cod in the Barents Sea. This compensation will also cover the pollack fishing that the Soviet Union is undertaking within the Norwegian mainland fishing zone," departmental head Ola Solbjoerg of the Fishing Boat Owners' Association told AFTENPOSTEN.

The Fishing Boat Owners' Association will present this proposal to the Norwegian Fishermen's Association and to the Norwegian delegation which will discuss fishery questions with the Soviet Union in 1981.

Soviet vessels, like those of other nations allowed to fish in the zone around Jan Mayen, are obliged to give the Fisheries Directorate reports of what catches are taken.

"When we know how much pollack the Russians have fished, we will then be able to demand certain compensation in the form of capelin and cod catches in the Barents Sea. We know that the Soviet Union uses large factory ships with a gross tonnage of 1,000 to 1,500 tons during the pollack season, which is now under way in the Jan Mayen zone. They take enormous quantities of pollack, which they grade and freeze on board. In the Soviet Union pollack is used for human consumption, whereas the pollack which the Norwegian vessels catch is primarily used for meal and oil. Research is now going on into the possibility for using pollack for consumption, for example, by drying it, Solbjoerg said.

The coast guard vessel Staalbas is on its way to the newly established Jan Mayen zone to check on the Soviet fishing vessels. "We expect to arrive in the area on Friday morning," Capt Kaare Fuglevik said on board the Staalbas.

The Soviet fishing vessels are lying around 120 nautical miles southwest of Jan Mayen--"we will undertake normal patrol activities in the zone, in the same way as we have patrolled the Norwegian mainland fishing zone in the past. We will not check the whole fleet of 80 vessels, but will make do with spot checks," Fuglevik said.

Fisheries Ministry Director Kjell Raasok said that the Soviet fishing fleet off Jan Mayen had not announced in advance that it intended to fish within the Norwegian zone, as it should have done. So far only three Polish, two East German and one Soviet fishing vessel have announced their intention of active fishing within the Jan Mayen zone. "Norway announced the interim regulations for foreigners fishing in the Jan Mayen zone in the middle of June. The Foreign Ministry has received no protests against the regulations from countries that normally fish in the zone," Foreign Ministry press spokesman Geir Grung stated.

However, the Soviet Union announced that it could take up to 3 months for the regulations to be translated into Russian and sent out to the Soviet fishing fleet. Norwegian authorities therefore asked that the Soviet fishing vessels be briefed on the main points in the regulations governing the zone. "If foreign fishing vessels are caught with catches in the Jan Mayen zone without having announced their intention to fish in advance, the coast guard will first give them warnings. In the event of repeated transgression of the regulations, boats will run the risk of being expelled from the zone," Grung said.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS TO RESUME 9 AUGUST

Kiprianou Acceptance

NC060921 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0900 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] The president of the republic, Mr Kiprianou, has announced that the Greek Cypriot side has accepted the resumption of the intercommunal talks and that this morning the interlocutor, Mr Ioannidhis, has already conveyed the acceptance to the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi.

The president said that he made this decision after weighing the pros and cons, and the arguments that were put forward during last night's joint meeting of the National Council and the Council of Ministers. President Kiprianou stressed that the Greek Cypriot side will as always, go to the talks with goodwill for a substantive discussion concerning a solution of the Cyprus issue on the basis of the summit agreements that already exist.

The president of the republic expressed the hope that the talks will be resumed soon and that this time there will be progress.

The president made these statements during the course of a meeting which he chaired at the Foreign Ministry within the framework of his visits to various ministries. During the meeting there was a briefing on the activities of the ministry and a report submitted on the work being done both at home and abroad. The meeting also examined ways of further expanding the operations of the ministry for the purpose of increasing its efficiency. The meeting was attended by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, the director general of the ministry and the heads of the various departments.

Ioannidhis Statement

[Text] The government spokesman has made the following statement:

As already announced, the Greek Cypriot side has accepted resumption of the intercommunal talks and conveyed its acceptance this morning to the UN secretary general's special envoy, Gobbi. Following this, Gobbi informed Greek Cypriot interlocutor Ioannidhis that the other side has also accepted resumption of the talks, and it has been arranged that the talks will be resumed next Saturday at 1000.

Greek Cypriot interlocutor Ioannidhis has made the following statement:

We are going to the negotiating table with a spirit of goodwill, and we will seek a solution of federation for all aspects, based on the two summit agreements of 12 February 1977 and 19 May 1979. Our stand on all issues will be fully analyzed during the talks.

The UN spokesman in Nicosia has announced that the intercommunal talks will resume at the Ledra Palace Hotel next Saturday at 1000. This will be the opening meeting. Substantive talks will resume in the middle of September. The spokesman said: This is the climax of long, continuous and dynamic efforts by the UN secretary general, which have been intensified in recent months. The parties have showed a positive intention which has led to the conclusion of this agreement. The spokesman also said that both parties have furnished indications that they intend to conduct the talks in a continuing and constructive manner and that all aspects of the Cyprus problem will be discussed when the talks are resumed in September.

Denktas Comments

TA06171- (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] It has been announced that the talks between the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities are to resume on Saturday, 9 August. President Denktas made the announcement following a meeting today with the UN special representative in Cyprus, Mr Hugo Gobbi. He said that negotiations on the political future of the island will recommence on 15 September after Saturday's introductory meeting. President Denktas said that certain reservations of the Greek Cypriots on the introductory address by the UN secretary general have now been overcome and as a result the talks would be resumed. He stated that the agenda for the new session of the talks would be made up of four points and he cited them as: the Varosha issue, the territorial issue, the constitution and economic questions connected with the sixth point of the Denktas-Kiprianou summit. He added that each point of the agenda would be tackled in a month.

Asked whether priority would be given to the Varosha issue, President Denktas said that any priority to be attached to the Varosha issue would depend on the beginning of actual talks on all aspects of the problem and as progress would be made on the constitutional and territorial issues, priority would be given to the Varosha issue.

Asked whether the Greek Cypriots had given up their objections to Mr Waldheim's introductory address, President Denktas said that the disagreement had been on the word bizonal, but now the Greek Cypriots had accepted the address. He stated that it was now up to the Greek Cypriot leadership to explain to its community the reasons for this objection for such a long time.

Further Denktas Remarks

[Text] Replying to reporters' questions this morning, President Rauf Denktas said that a return to the pre-1974 conditions is definitely out of the question in the settlement of the Cyprus problem. Noting that a new bizonal [illegible] federal system will be established, Denktas said that while creating an independent and nonaligned Cyprus with a bizonal federal system, whereby the Turkish Cypriot community will be responsible for its own security, certain powers currently exercised by the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus will be given to a central federal government to be established with the Greek Cypriots.

In reply to another question, Denktas said that the refugee problem was settled through the exchange of population and that there is nothing further to say on this subject. He said: The exchange of territory will be discussed and it will be possible to make border adjustments. However, all these subjects depend on first agreeing upon the government to be established and its authorities.

Pointing out that the agreement reached with Makarios consists of a package agreement and that the rights and freedoms--which were defended through the loss of lives--will be protected with the same sensitivity in the package agreement as well, Denktas noted that in a future agreement, the Turkish Cypriot community would maintain its cofounder rights in independence and sovereignty, and that thus the nonalignment of the island would also be ensured.

ERKMEN INTERVIEWED ON MIDEAST RELATIONS

NC070733 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 4 Aug 80 pp 1, 9

[Exclusive interview granted by Foreign Minister Erkmen to TERCUMAN correspondent in Ankara Behcet Akdogan--date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: What are your views on our general foreign policy position and on the subject of Jerusalem?

Answer: Our foreign policy has not changed. No new developments have occurred. Naturally, foreign policy has entered a very active period. Problems are arising in all the world's trouble spots. The latest such event is the question of Jerusalem. The Israeli parliament has enacted a law proclaiming Jerusalem its capital. This action is unjust, inappropriate and useless. It is unjust because the historical character of Jerusalem has led it to be known as the sacred seat of three religions.

The unilateral alteration of this status has created a situation which has grieved not only Muslims but also Christians, who do not approve of this change. Moreover, Jerusalem has been known as Islamic land. During the days of the Ottoman Empire, it was a holy land open to all religions. That is why we attach great importance to Jerusalem preserving this identity. We wish this city to be accessible to members of all religions who wish to go and pray there. But we see that Israel is unilaterally engaged in erasing the Islamic character of the city.

The reaction of the Islamic countries is justified. Reaction has come not only from the Islamic states but also from many other parts of the world. Not one country in the world has consented to the coversion of Jerusalem into Israel's capital. The change in the status of Jerusalem will eventually mean annexing it to the State of Israel. It is impossible to accept this annexation as legal. This event has created an unlawful situation. Enactment of a law by the Israeli parliament cannot determine Jerusalem's status or legitimize it. A law that ignores international law and the established norms cannot create a new legal situation. On the contrary, it creates an illegal situation.

Question: Could this situation lead to the severance of diplomatic relations with Israel?

Answer: The severance of diplomatic relations is a separate matter. We will have to examine that too. In fact, that is what we are doing. We have recalled our charge d'affaires. We want to know how and why the Israeli authorities and the parliament have resorted to such flagrant illegality.

The most extreme action we could take on Jerusalem would be to sever relations. We may go through other stages before we reach that.

Question: What is the status of our relations with Iran and Iraq?

Answer: There are no new developments in our relations with Iran, relations are steady. Our economic and political relations with that country are normal. Apart from the detention of a Turkish journalist the other day, there has been no friction between Turkey and Iran. Our relations are functioning smoothly.

As far as Iraq is concerned, you know that we are having some problems, but we are not responsible for the creation of these problems. Our bone of contention with Iraq is the murder of 10 Turks. It is our duty to protect their rights. [paragraph continues]

We are looking for a solution of the matter through legal and diplomatic methods. Our public is very concerned with the treatment being meted out to our kinsmen in Iraq. It is impossible for a democratic government not to take notice of this. We do not intend to interfere with the internal affairs of Iraq, but this does not deter us from looking at the matter from a humanistic point of view. The Iraqi administrators consider our concern as interference. We believe that this view is unjustified. We must try to understand each other. Since we are neighbors, we must frankly discuss our differences at the highest level if we wish to develop our relations on a neighborly basis.

Question: Is it true that we are going to recall our ambassador in Baghdad?

Answer: No. We have made no such decision. He has been in Turkey on vacation and I have asked him to see me for consultations. I would do the same had he not been on vacation. But we have not recalled him from Baghdad specifically.

Question: What is the position of the Turks in Western Thrace? There are reports that oppressive measures have been intensified. What is the current situation in Rhodes?

Answer: The Rhodes incidents were quite unexpected. The attitude of the Greek Government toward these incidents has been normal. We make no charges against them. I consider the Greek Government's approach normal and friendly. It is not easy to say the same thing about events in Western Thrace. We want to see the implementation of the status defined in the Lausanne Treaty on Greek citizens of Turkish origin. We want them to enjoy the rights enjoyed by other Greek compatriots. We do not ask for privileges for them.

STATE MINISTER EREN APPOINTED INTERIOR MINISTER

TA051036 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 5 Aug 80

[Excerpt] State Minister Orhan Eren has been appointed interior minister. The office of interior minister had been vacant for some time following the resignation of Mustafa Gulcugil. The decision on the appointment of Eren as interior minister was published in the official gazette today. It was also decided that State Minister Koksal Toptan will be in charge of the State Ministry vacated by Eren.

RPP SUBMITS INTERPELLATION AGAINST FINANCE MINISTER

TA061201 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] The interpellation against Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin prepared by the administrative councils of the RPP National Assembly and Senate groups has been submitted to the National Assembly chairmanship. The interpellation, signed by RPP Secretary General and Konya Deputy Mustafa Ustundag and 136 of his colleagues, states that the archaic economic model implemented by the government exacerbates the economic crisis. Noting that the people are thus condemned to unemployment and poverty, the interpellation points out that investments in the public and private sector have, to a great extent, stopped. The interpellation adds that payments to producers are intentionally being delayed in accordance with the government's economic policy, and that the 3-year agreement signed with the IMF is tantamount to consenting to a foreign-guided economy. Noting that the state has exhausted its economic efficiency, that the prices of basic goods are no longer being controlled, and that, as a result, the country is being dragged into a chaotic economy in which the weak are oppressed by the strong, the interpellation says: This course of events, which encourages the escalation of terror and which might bring the existing economic and social crises to the point of explosion, will cause irreversible damage in our economy.

FRANCE

FRANCOIS-PONCET DENIES BANI-SADR CHARGES

NC061211 Paris AFP in English 1203 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] Paris, Aug 6 (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet today denied Iranian allegations yesterday that subversives ran training camps in France to prepare for a coup against the Tehran regime. Speaking at the close of a regular cabinet meeting today, Mr. Francois-Poncet said accusations made on French television by Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr were "totally without foundation". He added that the government would not tolerate such camps, whoever they might be used by.

Meanwhile Paris-based opponents of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeyni's regime today described the charges as "absurd", if only because of legal and technical barriers. The Free Iran Movement, organized by the late shah's niece Princess Azadeh Shafik, and supporters of former Premier Shahpur Bakhtiar, who recently survived an assassination attempt in Paris, said today that their activities were limited to propaganda, to rally Iranians to their cause.

REPUBLIC OF IRELAND

HAUGHEY CONDEMNS U.S. SUPPORT FOR PROVISIONAL IRA

LD271336 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1228 GMT 27 Jul 80

[Text] The prime minister of the Irish Republic, Mr Charles Haughey, today condemned the activities of Irish-American organisations widely believed to be actively supporting the Provisional IRA.

Mr Haughey was responding to recent sharp criticism by the leaders of the opposition parties, Fine Gael, and Labour, who accused him of being ambivalent on the issue and refusing publicly to name the organisations--Noraid, the Irish National Caucus, and Congressman Mario Biaggi's ad hoc committee.

Mr Haughey said: "There is clear and conclusive evidence available to the government here, from security and other sources, that Noraid has provided support for the campaign of violence and indeed direct assistance in its pursuit. On the basis of these activities it stands condemned and I appeal to all in America who have the interests of Ireland at heart not to give this body any support, financial or moral.

"The evidence available to us also of the associations that exist between Noraid and the Irish National Caucus cast grave suspicion on the latter organisation. That is not to say there are not among the members of that body or its supporters many fine people who are not aware of its undesirable associations.

"It is important that they should be aware of the realities."

Mr Haughey, who did not specifically name Congressman Biaggi, said that the situation in Ireland today was such that no individual, "whether private citizen or elected member of Congress should, by any statement or association, lend support to those whose actions serve only to delay Irish unity." He added: "I say now to all supporters of the bodies I have mentioned that they should carefully consider whether the cause they profess to serve would not now best be served by uniting in firm support of the policy of the Irish Government, which is directed towards bringing about the unity and prosperity of the Irish people."

LE SOIR: GOVERNMENT INDECISION UNDERMINES NATO UNITY

LI071017 Brussels LE SOIR in French 1 Aug 80 p 3

[Y.B. commentary: "Government Alliance Against Atlantic Alliance"]

[Text] The Belgian Government has once again preferred, by its indecision, to maintain ambiguity in its own ranks and in the Atlantic alliance rather than run the political risk of upsetting some majority party. Our political strategists are giving absolute priority to maintaining government unity until the vote on the budget law and the institution reform. The threats made by [Flemish] Socialist Party President Van Miert who thinks "there can be no question of forcing a decision on the missiles' deployment" and the grumblings of [French-Speaking] Socialist Party leaders who, under pressure from their grassroots, do not intend to take a back seat, have prevailed over the opposite demands from some Liberals and Social Christians.

Nobody, however, has threatened to resign. The Socialists would probably not have left the majority if an even-handed approach had enabled Belgium to take advantage of the vacation and rejoin Atlantic circles without too much fuss. However, the rules of the Belgian game of indecision mean that remaining static is better than movement.

This is the case despite the fact that everybody admits that on this issue our international position has been particularly undermined. This is especially true of Foreign Minister Nothomb, who was the first to tell LE SOIR on 12 June: "To have a say, we must be a serious partner if our opinion is to be taken into account."

This is the case even if we undermine NATO's position by revealing differences of opinion within the alliance at a time when it ought to be displaying a united front in difficult negotiations with the East. Not to mention the fact that the "Belgian virus," as it is called in Atlantic circles, is likely to infect other partners.

This is the case, finally, even if all sides concerned, including those who are trying to win over their clientele by tending their pacifist image, finally rally to the decisions agreed within the alliance, since none of the snipers, even the most troublesome such as Mr Van Miert and Mr Tobback, intend to call our NATO membership into question.

When, after the German and U.S. elections, the time comes for negotiations with Moscow, the only option open to us will be to follow the Atlantic group which shares our opinion on deploying U.S. missiles in Europe to counter the Soviet SS-20 missiles already deployed only if East-West negotiations fail.

Hence the Belgian Government's hesitation waltz can only be seen in one light: as an internal political test of strength. For some the missiles are only a point to which they could resort in order to leave the majority in the fall, and for others they are a good lever for getting rid of an annoying partner when the support of its deputies is no longer needed.

What about our credibility abroad? What about our possible influence? What about the ill-considered dangers we are posing to our allies in a dangerous period? These are merely concerns of diplomats anxious for esteem, is the disdainful reply.

This is a curiously irresponsible and narrow attitude on the part of a government which, on its formation, proclaimed that it was the last hope of salvation for the country but whose concern for survival has gradually become its main objective. In such a fellowship it is hardly surprising to see Mr Nothomb abandoning, without any resistance, all the inclinations he had shown on taking over the Foreign Ministry.

Wasn't it he who told us, with regard to NATO: "Any political alliance should be handled with care." The only alliance which the Belgian foreign minister seems to want to preserve is that of the current government majority.

EXPORTS TO IRAN SOAR IN FIRST QUARTER OF 1980

LD040911 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 26 Jul 80 p 9

[Own correspondent report: "Dutch Exports to Iran Increase Steeply"]

[Excerpts] The Hague, 26 July--Dutch exports to Iran in the first quarter of this year were around five times higher than in the corresponding period of 1979. Exports to Iran were even higher than in the first quarter of 1978 before the Iranian revolution. This is revealed in figures published by the economic information service.

In the first quarter of 1978 the Netherlands exported goods worth 187 million guilders to Iran. One year later that had fallen to only 46 million guilders, but this year exports to Iran shot up again to 246 million guilders. Exports consist mainly of food products (butter, dried milk, eggs, margarine, edible fats, vegetable and animal oils) and industrial products such as machines, electrical goods, transport equipment for ships, yarn, textiles, nonferrous metals and chemical products.

In the first quarter of 1980 the EC economic boycott against Iran was not in force. The Dutch sanctions only came into force on 28 May. This boycott is intended to exert pressure on the government in Iran to release the U.S. hostages.

SCHMIDT ON INTERNATIONAL ROLE, TIES WITH U.S., DOMESTIC ISSUES

OW070920 Cologne KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER in German 7 Aug 80 pp 3-5

[Hans Schmitz and Hans Werner Kettenbach interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at the chancellor's vacation resort on Lake Brahmsee--date of interview not given]

[Text] Question: Mr Chancellor, your predecessor Ludwig Erhard once said in the sixties: "We are somebody again." At the time this was strong medicine. But hasn't the weight of the Federal Republic meanwhile increased so much, in fact, that it cannot help but exercise an independent, perhaps even leading, role?

Schmidt: The weight of our state indeed has very much increased since Ludwig Erhard's government. Essentially this is attributable to two factors which took effect in the late sixties and early seventies. The first factor was the self-liberation of the Federal Republic of Germany's foreign policy through the policy of renunciation of force, negotiations, and treaties with the states of Eastern Europe. Though it was not the essential purpose of Ostpolitik but one of its results, Ostpolitik earned us a much greater measure of freedom of action in foreign policy.

The second factor is inherent in the economic and currency policy success of the Federal Republic of Germany. From 1969 on we have seen a constant increase in the international weight of the German mark which, next to the Swiss franc, today is the world's strongest currency. And the Federal Republic of Germany has the world's greatest foreign exchange reserves, and it is second in the world with regard to the gold reserves. Thus viewed from this angle alone it wields weight in the international concert, a weight which exceeds the weight of the others, with the exception of the United States.

Question: This growth probably is not registered with undivided joy among all in the circle of our neighbors and allies.

Schmidt: On the whole, this increase in weight is not solely pleasant. Surely it is a service not only to Europe but also toward the entire world if, under joint French-German leadership, a European currency system is set up which is working well and which has a stabilizing, calming effect on the currency turbulences of the whole Western world.

But vice versa: It is not particularly pleasant if you have to play a leading role ultimately in an issue such as the so-called closure of the arms gap after the Soviet advance armament in the field of medium-range weapons.

Question: You are declaring this leading role as a necessity and also as a claim with considerable sureness?

Schmidt: Let me explain this word leading role, lest it sound a bit arrogant and presumptuous. The double decision of the North Atlantic Pact in December 1979 could not have been achieved at all without the Federal Republic of Germany. I myself was the one who, in 1977, first drew the attention of the Western world to the problem which at the time was not received in a very friendly way by the Americans. And when a year and half later the Americans not only recognized the problem as existent but also put up a solution for debate, it was again decisive that the Federal Republic of Germany accepted this two-part agreement--closure of the arms gap and offer of negotiations. Had we rejected it the approval by Holland, Belgium, and Italy surely would have been totally out of the question. This shows the gain in weight....

Question: But also the risk.

Schmidt: I was just going to say that. The risk, for instance, of being envied. This is why it is always very important to me to emphasize that we are not a world power nor wish to become one, but that we are a power of medium category. And even today, with respect to our freedom of action, we differ very much from the two West European partners, France and England.

Just take a look at Berlin: We depend on the will for the fulfillment of the guarantees which France and England, jointly with the United States, have given for Berlin. Look at the field of nuclear armament: France and England are nuclear powers, we are not, nor do we want to, or are allowed to, become such a power. I am emphasizing this so expressly not only to avoid conveying to the Germans the wrong idea about their world role but also for the sake of presenting our neighbors in the west of Europe from getting any bellyache over a German role that might grow too big.

Question: But it cannot be denied that in the field of international currency and finance policy, for example, the Federal Republic is being pushed into this leading role alone because of its economic weight.

Schmidt: Not only because of its weight but also because of its success.

Question: Be that as it may. You have already mentioned that in this connection we always run up against limits, for instance Berlin; the allied reservations and everything that goes with them; defense, which we cannot manage without the United States. The leading role plunges us into a conflict with the United States--as shown by the past several months' developments--which we, on the other hand, urgently need as our guarantee power. Is this not a conflict which inevitably will dominate the next few years, above all if we take the latest U.S. domestic developments into account?

Schmidt: I would like to call this a difference in interests. The word conflict sounds too big to me. The next stage then would be armed conflict. No: It goes without saying that differences of interests always occur in an alliance. Formerly for the Germany, for the Federal Government of the fifties, it nearly was a foregone conclusion to entrust themselves to U.S. leadership in any issue.

For the first time, but only temporarily, this came into question by Adenauer's conflict with the then incumbent President Eisenhower over the so-called Radford Plan. It became plain for a second time in connection with the U.S. project of a multinational nuclear fleet, and for the third time in connection with the so-called nonproliferation treaty in the Kissinger era, a treaty which was intended to prevent the have-nots of the world from gaining access to the atom bomb and to the hydrogen bomb. Chancellor Kissinger was against Germany submitting to such a commitment while I, by the way, was for it at the time, as were Willy Brandt and Herbert Wehner.

But these are three older examples. There are indefinitely more of them in the seventies. To the degree our weight has increased we are not compelled to consider correct on principle whatever the United States of America on its part feels expedient on the first try.

Question: For example, in the case of the utilization and the export of civilian nuclear industry.

Schmidt: This is correct; we held our own in that respect. Granted, we took the admonitions of the Americans seriously, but we deemed our own employment interests more important.

Today the relationship between the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany is different from what it was 15 or 20 years ago, or even 25 years ago. At the time we had been a dependent client, today we have become a weighty partner of the United States in very, very many respects.

This qualitatively changed relationship is being misunderstood by some people in Germany as a hostility toward America; that is nonsense. This is destructive nonsense. These two states will remain dependent on each other also in the eighties, the United States and Germany, I mean, for Germany is one of the most important allies of the United States, and to us the United States is the most important ally.

Naturally the two continue to wield different weight. The economy of the United States is three or four times greater than ours. The United States is the great Western nuclear strategic power. But both must grow accustomed to the fact that they, though different in weight, stick together as actual partners and not just as nominal partners with one seeing himself as the superior and the other as the client.

Question: Has this foreign policy liberation through Ostpolitik not made the Federal Republic realize more clearly its position in the middle? We do not want to risk this gain lightly. So is the Federal Republic more than previously forced to perform a tightrope walk? What we mean is: Does the Federal Republic, for the sake of national interests, not have to be more reserved toward the East while balancing things toward the West, such as became evident in the quarrel over the Olympic boycott?

Schmidt: I do not want to discuss this any further because the Olympic games are over and all that soon will be part of history. Of what you have said, however, two things remain correct also for the future:

First the Federal Republic of Germany quite consciously pursues a policy of balance, its own weight in the Western scales being indispensable for maintaining the balance toward the Eastern scales.

But second, our state, or my government, seek to bring about detente on the basis of this military balance, this political balance, to bring about limited cooperation and, at any rate, alleviation for the people in the East and West.

Question: To what extent does the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan spell danger to the advantages gained, and can such a danger always emanate from the Soviets alone?

Schmidt: Naturally we endeavor to prevent these advantages from being surrendered carelessly. They can be jeopardized from the Soviet Union, the military intervention in Afghanistan constitutes such jeopardy, no doubt a highly serious jeopardy. But depending on the manner in which the West reacts to steps by the East, the West, too, might contribute to the jeopardy of the results attained; and so it may happen that full conformity of views will prevail from the outset in the West in individual, concrete points. But to the extent problems emerge in the future through the two world powers, the respective ally of the Soviet Union or the United States in each individual case will find himself facing the question whether he can support the policy causing concern, to what extent he should, or would be allowed to try to counteract it.

Question: Mr Chancellor, in following up your idea a situation becomes conceivable at least theoretically in which you might say: At this point we cannot follow any longer no matter what the consequences. But has the European option already consolidated to a point where it could develop on a medium-term or long-term basis as a realistic alternative along the line of independence and complete political autonomy vis-a-vis the United States?

Schmidt: As far as I am concerned this is expressing it a bit too sharply theoretically, and much too exaggerated. In the nuclear strategic respect, for example, Europe for the foreseeable future does not have any chance of attaining an alternative role. With respect to trade policy, to currency policy, this is quite conceivable.

Question: But if Western Europe at this time cannot make do without the United States in a highly decisive field, namely in the nuclear strategic field for its defense, wouldn't the consequence be bound to be remedying this nuclear strategic shortcoming, last not least in view of potential developments in the United States?

Schmidt: These are ideas that have been advanced time and again since the late fifties and in the sixties by Messrs Guttenberg, Strauss, and others. I am very reserved as far as such ideas are concerned, very much reserved indeed. I am reserved, in fact, for three reasons:

First, because a German, a German chancellor in any event, must not in any case arouse the impression that he claimed greater nuclear participation on the part of the Federal Republic of Germany; he may neither arouse such an impression nor really do it.

Second, because even a combination of the two nuclear powers, France and England, by their strategic weight cannot in the foreseeable future offer any alternative to the strategic weight of the United States of America, namely as a counterweight to the Soviet Union.

And in the third place, I am also skeptical toward these trains of thought by Guttenberg and Strauss, because the other West European states required for this end do not have any inclination whatever to go along with that, out of their own individual interests.

Question: But this means that we will inevitably remain tied to the development of U.S. policy...

Schmidt: Not only we but all of Europe. This does not hold true just for us Germans. This holds true for all of Western Europe and, by the way, also to Poland and, if necessary, also for the Russians.

Question: That we, unconditionally, at any rate....

Schmidt: No, the expression unconditionally is going much too far, as far as I am concerned. Nothing in the world is unconditional. Only death is unconditional. Death comes, and you can do as much philosophizing about it as you wish--all of us will die. There are not many things to which you are surrendered unconditionally. You cannot say that you will go along unconditionally with any mistake of your friend or partner--this is wrong. This is a wrong way of putting it.

On the other hand I am against such phrasing because this way of phrasing suggests that the United States of America might pursue a dangerous policy which might even be mortally dangerous to us, a policy which we then would have to follow unconditionally. There is no reason whatever to think anything of the sort.

The people's unrest in the United States after Vietnam and after Watergate is only too understandable. And at the moment it has been a bit amplified by an election campaign situation. But there is no call at all for concluding from this situation that the United States might pursue an irresponsible policy in the next 10 years.

Question: And you would say this also regardless of the outcome of the 4 November elections?

Schmidt: I am talking regardless of who is the prospective president.

Question: You have brought back with you from Moscow a proposal with which, to go by what the newspapers are saying now, nothing is happening. We no longer hear anything about it.

Schmidt: I am an enthusiastic newspaper reader who spends about 2 hours daily reading the most important newspapers of Germany and the world. Nevertheless, I must warn everybody against believing that what the newspapers carry is a deeply fathomed reflection of the actual situation in the world. The truth is that the Soviet proposal will definitely be answered by the West with ideas of its own. Realistically one cannot very well visualize, either, that the dialogue between the two nuclear powers might get started prior to the decision of the U.S. constituency.

But let me add a remark at this point: This Soviet proposal, made under the impression of an important Western interlocutor, namely, the West German Government chief who has been endeavoring jointly with his French partner and friend Giscard d'Estaing to put an end to the phase of lack of dialogue between Washington and Moscow, was not a profound Soviet concession; in reality the Soviet Union merely corrected something which it had done last winter, namely declaring that it will not be prepared at all to negotiate on medium-range weapons. This is what it corrected. The world continues to be in high tension. The Afghanistan crisis, the crisis on the Persian Gulf, the Palestinian crisis, the worry of a great arms race between America and the Soviet Union: All these dangers continue to exist. To that extend the present world situation has not become fundamentally more peaceful.

Question: So where is the difference between the situation prior to, and after, your visit to Moscow?

Schmidt: The only really significant difference is that both world powers at the time were not talking with each other anymore, and Giscard d'Estaing and I persuaded them to talk with each other again. This I do consider an important virtue and this indirectly tends to confirm a question which you raised 10 minutes ago: Here, two European states, namely, France and Germany contributed to preventing a mistake which the two world powers were about to commit in their relationship with each other.

Question: Mr Chancellor, in 1969 the social-liberal coalition was praised because it at long last made good the alliance between the bourgeoisie and the workers which had been concluded earlier in other states. Can such an idea still serve as a basis for a coalition today? Has it not become obsolete long ago?

Schmidt: After all, this was not the only motive for the social-liberal coalition. But among the motives, for example those of foreign policy and of policy on Germany, it surely was an important one. As far into the future as I can foresee I consider the participation of the workers, the working people, in politics, in the economy, a sine qua non condition for the sake of preserving social peace in our country. This means the following: The role of the enterprise councils, the trade union, the enterprise constitution and the plant constitution, of codetermination, the role of the wage-rate contracts, of social policy based on wage-rate contracts; social policy based on legislation--in my concept all this must not be diminished in any way, in the future as well if social peace is to be preserved.

There are differences of opinion indeed in all these fields between the two partners, the SPD and the FDP; partially these involve just nuances, partially these are very clear differences of opinion. But on the whole, I think, there is no doubt on either side about the necessity to maintain social peace.

Question: You arouse the impression here that social peace would be in danger in the event of a government formed by the CDU/CSU. How do you propose to justify that?

Schmidt: The other great party, the CDU/CSU, today presents itself in very unclear contours in the field of social balance. I cannot help but doubt that the Bavarian minister-president who currently is the chancellor candidate of the Union parties has a close relationship with organized labor. The Union parties are ultimately inclined to overemphasize the interests of the so-called entrepreneurs, whatever they understand by that specifically. Ultimately they are rather inclined to pursue a paternal social policy, a social policy determined from on high, than to muster understanding for the necessity of social partnership. And this is why I do believe that the social-liberal coalition in this field has a task to perform for the next 4 years which others cannot cope with and fulfill.

Question: But, Mr Chancellor, why a social-liberal coalition in that case? If you emphasize so much the necessity for advocating the interests of organized labor, the question arises whether what you deem necessary here cannot be accomplished just as well, if not better by an absolute majority of the SPD.

Schmidt: Yes, it could do that, no doubt about it. Only this, too, is such a summer product of the 1980 election campaign year. No real chance for it exists. Should the Social Democrats on 5 October stand where the CDU/CSU ended up in 1976, namely at a rating of 48.5 percent, and should the CDU/CSU stand where the SPD was in 1976, namely at a rating of 42.5 percent, then this would involve a swing of 12 percentage points--an unprecedented landslide, such as has never happened since the establishment of our state. And even this 48.5 percent did not earn Helmut Kohl a majority in 1976.

Hence the landslide would have to be even greater. I believe a landslide to be unrealistic. The motivation for such theories, however, is quite clear: There are some people who would like to make voters afraid of an absolute Social Democratic majority. From their angle I can understand this very well. Others would like to let the FDP have votes by arguing that "what matters is to prevent the Social Democratic majority." This, too, I understand very well. Only I think all these are summer pipe dreams. I assume that in the next 4 years too Germany will be governed by a majority of the social-liberal coalition. This seems to me to be urgently commanded for domestic reasons, too, for reasons of social balance.

Question: But this does not change anything in the appearance that the relationship which the economics minister of your government has with the trade unions does not essentially differ from the way you just described it for the Union.

Schmidt: This is true about the appearance. Let me make two remarks in this connection: To begin with Graf Lambsdorff in an election campaign has the mission of getting voters away from the CDU and the CSU and not from the Social Democrats. This task that he is pursuing is very correctly understood. Secondly, these summer skirmishes must not blur our vision to the point where we fail to see that the general codetermination law of 1976 had been worked out jointly by the SPD and the FDP and that it did not meet with the full approval of the CDU/CSU.

Question: Mr Chancellor, does it soothe your mind that the landslide you referred to is such an unrealistic idea? What we wonder is this: Would you be concerned in the event of an absolute SPD majority? After all, this absolute majority would also mean that the best wing of your party probably would appear strongly.

Schmidt: If it were possible during my term as a chancellor to lead the German Social Democracy to an absolute majority, then this would in any case go down in the annals of history, and my share in it surely would not be written in small letters. This cannot scare me, it would be an enticing prospect. But as I said, we have not reached that point yet.

Question: Will it not be necessary in the next legislative period to make decisions which nobody is mentioning now? For instance, in the case of state indebtedness, the pension reform, and ultimately also with respect to the market economy?

Schmidt: Let me pick out one thing, the market economy. In Germany the market economy has not been in danger in the 11 years of social-liberal coalition. It is working better in Germany than in nearly all the other West European states. Anyone doubting that should please give me proof to the contrary. It is working because the German trade unions have brought pressure to bear on the German enterprises each year anew by their wage and worktime policies which are moderate on the one hand and by their particularly successful sense of perspective on the other. They put them under wage-cost pressuress each year. And we, being socio-political lawmakers, could not spare them the wage-cost pressure.

And it works, secondly, because the trade unions have realized, of course, that the enterprises on the whole have successfully dodged again this yearly increasing cost pressure by means of rationalization and modernization at large and thus through greater company performance. This means that they have strengthened their competitive position from one year to the next not only on the domestic market but also in all the world.

In 1969 we paid DM4 for one dollar; at present we pay DM1.76 or DM1.73. And yet German exports have seen a fantastic upward surge throughout the world, last but not least because the trade unions allowed rationalization, because the moderate wage policy on the whole made it possible to pursue a policy of monetary and fiscal stability in the interior of the country. The German export product has not been burdened with the same price hike from one year to the next as has the export product of neighbor country X, Y, or Z.

All this would not have been possible anyway had not each individual enterprise had the freedom of seeking ways and means of not only holding up its exports but of even enhancing them. The market economy in Germany is not in jeopardy.

Question: Did you not think, Mr Chancellor, that as a result of the energy crisis and the necessity for austerity the element of dirigisme might gain ground?

Schmidt: No, I do not think so. I see elements of dirigisme appearing more evidently in other states for reasons of energy policy than, say, in our country. I really do not think so.

But I would like to discuss the financial economic aspect of the matter. To begin with it is absolutely normal that the state contracts credits for its investments. It is just as normal as if an industrial enterprise building a new, large installation obtains credits for that purpose and later services these credits, that is repays them and pays the interest on them from the proceeds of what this new installation produces. The credit account of the German companies has immensely increased in the course of the past 10 years, in the course of the past 20 to 30 years. The bigger the company grows the greater become the credits which the company obtains; this is absolutely normal.

And so this applies to the state. It is one of the peculiarities of this election summer of 1980 that two German minister-presidents, namely Messrs Strauss and Stoltenberg, attack this principle. The two, mind you, being minister-presidents of laender which receive funds from other laender under the system of financial equalization and receive besides each year from the Federal Government hundreds of millions in complementary allotments.

What is imperative each year is considering carefully the question: How much can I afford next year in taking up credits, that is to say in fiscal burdens for the purpose of servicing my credits? And it is legitimate to debate the issue.

Question: The Germans, being once bitten and hence twice shy, are particularly suspicious whenever the term state indebtedness crops up. It is easy to associate with it the other term, that of state bankruptcy.

Schmidt: Well, I must draw attention to the fact that the Federal Republic of Germany in this respect is in one of the best situations throughout the Western world. Only Switzerland is in a similarly fortunate position. In Switzerland as well as in the Federal Republic of Germany the debt currently amounts to about 30 percent of the gross national product [GNP] of just one year. In the United States it amounts to more than 50 percent of the GNP, in England and Italy to 60 percent of the GNP a year. Mind you, all these are states having higher interest rates than the Federal Republic of Germany. We are even better off than the German Imperial Reich was at the time of Wilhelm II. In the last prewar years, 1913, the total public budget debt in the German Reich came to 62 percent of the gross national product of that time.

These few figures which I just quoted to you probably will surprise many readers. I hope that they will also surprise some economic editors on the German newspaper scene so that they will realize at long last what foolishness they fell for in the course of the past few weeks and months when they printed everything that was served to them from Kiel or Munich.

Question: Mr Chancellor, we believe that what you are saying actually is not so controversial. If we understand the serious discussion correctly it converges to the question of whether the unexpectedly long phase of a solid economic cycle which we experienced has been adequately utilized for mitigating state indebtedness.

Schmidt: First of all, borrowing by the federal budget in 1979, last year, was greater than the finance minister and I had wanted it to be. But there was an important international reason for it, namely the consensus of all participants in the world economic summit which took place in Bonn in 1978. We were exposed to considerable pressure by opinion on our partners part. It was the express desire, advanced in these partners' own interest, that we should do more state borrowing and give the world economy as a whole some impetus through increased German demand on the basis of expenditures which we would additionally finance through this borrowing. We finally yielded to this desire in a magnitude of 1 percent of the 1979 GNP.

In return we secured other concessions, especially on the part of the Americans and Canadians, in the field of energy policy. So this did not happen because the Federal Government failed to see the problem of increasing state borrowing but because of international considerations. And it has been honored internationally, too.

The tax cut taking effect on 1 January 1981 by virtue of adopted law will create demand options in the hands of the taxpayers worth more than DM10 billion in 1981 already. Consequently an economic promotion program is not envisaged at this time. Besides, I must point out once again that the net borrowing requirement of the Federal Government for 1980 has been planned at DM24 billion. At the very moment we are talking here and when interest rates are decreasing we have actually borrowed DM22 billion. This goes to show how easily and effortlessly it could be done. During the next 6 months, in the second half of 1980, all of DM2 billion net borrowing will be done. I hope that those two figures too will reduce the excitment to a healthy level.

We will apply some very strict yardsticks to the 1981 federal budget as far as the borrowing goes. The currently foreseeable course of the economic cycle will allow us to do this too. Still, I would like to add by way of a footnote that nobody really can forecast exactly the degree of the U.S. recession and its effect on the economic development of Europe and Japan.

Question: Mr Chancellor, the election chances of this coalition are largely determined by you. This leads to the question: Do you see yourself as a candidate for this office beyond the year 1984? And perhaps this question: Since you surely are exposed to criticism sometimes in certain difficult situations and presumably also are tempted to ditch the whole business, what is it that gets you over such situations? Is it passion for politics, is it ambition, or is it the feeling of duty?

Schmidt: I believe that any normal man from time to time in his profession ends up in a situation in which he is completely fed up, as it is generally said. Some people get over this the same evening while others need time until the next morning's coffee, and still others have to go on vacation to overcome this; in my case this usually lasts for just a few hours. But it does happen. If it did not happen it would appear to me to be suspicious as it would be contrary to human nature.

But basically my answer to your question is this: The chancellor is elected for a term of 4 years. I must refuse to speculate on what will happen during the 4 years until 1984 or thereafter.

As for the motives for adhering to such a job: I believe that anybody not yet of pension age first of all has the duty, among many other duties which he has in life, to do in this profession what is asked of him.

You might call this a sense of duty, you might just as well give it a less decorative designation. But anybody having a job must live up to that job. This is true in politics, this is true on the shipyard here in the neighborhood in Kiel, and this is just as true for the newspaper in Cologne. It is inherent in human nature to live up to one's duty well and to receive recognition for it as well.

You might call this ambition, if you wish. You might also put it less spectacularly. Any human being would like to have a certain degree of recognition for what he has accomplished.

BOLIVIAN MINEWORKER DELEGATION MEETS WITH OFFICIALS

FY072008 Paris AFP in Spanish 1545 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 6 Aug (AFP)--The Foreign Ministry reported here today that the Bolivian situation after the military coup was the main subject discussed during a meeting between FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and a delegation of the Mineworkers Federation of Bolivia (FSTMB).

Victor Lopez, secretary general of the FSTMB, and the other eight members of the delegation, who were in Europe at the time of the coup, met last Monday with Egon Bahr, secretary general of the Social Democratic Party (SPD), who promised them support. According to sources close to the Bolivian diplomatic circles in Bonn, Lopez and the other members of the delegation plan to return legally to Bolivia. No date for their return has yet been established.

Luis Alberto Alipaz Alcazar, Bolivian ambassador in Bonn who resigned after the coup, will continue in his post until a replacement is appointed.

Development Ministry

LD071418 Hamburg DPA in German 1335 GMT 7 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government does not intend to break off all current development projects [few words indistinct] country because of the military putsch in Bolivia, which it has condemned. This assurance was given today by the parliamentary secretary of state in the Development Ministry, Alwin Brueck, to a delegation of the Bolivian miners' trade union headed by Secretary General Victory Lopez which is currently visiting the Federal Republic.

The ministry stated that both sides agreed that projects already begun and of immediate benefit to the Bolivian population should be continued. Given as an example is a plan for the supply of drinking water for workers' suburbs of La Paz. In Brueck's opinion canceling this project would only affect the ordinary people "while the water continues to flow in the generals' villas and in the barracks."

COOPERATION MINISTER FAVORS INCREASED AID TO PERU

FY071945 Paris AFP in Spanish 1659 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] Cologne, FRG 6 Aug (AFP)--FRG Economic Cooperation Minister Rainer Offergeld said here today that the FRG will increase its aid to the new Peruvian Government to counteract the influence of the Bolivian military junta.

Commenting on the trip he made in July to Lima, where he represented the FRG in the inaugural ceremonies for President Fernando Belaunde Terry, th FRG minister said that he believes that the new regime has a good possibility of survival since it apparently has the support of both the military and church sectors.

He added: The new administration has started to work with great enthusiasm and extremely good will.

Offergeld noted that Peru has important agricultural resources that should enable it to become an important exporter of foodstuffs. He also noted Peru's hydroelectric potential, which is still practically unexploited. Offergeld added that the exploitation of this potential would produce enough hydraulic energy to cover the needs if a country as big as the FRG.

MINISTER ON EEC BEEF SUPPLIES TO SOVIET AFGHAN TROOPS

[Text] Bonn, 8 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government has no knowledge whether the Soviet occupation troops in Afghanistan are being supplied with cheap beef from EEC stocks. This was stated by State Secretary Rohr of the Federal Food Ministry in Bonn today in response to a parliamentary question by CSU deputies Biele and Jobst.

The two deputies had drawn attention to reports that the Soviet Army in Afghanistan was being supplied with subsidized EEC beef which the USSR received via Romania. The state secretary pointed out that Romania receives both fresh and frozen beef from EEC countries in the course of normal trade relations. Export subsidies for direct deliveries of beef to the USSR were discontinued on 21 June 1980. As a result the export of beef from the EEC to the USSR has ended.

COMMENTATOR SEES U.S. MOVING TOWARD COUNTERFORCE STRATEGY

[Michel Tatu article: "Toward a Counterforce Doctrine?"]

[Text] In the strategic sphere doctrines evolve slowly and, at least as far as the United States is concerned, almost openly; the official documents issued on this question, therefore, contain few surprises, their only value being to mark a stage on an already known path. "Presidential Directive 59" is no exception to this rule. Not only was the definition of a new "method of use" for strategic weapons already underway when Mr Carter entered the White House in 1977, but it had been clear for many years that the United States, seeing the Soviet potential growing, was moving toward an increasingly selective doctrine which is less and less "countercity" and more and more "counterforce."

In other words the United States was moving away from the position of absolute deterrence by rapid escalation to extremes and coming round to the theory usually attributed to the Soviets: A superpower should have the capacity to "wage and win" a nuclear war; this is the best way of deterring the other superpower from launching such an enterprise, instead of threatening it with disproportionate and not very credible "punishment."

In fact neither Foster Dulles nor Mr McNamara ever defended their so-called "massive retaliation" and "mutually assured destruction" theories in the simplistic terms attributed to them. However, the move toward a counterforce strategy started by Mr Schlesinger under Mr Nixon's presidency has been accentuated in the past few years. Although Mr Carter said during his 1976 election campaign that he did not believe in the possibility of waging a limited nuclear war, his defense secretary sought to move in that direction from the start.

Stating in his annual defense report on 29 January that his departments had just completed a "fundamental reexamination of strategic policy," the defense secretary explained what he calls his "countervailing strategy": This includes both the idea of a response adapted to the scale of the attack and the idea of reprisals against the enemy's "assets", no longer just his cities--held in reserve for a future and, in principle, ultimate exchange--but the "military, industrial and political bases of the Soviet regime's power." In other words, he continued, "no potential enemy should cherish the illusion that he could knock out some of our nuclear forces without in turn losing essential elements of his own military and political security even if the exchange were to stop before a general destruction of cities and industry."

Similarly the Americans' hands "will not be tied" in the event of nuclear attack against the Allies; the aggressor by such an attack would expose himself to attacks on "critical targets both on his territory and that of his own allies," notably objectives "whose destruction would sap his military and political capacity to ensure the control of such vital regions as Western Europe or Japan." In substance this means communication networks, stores and shelters built for political staff, not to mention barracks and other military installations. Not only are there many possible objectives "between the enemy's missile silos and his cities," as was said in Mr Schlesinger's days, but it is principally in the intermediate categories that the new style of nuclear war will cause the most destruction.

This development has, of course, been made possible if not directly promoted by the new U.S. programs which by the end of the present decade will add 5,000 highly accurate warheads to the existing arsenal: 2,000 from the 200 MX intercontinental missiles and 3,000 carried by as many cruise missiles. The list of targets could therefore be lengthened as a result.

In addition, the appearance of the MX missiles will pose a serious threat to the "upper range" of the objectives assigned in the framework of the new counterforce strategy: the silos in which the some 1,500 Soviet intercontinental missiles are housed. These missiles represent 56 percent of the USSR's launchers, 75 percent of its warheads and 70 percent of its load capacity, while the United States only has 51 percent of its vehicles, 24 percent of its warheads and 33 percent of its load capacity on the ground in comparable conditions.

Therefore it is clear that, in response to the threat which the new Soviet missiles were posing to its ground based forces, the United States is adopting programs which go far beyond mere neutralization of the enemy threat and pose a new danger for the partner [as published]. This is how the arms race is progressing.

BOMBING LINKED WITH IRAQI NUCLEAR PROGRAM

NC061852 Paris AFP in English 1550 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Paris, Aug. 7 (AFP)--A bomb intended for a French nuclear physicist working on the reactor that is being manufactured for Iraq today slightly damaged the suburban home of a Paris bookseller of the same name.

The attack was claimed by the "Committee for the Protection of the Islamic Revolution," which was unknown to the police here and would seem to indicate Iranian sympathies if not connections.

The blast damaged a wall and broke all of the windows in the home of Jean-Jacques Graf. A message written in English was discovered in the mail box of the home.

Later, an anonymous telephone caller told AFP that the group was striking at Mr. Graf because of his involvement in the Iraqi nuclear program. Iraq and Iran have been engaged in a propaganda war as well as occasional border incidents. But Israel has also denounced French collaboration with the Iraqis and has insisted that Baghdad will never be permitted to develop atomic weapons.

According to informed sources, the Jean-Jacques Graf who was the real target of the attack is on vacation in the south of France.

PARTY LEADERS CONTINUE TO COMMENT ON BOLOGNA BOMBING

AU070845 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 7 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Rome, August 7 (ANSA)--The Italian political scene was dominated again yesterday by the Bologna bomb massacre.

Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer yesterday reiterated his view that despite the serious situation in the land and the worrisome prospects for this fall, the country was lacking any truly effective guide.

MSI [Italian Social Movement] neofascist party Secretary Giorgio Almirante, in an interview to a French press agency, said there was a terrorist center in France which operates in Italy. He cited as examples of this the presence of Franco Piperno in Paris, the escape of Marco Donat-Cattin, and the arrest in Nice of Marco Affatigato. The road to follow is in Paris, he said, and the man to look for is Stefano Delle Chiaie. Almirante believed that Delle Chiaie was hiding out in southern France.

Comments on National Leadership

[Text] Rome, August 8 (ANSA)--The Italian political scene remains firmly in the grip on the Saturday bomb blast in Bologna's railway station, which killed 79 and left nearly 200 injured, as debate is transformed into a series of increasingly bitter charges and countercharages.

In response to the Communist Party view that the country lacks truly effective leadership in this critical time, the deputy secretary of the ruling Christian Democrat Party, Vittorino Colombo, mounted a counterattack in a piece slated for publication in today's edition of the DC daily, IL POPOLO. Colombo argued that, "it was politically and morally incorrect for the Communist Party to instrumentalize this sad event for propaganda action against the government. "Making use of the dead against a government which consists of parties with a secure democratic tradition is not worthy of a party that says it accepts the methods and rules of democracy", the DC deputy secretary added in this harsh statement.

The secretary of the small opposition Social Democrat Party, Pietro Longo, lashed out yesterday at both the Christian Democrats and the Communists. Longo affirmed that the polemics surrounding the tragedy will not change the nation's political and institutional framework. According to the PSDI leader, Italy's democracy "is blocked because of a lack of any alternative and because of the impossibility for even the most limited, but significant, change in the nation's leadership". Continuing with the same line of argument, Longo declared that the ruling roles in the government and in the opposition held down by the Christian Democrats and the Communists has paralyzed the system. "This is the dual leadership which we must defeat", the party head recommended and added, "or at least reduce".

The deputy secretary of the neofascist MSI [Italian Social Movement], France Servello, stepped into debate yesterday with a statement to the effect that the nation's two big parties get on well together, especially outside the capital. "While in some political quarters, beginning with the Communist Party and the DC left, efforts are underway to exploit the Bologna tragedy to revitalize their political designs for a further enlargement of the majority to the left", Servello argued, "in the local administrations councils are being put together under a red banner".

SOCIALIST LEADER VIEWS PROPECTS FOR PS MAJORITY RULE

LD060905 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 26 Jul 80 pp 1-3 (review section)

[Pedro d'Anunciacao interview with Portuguese Socialist Party [PS] leader Vitor Constancio: "Ramalho Eanes Does Not Have Prerequisites for Organizing Political Movement"--date and place not specified]

[Excerpts] EXPRESSO: What is the state of the contacts between the PS and the president of the republic? Can General Ramalho Eanes already be regarded as the PS candidate?

Vitor Constancio: No, he cannot. The contacts have not yet been completed and agreement has not been reached on some of political matters at issue.

EXPRESSO: What are the matters on which there is no agreement as yet?

Vitor Constancio: Obviously, I am not going to disclose them to you. I might not even know some of them which have been discussed directly by Mario Soares and Ramalho Eanes.

EXPRESSO: And what are the issues on which agreement has now been reached?

Vitor Constancio: I am going to disclose nothing to you about that, either. I will merely tell you that with respect to the matter of the presidential elections, the PS stance remains that which has been publicly reaffirmed on several occasions. This means that no decision has been made.

EXPRESSO: By what time will the decision have to be made?

Vitor Constancio: I personally believe that it is desirable for the PS to choose its candidate for the presidency before the beginning of the campaign for the legislative elections, whoever the candidate.

EXPRESSO: So you want to emerge linked with the candidate in the legislative elections?

Vitor Constancio: Certainly.

EXPRESSO: Specifically, have you advocated General Ramalho Eanes' candidacy?

Vitor Constancio: The party, as you know, has not yet defined a stance on the matter. Neither have I personally.

With respect to support for an independent candidate, such as General Ramalho Eanes, I believe that it is necessary for there to be a prior political agreement to give the candidacy a political framework.

EXPRESSO: To what kind of agreement are you referring?

Vitor Constancio: I am referring to guarantees with respect to the constitutional system and its stability.

EXPRESSO: And will that agreement have to achieve a public commitment between the candidate and the party?

Vitor Constancio: I do not know what you mean by a "public commitment."

EXPRESSO: I imagine that General Ramalaho Eanes would wish to appear as a candidate independent from the political parties....

Vitor Constancio: And so he will appear. If he is a candidate, he will be a candidate independent from the parties, even if he has PS support. General Ramalho Eanes has never been a socialist, nor will he, certainly, be supported only by the PS.

The fact that there is agreement on certain matters concerning the functioning and evolution of the democratic institutions does not mean that there is total agreement on a program.

EXPRESSO: Not even a public commitment?

Vitor Constancio: Well, under these circumstances it cannot be stated that it will be a partisan candidacy, contrary to what is happening with respect to Soares Carneiro's candidacy.

EXPRESSO: If this agreement materializes, do you support Ramalho Eanes' candidacy?

Vitor Constancio: Under these conditions, yes. Otherwise, the contacts which have been taking place would be pointless.

However, this does not necessarily mean that the PS will decide to support it.

Ramalho Eanes Does Not Have Prerequisites for Political Plan

EXPRESSO: Let us now assume that General Ramalho Eanes wins the next presidential elections. As he has already served two terms, he will be unable to run again. So do you not believe that for his political survival he will seek to form a political movement of his own which will run counter to the PS blueprint?

Vitor Constancio: I believe that General Ramalho Eanes does not have the prerequisites for creating a political movement which he could lead.

EXPRESSO: Why does he not have the prerequisites?

Vitor Constancio: I believe that that will not be his plan. However, if he attempted to carry it out, he could meet with our opposition.

EXPRESSO: So you believe that that problem will not arise.

Vitor Constancio: I believe not.

EXPRESSO: Nevertheless, there are those who talk about and advocate the setting up of a movement or a political federation institutionally led by Ramalho Eanes--specifically, some reformists.

Vitor Constancio: I believe that that makes no sense. In view of his personality and his capacity as a military man, General Ramalho Eanes is not in a position to be a political leader--far less the leader of a new political movement, partly because in the present political situation that movement would have to have the participation of PS members. I believe that there would be no PS members who would be prepared to take part in such a plan.

We Will Form Government With Relative Majority

EXPRESSO: As far as I know, one of the preconditions which the PS has put to General Ramalho Eanes is the absence of presidential governments. Is that correct?

Vitor Constancio: As I told you, I am not going to disclose the contents of these talks.

EXPRESSO: Could you at least say what the PS stance is on this matter?

Vitor Constancio: With respect to this, we believe that the spirit of the constitution supports the formation of governments with a party basis.

The normal thing is for the party or coalition which has an absolute or relative parliamentary majority to form a government. A fully democratic government can be formed even on the basis of a relative majority. Consequently, in principle, governments formed on the president's initiative are anomalous and exceptional governments, which obviously could become inevitable in certain situations of political deadlock. But they can only be accepted as necessarily temporary and short-lived governments. They cannot represent permanent solutions in a democratic system, which must be based on the political parties.

EXPRESSO: Let us assume that the Democratic Alliance does not achieve an absolute majority in the next elections but that the Social Democratic Party [PSD] secures a relative majority. Since the Social Democrats have stated that they will only take responsibility for the government if the Democratic Alliance has an absolute majority, who is to form a government in that case?

Vitor Constancio: That is a problem which you should put to the PSD. The normal thing in a democracy is for the president of the republic to invite whoever secures an absolute or relative parliamentary majority to form a government.

EXPRESSO: But proceeding from the assumption that the PSD does not form a government under those conditions?

Vitor Constancio: You do not conduct politics from a distance on the basis of abstract proposals. What I can say is that the Socialist Republican Front [FRS] is prepared to shoulder government responsibilities, whether it has an absolute or a relative majority.

EXPRESSO: But you will only form a government if you have at least a relative majority?

Vitor Constancio: What I told you is that, under these conditions, we would agree to form a government.

EXPRESSO: If the PS forms a government, who will be prime minister?

Vitor Constancio: There is no decision on the matter. In principle, I believe that the normal thing is for it to be Secretary General Mario Soares.

EXPRESSO: Will the government include only the PS? will it include the other FRS forces, or even groups not belonging to the front?

Vitor Constancio: One of the aims of the FRS is to make viable the formation of a government. If the FRS, as I believe will happen, secures an absolute or relative majority, it will form a government.

Broaden Support in Social Democratic Camp

EXPRESSO: And will it not seek to broaden its basis of support, seeking an absolute majority?

Vitor Constancio: There is potentially a majority of Socialists and Social Democrats in the country which corresponds to the majority capable of governing in a stable manner, with balanced stances and with a sense of social justice. The FRS foreshadows the PS readiness to help make that majority a reality.

EXPRESSO: With whom?

Vitor Constancio: For the present the FRS is presenting itself to the electorate, seeking that relative or absolute majority.

EXPRESSO: Do you accept the possibility of an alliance with the PCP to guarantee an absolute majority, even if this does not occur at the very beginning of the legislative period?

Vitor Constancio: No.

EXPRESSO: And with the PSD?

Vitor Constancio: Such a hypothesis would never be possible with the present PSD. The PSD does not exist. It does not constitute a clearly defined political reality today. Colonized by the Social Democratic Center Party in the rightwing Tower of Babel which is the Democratic Alliance, it has no existence of its own.

The dynamics of Portuguese politics following the Democratic Alliance's electoral defeat could lead to changes in the party situation. However, I do not proceed from this hypothesis, although I acknowledge that some--a few--Social Democrats, who ingenuously believe in a change based on liberalization of the economy, still remain within the PSD and its electorate.

The truth is that in societies such as the Portuguese there are no parties which can realize the old corporative dream of a harmony of interests among the various classes and social groups. The PSD cannot be flattered by the employers' confederations and at the same time have trade union leaders' enthusiastic support. Time will clarify and elucidate this situation.

EXPRESSO: But the PS itself, through the medium of its most senior leaders, has claimed to be an interclass party, capable of developing an area of consensus among the various social classes--specifically, employers and employees.

Vitor Constancio: The PS is indeed an interclass party, but with a popular basis. That is, the basic perspective which it adopts is that of defending the working classes' interests and rights in a blueprint for social transformation which, not being collectivist, can bring together intermediate sectors of society, including skilled personnel, intellectuals and the more enlightened small and medium businessmen, which recognize the need to enhance social justice and the control of political power over large-scale private economic power. In a society full of conflicts in which there is a recognized role for private enterprise and the market, the political parties predominantly represent the interests of the working majority or those of the private businessmen.

EXPRESSO: Fine, but are you not interested at the outset in guaranteeing an absolute majority? Are you fully satisfied with a relative majority?

Vitor Constancio: Not fully. But the presupposed requirement of an absolute majority does not stem from the constitution.

Posing this requirement could lead to deadlocks in our deomcracy, in view of the parties' current electoral support. Consequently this a form of pressure on the political system and the electorate.

EXPRESSO: However, an absolute majority makes possible a government stability different from that achieved with a relative majority.

Vitor Constancio: Government stability depends on many circumstances. It depends on the government's parliamentary support; it also depends on the relations between the government and the president of the republic. It further depends on the conditions of economic and social life themselves, which, in certain situations, can lead to political crises.

It is in this light....

EXPRESSO: The PS has already had the experience of a government based on a merely relative majority. At the time it had to resort to an absolute majority.

Vitor Constancio: It is in this light, as I was telling you, that the issue of government stability should be viewed.

In my opinion, the existence of good relations between the government and the president of the republic will be as important as the existence of an absolute majority in parliament; likewise, the possibility of creating a social consensus which will guarantee minimum conditions for the functioning of the economy.

In this respect the PS is in a better position than the Democratic Alliance. We can guarantee greater social stability.

Agreement on Essentials Within FRS

EXPRESSO: Is there already an agreement within the FRS that will permit the formation of a government? Does a government already exist?

Vitor Constancio: We are at present working on drafting a detailed government program which will form the basis of our election program.

The agreements already reached provide a broad basis of consensus and of convergent viewpoints. This makes it possible to predict that the natural divergences among the various political parties could be overcome in drawing up the government program.

EXPRESSO: You mentioned the "natural divergences" among the parties comprising the front. Do these divergences permit a consensus on the various sectorial policies? I am thinking, for instance, about health, the agrarian reform and EEC membership.

Vitor Constancio: First, the FRS is an electoral coalition composed of three parties--as is the Democratic Alliance, for that matter. Obviously every party has a different program. There are therefore program divergences, as is also the case in the Democratic Alliance.

EXPRESSO: But perhaps the divergences within the Democratic Alliance are smaller.

Vitor Constancio: First and foremost, if the PSD seriously pursued its social democratic program this would not be the case.

The fact that the FRS represents in practice the convergence of a single political family; A family which seriously pursues the principles of pluralist democracy, on the one hand, and seriously pursues the socializing content of the constitution on the other.

As you know, historically the social democracy invoked by the Independent Social Democratic Association [ASDI] and democratic socialism have the same roots, the same origins and a shared guiding principle. It has therefore been possible to reach an agreement on essentials. We have drawn up a political manifesto which defines the ideological boundaries of the front, and we have reached agreement in principle on revising the constitution, which also reveals an agreement on essentials of our economic and political organization.

This means that from the outset there is a basis of consensus that will guarantee the drafting of a government program on matters such as the ones you mentioned.

EXPRESSO: Will the Union of the Left for Social Democracy [UEDS] not obstruct the EEC membership process advocated by your party?

Vitor Constancio: As far as the EEC issue is concerned, it was made clear and announced publicly when the front was presented that the UEDS will be free to defend the stances it has always upheld on this subject.

EXPRESSO: So could a government including the UEDS promote membership?

Vitor Constancio: At a government level it is obviously a different matter. A government formed by the FRS will remain loyal to our option for EEC membership. This is because it is an important issue on which both the PS, which has a clear numerical superiority within the front, and the ASDI are agreed.

But in parliament the UEDS can defend its own positions, which in this case differ.

EXPRESSO: What about the agrarian reform?

Vitor Constancio: In this regard also there is agreement on essentials. We advocate the necessary correction of all the irregular practices that have been carried out since the time of the Mota Pinto government in the implementation of the basic agrarian reform law. We also advocate the necessary definition of the land statute in the agrarian reform area so as to stabilize the property situation throughout this area.

Social Convergence Between Management and Unions

EXPRESSO: The opposition has particularly criticized the Democratic Alliance government's economic and social policy. What alternative does the FRS have to this policy? It has already been said that it intends to denationalize the indirectly nationalized companies but that, basically, it is aiming to maintain the present legislation delimiting the public and private sectors. Has an agreement been reached on this yet?

Vitor Constancio: There is a basic agreement inasmuch as forces which invoke social democracy and democratic socialism believe that economic organization must obey a principle of controlling economic power through political power and guarantee worker participation and intervention in economic life.

In this connection the public and private sector law approved by the PSD and PS in 1977 is still, we believe, a fundamental document in the structure of the rules of the economic game in Portugal.

We also consider it essential to maintain the binding nature of our economic constitution, with its openness to various ways of organizing and structuring production.

The conditions of economic life in the modern world pose problems that will demand new solutions. There is an international economic crisis, which means that production growth can no longer occur as it did in the fifties and sixties or even in the early seventies.

It is necessary now to adopt new standards, new forms of conduct, new forms of labor organization and new forms of social agreement.

EXPRESSO: You mentioned the need for social agreement. Since the PCP dominates the labor world to a large extent, you will have to reach agreement, at least indirectly (through the trade unions and the Intersindical), with the communists.

Vitor Constancio: It is not a matter of an indirect agreement with the PCP; it is a matter of promoting a dialogue between the government and both sides of industry, which is something the Democratic Alliance has never wanted to do. This dialogue must be conducted not only with the trade unions and the Intersindical but also with the General Union of Workers and the employers' federations.

EXPRESSO: Now let's talk about your party's internal problems. It has been said that relations between the Secretariat and secretary general are tense. Is this true?

Vitor Constancio: No. Relations are good. There is no political divergence between the Secretariat and the secretary general.

Changes Needed in Party Organization

EXPRESSO: Is it the Secretariat that makes important party decisions?

Vitor Constancio: Party decisions are made by the appropriate bodies as specified by the party rules.

The Secretariat has made the policy decisions demanded by the situation and by the evolution of the political situation. The steering committee makes the decisions entrusted to it by the party rules, such as drawing up lists of deputies and choosing a presidential candidate. In this regard there are no violations of party rules.

This does not mean that there are no problems in the functioning of a democratic party, such as the PS is.

The PS has been facing a growth crisis for some time. This crisis demands that we resolve the tensions between what I would call a principle of democratic legitimacy and a principle of historical legitimacy. The PS is a party that has emerged from clandestinity, is formed of a group of persons who actively participated in the resistance to the dictatorship and has grown rapidly since 25 April, which do not have this problem.

In this connection it is natural for certain tensions to emerge between this principle of historical legitimacy and the principle of democratic legitimacy. I do not believe they are grave or insoluble problems.

SUAREZ REVIEWS TALKS WITH VENEZUELAN PRESIDENT

LD041341 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 30 Jul 80 p 4

[EFE report: "'I Depart Very Hopeful,' Says Spanish Head of Government"]

[Text] Lima, 29 July--Prime Minister Suarez stated at 0930, following the 1-hour meeting he held with Venezuelan President Herrera Campins, that he departed "very hopeful."

The Spanish prime minister said that this was a meeting like those held in the past during which it was possible to talk in depth--"yesterday and the day before yesterday we were able to meet only briefly"--and during which the areas of tension existing in the world were examined from the viewpoint of international strategy. "We exchanged views on how we see the situation in these areas of conflict." "We also analyzed," he added, "all the topics concerning the Andean Pact, both economic and political interests, from the viewpoint of the considerable experience which President Herrera Campins has of all the Latin American and European countries."

With respect to bilateral relations Mr Suarez emphasized that "we can clearly and emphatically say that the understanding between the two governments is fully satisfactory and that the projects which we have under way are in a reasonably good state. I depart very hopeful from this meeting, and I have reaffirmed once more the close friendship which exists, not only between Herrera Campins and myself, but also between the two governments and the parties supporting these governments."

As far as the economic contacts between Spain and Venezuela are concerned, Suarez said: "I have spoken of the projects which we have under way through Spanish-Venezuelan joint enterprises. I have already said that they are proceeding reasonably well. Some of the projects are still in the bidding process, which ends 31 October, but the prospects are promising."

MINISTER HOPES U.S. WILL 'PAY PART OF BILL' FOR EEC ENTRY

LD072342 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 7 Aug 80

[Text] The minister for relations with EEC, Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo, said tonight on the Spanish national radio program "Horizon Europe": I hope that U.S. support for Spanish entry into the EEC will not stay at the level of rhetoric. On the day we join, a Spanish worker will be no different from a French, English or German worker. It will be the central government and the Madrid parliament who will guarantee the execution in Spain of policies worked out in Brussels.

I hope that the good sense of the United States, Mr Calvo Sotelo added, in its support for Spain's entry into the Community which is desirable to the extent that it entails consolidation of Spain's situation, will not be merely rhetorical support when the time comes for the United States to pay part of the bill for this operation. The sums involved will be relatively small, and the operation itself quite small, but there will be no possible comparison with the political advantages of Spanish entry.

BELIZE DELEGATION FEARS UK AGREEMENT WITH GUATEMALA

LD071235 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 7 Aug 80 p 4

[Report by diplomatic correspondent David Adamson: "Rushed Deal on Belize Feared"]

[Excerpt] The leading members of the opposition in the Belize Parliament have expressed anxiety during talks in London over the British Government's apparent determination to rush through an agreement with Guatemala.

They believe that unless the agreement is acceptable to the people of Belize and the conditions are right for independence, there will be a danger of Cuban and communist involvement in the affairs of the new country.

Lord Carrington has been discussing the colony's future during his Latin American tour and Mr Nicholas Ridley, the Foreign Office minister responsible for the region, is due to visit Guatemala at the end of this week.

It is generally accepted that the negotiations cover the possible cessation of a strip of Belizian territory in the south and an agreement imposing some limits on Belize in defence matters and foreign affairs.

In return, Guatemala would recognize Belize's sovereignty and drop claims to its territory.

The opposition, United Democratic Party, which has five of the 18 seats in the Belize Parliament, has sent its three leading members to London to launch what they call "operation rescue." They are Dr Theodore Aranda, leader of the opposition, Mr Philip Goldson, deputy leader, and Senator Manuel Esquivel, party chairman.

Many of their fears focus on alleged communist influence in the ruling People's United Party (PUP) and the colony's main trade union, the United General Workers Union.

The delegation claims that the union received some Soviet arms last year in a consignment of aid for hurricane victims.

SPOKESMAN REFUSES TO COMMENT ON DENKTAS' REMARKS ON TALKS

NC080930 Nicosia Public Information Office in English 7 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] The government spokesman today made the following statement:

"Despite repeated statements, misinterpretations and provocations by Mr. Denktas and the Turkish Cypriot press in connection with the intercommunal talks, it is repeated that the government and the Greek Cypriot side, in their desire to create the suitable climate, for the conduct of a constructive and meaningful dialogue, with a view to finding a lasting and a just solution to the Cyprus problem, to the benefit of the entire Cyprus people, will not make for the time being any comment.

"The Greek Cypriot side is going to the talks, without any advance commitment, or terms, in a spirit of goodwill, ready to discuss thoroughly and fully all the aspects of the Cyprus problem and expects that the other side will show a constructive spirit too."

DENKTAS REPLIES TO TASS COMMENT ON CYPRUS SOLUTION

TA071737 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 7 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Asked to comment on a report by the Soviet news agency, TASS, that the Soviet Union supported a solution of the Cyprus problem which respected the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and nonalignment of Cyprus, President Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriot community would, in future agreements, also safeguard its cofounder partner rights in the independence and sovereignty of the island and so maintain the nonalignment of Cyprus. He stressed that as long as the founder partner rights of the Turkish Cypriot community continued, the national guarantees necessitated by this would continue. He reiterated that if there was no Turkish guarantee and if Greece would not guarantee this independence by giving up advocating enosis, the independence of Cyprus would again be in danger. He stressed that for this reason everything necessary would be done within the framework of these guarantees. He pointed out that the main aim of the bizonal federal system was to guarantee the continuous independence and sovereignty of the island.

On another TASS comment [word indistinct] national communities should solve their own internal problems, President Denktas said that the federated state of each community would be responsible for its own internal problems.

Commenting on a news item on the Turkish service of Moscow Radio where Mr Kiprianou was described as the president of Cyprus, President Denktas said that it was a common mistake by all to describe Mr Kiprianou as the president of the whole of the island. He said that for someone to be the legal president of the whole of Cyprus an agreement should be reached between the two national communities and Mr Kiprianou had now understood this fact and for this reason he had agreed to resume the Cyprus intercommunal talks.

TURKISH CYPRIOT OPPOSITION LEADER WELCOMES RESUMPTION OF TALKS

TA071729 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 7 Aug 80

[Text] The leader of the Republican Turkish Party, Mr Ozgur, has expressed the hope that the intercommunal talks, which will resume on Saturday, will lead to a bizonal federal solution.

In a statement issued today, Mr Ozgur said that it was necessary for both sides to refrain from actions which would curtail the continuation of the intercommunal talks. He stated that the talks, which had been dragging on for a long time, should be more frequent and should help create an atmosphere which would lead to the establishment of a bicommunal bizonal federal status in which the two national communities would live in peace and security in their own regions. Mr Ozgur said that the two communities should cooperate in a central federal government with the aim of preventing the use of Cyprus as a stepping stone for the imperialists against her neighbors.

'ARAFAT THANKS PARTIES FOR SUPPORTING PLO

AKEL Message

NC080718 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 8 Aug 80 p 1

[Message from PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat to AKEL Secretary General E. Papaioannou--date not given]

[Text] Comrade Ezekias Papaioannou: Your cable condemning the Zionist criminal activities against our people and prisoners has had great effect on myself and the PLO Executive Committee. Thus, on their behalf and on behalf of our Palestinian people and of myself, I would like to thank you, the Central Committee of your revolutionary party and your cadres for your strong and great support to our people's struggle.

Rest assured, friends and revolutionary brothers, that no matter how much the enemy intensifies or escalates his criminal activities against our people, their revolutionary spirit and their patriotic positions and struggle against occupation will continue, will become stronger than their prisons and will be the granite on which the enemy will be crushed. At precisely that moment this fascist occupation will come to an end.

Dear comrade: The positive stand of our friends throughout the world and of your party in the first place strengthen our faith in victory.

We wish you health, prosperity and success in the service of the friendly Cypriot people, with whom we share the same revolutionary lines and the common front of REVOLUTION UNTIL VICTORY [published in boldface].

EDEK Message

NC070701 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 7 Aug 80 p 1

[Message from PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat to EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis and EDEK Secretary General Khatzidhimitriou--date not given]

[Text] Brother Lissaridhis and Brother Khatzidhimitriou: revolutionary greetings.

On behalf of the Arab Palestinian people and of the PLO Executive Committee and of myself personally, I thank you, your party and your fighters for your firm stand--a principled stand--on the side of our fair struggle against Zionist occupation.

The escalatio. of murderous Israeli activities against our Palestinian people has resulted in the loss of valuable lives of many heroic detainees and prisoners. [The same applies in connection with attacks] against our Lebanese and Palestinian people in southern Lebanon. The only result of all these murders will be the strengthening of our determination and the intensification of the continuous struggle for justice and for the recovery of the inalienable national rights of our people. At this point we stress to you, friends, that with the determination of our people and the support of friends throughout the world the prisons and the places of detention will vanish.

Your friendly socialist party, in accordance with its principles, has stood by in a brotherly way and supported our struggle to regain our freedom and to defend our dignity.

I wish you, Dr Lissaridhis, health and strength to continue your revolutionary struggle in the service of mankind's struggles and of the cause of the friendly Cypriot people.

Revolution until victory.

LIBYAN INFORMATION SECRETARY DENIES REPORT ON RADIO STATIONS

NC062031 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] Libyan Information Secretary Al-Hijazi, currently on an official visit to Cyprus, has denied Turkish Cypriot allegations that consultations are taking place on establishing two Libyan radio stations in Cyprus--one in the north and one in the south--and that the so-called Turkish Cypriot state has accepted this move in principle. Al-Hijazi stated that these reports were unfounded and that he neither raised nor discussed such an issue with the Turkish Cypriot leaders. Mr Al-Hijazi added that his visit to Cyprus was within the framework of Libya's initiative to resolve the Cypriot problem and broaden cooperation in such fields as economic, cultural, technical and the exchange of information between Libya and the Republic of Cyprus.

TURKISH CYPRIOT DENIES REPORTS ON GRANTING BASES TO NATO

TA311659 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English 'o Cyprus 1630 GMT 31 Jul 80

[Text] An official of the federated state has categorically denied Greek Cypriot press reports that President Denktas has offered the North Atlantic alliance bases in Cyprus. Describing the reports as totally without foundation and ridiculous, the official said the constitution of the federated state made it impossible to grant bases to foreigners in north Cyprus. He added the reports were put out in an effort to mislead the Islamic countries. The official concluded: No one can be deceived by this kind of lie uttered by the Greek Cypriot leadership who have been making money out of the British bases and who have turned them into an American base of aggression.

BRIEFS

NEW AUSTRALIAN ENVOY--The Australian Government continues to hope that the intercommunal talks conducted under the auspices of the UN secretary general may lead to a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem, the new Australian high commissioner, Mr M.L. Johnston, said yesterday. He made the statement in the course of the presentation of his credentials to President Kiprianou, who reaffirmed the Cyprus Government's policy of doing "whatever we can for the resumption of the talks under the auspices of the UN secretary general." [Text] The government is not considering the advancement of elections.

This was the statement of the government spokesman who was asked this in connection with a report published yesterday in the press organ of the KKE which had mentioned that a government committee had discussed the possibility of holding elections in 1980.

Denying the relevant report, the spokesman reiterated that elections will be held in 1981.

BULGARIA DISAGREES OVER USE OF NESTOS WATERS

AT061332 Athens NEWS in English 6 Aug 80 p 5

[Text] According to a reliable source, no progress has been made in the Greek-Bulgarian talks for the common exploitation of the waters of the Nestos River.

The problem is Bulgaria's decision to change the course of one of Nestos' tributaries, resulting in the decrease of the yearly flow of Nestos in Greece from 1,500 million cubic meters to 1,050 million.

Greece insists that the river's waters should be shared equally by the two countries, as had been agreed between the Greek and Bulgarian leaders, Karamanlis and Zhivkov, during their meeting on Corfu last year. The Greek side believes that a flow of 1,500 million cubic meters should be taken as a basis, from where it follows that Greece is entitled to 750 million, half of the total amount.

The Bulgarian side apparently does not accept this position, and negotiations for a compromise solution are continuing.

DEMIREL COMMENTS ON TERRORIST ATTACKS, LINKS WITH OUTSIDE GROUPS

TA071632 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 7 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has asked that the bills agreed upon at the Cankaya meeting between himself and Ecevit be enacted without any changes. He said: If the essence of the bills is to be damaged, we are not interested in enacting them. This would be deceitful. He was speaking after the Council of Ministers meeting which started at 1030 and lasted for 4 and 1/2 hours.

Noting that the Council of Ministers decided to express its condolences to the family of the late administrative attache at the Turkish Embassy in Athens, Galip Ozmen, and his daughter Neslihan, Demirel added that the attack against the Turkish Consulate in Lyons was also discussed at the Council of Ministers meeting. He said that the views and needs expressed at the meeting with the martial law commanders were also discussed at the cabinet meeting. He added that the cabinet decided to improve prisons and to conduct a relentless search for escaped prisoners.

In reply to a journalist who mentioned that Armenian organizations are collaborating with terrorists in Turkey, Demirel said that there was an indication that gangs of treachery and murder inside and outside Turkey were acting in unity. He said: We will not be intimidated by the enemies of Turkey. No state or nation can exist at the mercy of their enemies. If Turkey has enemies these enemies are facing a giant Turkey. Ultimately Turkey has the power to crush its enemies. Turkey will ultimately crush its enemies. Those who attempt to measure Turkey's power will be defeated. Let us not lose our self-confidence. Demirel wished the nation a happy Bairam.

FINANCE MINISTER SEZGIN RETURNS FROM TRADE TALKS IN YUGOSLAVIA

TA080651 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 7 Aug 80

[Text] Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin returned to Turkey this evening after completing a 3-day official visit to Yugoslavia. In a statement at Istanbul Yesilkoy Airport, Sezgin said that the two countries agreed to raise their volume of trade to $100 million in 1980. Noting that during his talks with the Yugoslav officials they discussed economic, industrial and commercial issues concerning the two countries, Sezgin said: Turkey and Yugoslavia are two important elements of balance for the achievement of peace and security in our region and in Europe. They must base their economies on stable foundations in order to protect their character as elements of political balance and in order to be able to carry out their functions regarding world peace. Therefore, our two countries wish to develop their economic and commercial cooperation further through mutual cooperation and solidarity. Sezgin added that they also discussed the high rates being charged to the Turkish TIR [International Highway Transport] trucks passing through Yugoslavia and that they reached an agreement on recognizing the rights of the Turkish citizens who had not been compensated for their immovable properties in Yugoslavia.

ARMENIANS IN TURKEY DENOUNCE ATTACKS AGAINST DIPLOMATS

CUMHURIYET CRITICIZES DEMIREL'S ATTITUDE TOWARD TERRORISM

NC060653 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 4 Aug 80 pp 1, 9

["The Truth Behind the Events" column: "Perilous Indications"]

[Excerpts] The press conference held by Prime Minister Demirel on Saturday has drawn a striking picture in that it indicates the way his minority government is approaching Turkey's problems.

According to honorable Demirel, Turkey was facing two serious problems when his minority government came to power: 1) terror and anarchy, 2) inflation. The honorable prime minister considers the first of these two problems "a state problem," not "a government problem." When terror and anarchy are matters concerning the state, the government dexterously avoids responsibility. The prime minister who approaches the issue with such a basic logic brushes aside the government's responsibility and calls on the national security organization--which, according to the constitution, is only a "consultative organ" carrying no responsibility--to do the job. Demirel sees no drawback in dragging the higher echelons of the Turkish Armed Forces into politics. This tactic on the part of Prime Minister Demirel is likely to be extremely disadvantageous from the regime's point of view.

Terror and anarchy have assumed unprecedented proportions during Demirel's term in office, wiping out the constitutional state in many regions of our country. And yet the prime minister can appear before the public to say "this is an issue for the state, not for the government." This is preposterous logic.

To put it briefly, honorable Demirel's press conference can be characterized as an indication of perilous political and economic approaches.

TOPICS OF SCHMIDT TALKS WITH HONECKER, GIEREK PREVIEWED

Schmidt Interview

DW110710 Cologne ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 8 Aug 80

[Ernst-Dieter Lueg interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt--date and place of interview not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Is your visit to the GDR and your dialogue there with the chairman of the Council of State a sort of normal event in inter-German affairs or must such a top-level talk produce practical results, alleviations for the people here and over there? Is a visit over there warranted only if such results can be obtained and brought back home?

[Answer] This is not yet a normal event, although it is indeed normal that the heads of government of neighboring states meet with a certain irregular regularity. This applies, for instance, to the Danish premier and the German chancellor, or to the Dutch and Belgian prime ministers, not to mention the French president or the Austrian chancellor and myself. The meetings with Mr Honecker so far have been rather sparse compared with the others. Two meetings took place between Stoph and Willy Brandt when he was chancellor, and Honecker and I met once in Helsinki and once in Belgrade. This is yet to become a normal affair. Still, we are very well on the way, and it would be a mistake to say that one should get together only if the outcome of it has been established from the outset. It is rather the other way round: To the degree the dealings with each other grow more normal many other things, too, will become more normal. Granted, a special aspect does exist in the relationship with the GDR. It involves the two German states which are separated against the will of the German nation. To this extent the case is not quite comparable to the German-Austrian or German-Danish relationships. It is really not comparable to those.

[Question] Prior to your trip to Moscow you said that the trip, or the dialogue per se, was valuable. Probably you will not say this just before your trip to the GDR. Isn't your objective to really achieve improvements in normal inter-German business, to get the stagnating agreements and contracts going again so that you will be able to return with tangible results from this visit?

[Answer] I would not want to put it that way. Nor is it correct that negotiations or agreements are stagnating. It is true, however, that much can yet be improved in the relationship between the two German states, especially in the interest of the people living over there and the people living on our side who, after all, are linked with each other and who will not want to lose these ties in the future either. The meeting had been planned as early as last December, and then again in the first few weeks of this year. The world-political aggravation between Iran and the United States, the invasion of Afghanistan, and other developments then caused it to be postponed. After all, upon Eastern initiatives some other East-West meetings, too, were shelved in the first few months of 1980. The parallel activities which French President Giscard d'Estaing and I pursued in relations with the Soviet Union, after all, yielded the great progress of the East and West overcoming the phase of lack of dialogue. This is also true for the relationship between Moscow and Washington. Now this leads to a point where something that had been nearly normal already becomes possible again, for instance the meeting with East European government chiefs. I would not want to predict what favorable consequences might ensue from this. If everything were fixed and done already we would not have to meet and talk.

[Question] Expectations in the GDR are immense, as are those here in the Federal Republic. You will have the federal economics minister along for the trip. Does this mean that as far as you are concerned new prospects are feasible in inter-German trade with a view to expansion, with a view to enhancement, which then might be considered part of the topic of practical alleviations?

[Answer] This is true. On my part it was important that Mr Mittag participate on the part of the GDR leadership. I believe that both German states are greatly interested in the further expansion of the economic exhange, the GDR perhaps a bit more than we. We are most interested in normalization, of course, especially the normalization of passenger traffic, tourist travel. But let me underscore quite emphatically a phrase you used a while ago, namely that the fact of speaking with each other alone is a value which will bear fruit in the further course of this process.

[Question] No doubt detente and disarmament will play a great role during your conference in the vicinity of Rostock. Could you visualize the two German states developing a joint disarmament initiative, perhaps in the field of balanced troop reduction, the MBFR negotiations in Vienna?

[Answer] It is true that we will surely talk about them. But I think that we have not yet reached a point of development where the two German states might make a joint initiative in this highly important field without regard for their respective partners, as it were. I will not rule this out for later years, to be sure. But at present I believe it is necessary to keep in mind that the GDR is affiliated with an alliance system which is called the Warsaw Pact and that we are members of the North Atlantic alliance system, and that both the GDR leadership and we would like everybody in the world to be perfectly aware of the fact that this will remain unchanged in the future as well.

[Question] Is it absolutely inconceivable to you that a politician of the German opposition could accompany you on this trip, for example, Richard von Weizsaecker who has made an offer in this respect?

[Answer] Mr von Weizsaecker did so on his own responsibility, I am sure. Probably he was not aware that I had made such an offer to the opposition leadership on an earlier occasion. For well thought-out, acceptable reasons the opposition leadership declined at the time; so at the moment this did not seem particularly indicated to me.

[Question] Prior to your trip to the GDR you will be receiving the Polish party boss, Edward Gierek, in Hamburg. Is this already a normal consultation so to speak between the People's Republic and the Federal Republic of Germany which goes beyond even bilateral relations?

[Answer] First of all the relationship with the People's Republic of Poland, too, is a bilateral relationship. But it goes without saying that all conversations between Mr Gierek and myself to date have involved international issues as well, questions concerning arms control policy and questions concerning the world economy. In relations with the People's Republic of Poland normalization has perhaps advanced a small step farther than it has in the relationship with the GDR.

Genscher Statement

DW081048 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 8 Aug 80 pp 1, 2

[Article signed C.G.: "Warsaw Endeavors for Billion-Range Credit--Born Wants More Coal"]

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 August--The first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, Gierek, above all will talk about questions concerning East-West relations and Poland's economic requests to the Federal Republic of Germany when he meets with Federal Chancellor Schmidt in Hamburg on 19 and 20 August. This is what Foreign Minister Genscher said in Bonn Thursday. The subject to be dealt with is the Madrid followup of the European security conference which will take place in November. [paragraph continues]

Bonn and Warsaw, Genscher said, want the Madrid conference to establish a special European disarmament conference. While Warsaw considers as a requisite for such a conference the objectives of the Warsaw Pact--which aim at detaching Western Europe from the United States--the Federal Republic wants to achieve more confidence-building measures in military policy for all of Europe, that is to say also on the part of the East European countries. Bonn's opinion is in harmony with the concept of NATO.

As for Poland's economic desires Genscher did not make any comment. It is known, however, that Poland is trying to obtain German credits totaling DM1.5 billion. DM1 billion is envisaged as a non-project tyed financial credit granted by private German banks. The other half billion is intended as a credit guaranteed by the Federal Government. The Federal Government is not participating in the intensive talks on the free credit of a billion held between Polish authorities and German banks for some time, the question of how the credit will be raised and what its terms will be still being open; and the guarantee for the other half billion is subject to a decision by the interministerial guarantee committee. What has been considered is the option of linking the approval of the guarantee to the condition that Poland repay this guaranteed credit with increased coal deliveries. Deliveries amounting to one million tons of coal a year during the term of the credit have been discussed; price negotiations and details, however, have not as yet been clarified during the preliminary talks, which up to now have been mere probings. Reportedly Bonn might be prepared to guarantee this credit on this basis as this would result in an improvement in raw material supplies. On the other hand, Poland will hardly succeed in its attempt to obtain the untied bank credit at preferential terms.

Besides, Bonn considers it possible that Warsaw might try to obtain concessions in the economic field by complaining about the Federal Government's political conduct. According to experts Gierek's meeting with Schmidt is not likely to bring about detailed results in the economic field. What is striking is that Poland has ensured for itself a position on Bonn's list of Eastern contacts even before Schmidt's visit to GDR Council of State Chairman Honecker. Bonn quarters reckon that Poland seeks to retain a special rank in East-West policy, and it did make this clear when proposing once again a disarmament conference with a view to the Madrid meeting.

Genscher puts Schmidt's meeting with Gierek on the same level with the important contacts between East and West which commenced in Vienna last May and which were continued with the talks of French President Giscard d'Estaing and the federal chancellor with the Soviet head of state, Brezhnev.

Spokesman Gruenewald Briefing

ID081150 Hamburg DPA in German 1042 GMT 8 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 8 Aug (DPA)--The aim of making possible more human contacts between the two German states is according to Government Spokesman Gruenewald "a principal aspect" of the talks to be held between Chancellor Schmidt and SED chief Honecker at the end of August. Gruenewald told a news conference in Bonn today that discussions on this subject might refer both to lowering the age of GDR pensioners required for visits to the Federal Republic and travel opportunities for young people. Gruenewald was cautious in answering a question about the possibility of setting up a youth plan with the GDR. It might be too early to embark on an attempt to arrange a youth exchange with the GDR in an organized form. The government spokesman pointed out that the proposed setting-up of a youth scheme with Poland is proceeding "very sluggishly."

Gruenewald said that it has not yet been decided how the chancellor will travel to his meeting with Honecker at the Baltic spa of Dierhagen near Rostok. There has been speculation that the chancellor might go by sailboat. Asked why Minister for Inner-German Relations Franke will not accompany the chancellor the spokesman said that the composition of the chancellor's delegation has not yet been decided either. It is certain however that Economics Minister Lambsdorff will go with the chancellor to Dierhagen.

It is also still undecided who will be included in Schmidt's delegation for his meeting with the Polish party chief Gierek in Hamburg on 19 and 20 August. Gruenewald made it clear once again that Gierek's visit is private and that a large delegation cannot be expected. According to a spokesman of the Foreign Ministry, discussions as to whether Foreign Minister Genscher will take part in the meeting with Gierek are still going on. Gruenewald pointed out that Gierek's visit to Hamburg is returning Schmidt's visit to Gierek on Hela Peninsula last August which was also described as private. Genscher was not present on that occasion.

LEADERS ASSESS RESULTS OF OSTPOLITIK ON TREATY ANNIVERSARY

DW081200 [Editorial Report] Cologne ARD Television Network in German at 1815 GMT on 7 August 1980 presents a 90-minute Fritz Pleitgen documentary marking the 10th anniversary of the Moscow treaty and the beginning phase of Ostpolitik. Within the framework of this feature the author provides film material showing stages in Ostpolitik since 1969 and presents interviews with various international figures involved in the process of that time, with Klaus Bednarz, for example, having interviewed Valentin Falin, former USSR ambassador to Bonn, presumably in Moscow; Peter Merseburger having talked with former U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger in the United States; Peter Gatter with PZPR Central Committee member Mieczyslaw Rakowski, presumably in Warsaw; Sabine Huth with former Chancellor Willy Brandt and his former State Secretary Egon Bahr; and Manfred Kornatz with former chairman of the CDU opposition Rainer Barzel. According to Pleitgen, the GDR's Michael Kohl was the only protagonist of that time to refuse to grant an interview.

Pleitgen arranges his documentary in such a way that pertinent passages form interviews of the aforementioned personages are tailored to a specific subject and question, without the interviewers appearing on the screen. These passages are interspersed with documentary film material on the era.

On the political background of the new Ostpolitik since 1969, former chancellor and incumbent SPD Chairman Willy Brandt says: "Well, in our own country, in the Federal Republic, the inclination existed to cling to what had been...an inclination which was understandable, at least in part. Many people had a hard time reconciling themselves to the fact that the cut made by World War II was as deep as it actually was. With regard to German partition and also with regard to new facts pertaining to the former German eastern territories many people clung to the idea for quite some time that the Western powers in general and the Americans in particular would set this right for us somehow. As mayor of Berlin, I realized that we could not reckon with the Western powers helping overcome German partition, that they could not do so even if they wanted to."

Following some pictorial material including reportage on Gustav Heinemann's election as president in Berlin, Brandt is again shown saying: "What existed was a defensive justification directed forward. The defensive justification emerged from the fact that a new relationship began to develop between the two world powers.

"I think as a German politician one has to be careful not to be left lagging behind, not to be prevented from raising our own claims in the course of such a process, directed forward regardless of the ups and downs in the relations between the world powers, to prepare for doing everything in our power, without neglecting national interests, to make an active contribution of our own toward the safeguarding of peace."

Directly following this statement former CDU Chairman Rainer Barzel makes the following comment: "At the beginning, after the change of government from Kiesinger to Brandt, we offered to do this jointly because all of us felt that a policy toward the West must be followed by a policy toward the East, and because we advocated the view that more success would be promised if the government and opposition worked together. And it started out very well too. The first report on the state of the nation in divided Germany by Chancellor Brandt still adopted suggestions of the opposition, and it was preceded by a joint conference. Herbert Wehner then quickly spoiled that, and what then happened was confrontation over Ostpolitik as well."

The former Soviet ambassador to Bonn, Valentin Falin, then appears on the screen, saying: "You know, Ostpolitik, which to us is Westpolitik, has always been in the center of European policy because the climate, the political climate in Europe, essentially depended on the relations between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union.

"It was our objective--and we documented this objective by means of our proposal, our initiative for example to establish diplomatic relations with the Federal Republic--to have normal, regular relations with your country and to solve our economic, political, and other problems in a political way, just as all other states do. But this had been practically impossible until some principles were clarified, most importantly the relationship of the Federal Republic to the borders, to the realities that had emerged after and during the war, and the political will of the Federal Republic to cultivate normal interstate relations with socialist states, all socialist states including the GDR."

The documentary then turns to the conclusion of the Moscow treaty of 1970, with pictorial material illustrating the preparatory phase. Former State Secretary Egon Bahr says: "Possibly we had to turn a new leaf in the history of the relations between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union. The last detailed talk had taken place on the occasion of the establishment of diplomatic relations by Adenauer in 1955, and a great deal of time had passed since then. We had to make it clear to the Soviet Union, and the Soviet Union had to realize, that we, the Federal Republic of Germany, is and would remain a country, a firm component part, of the alliance of the West, and we had to mitigate the feeling or attitude of hostility."

The Soviet Union's Valentin Falin comes on a minute later saying: "It was not an easy task. What we had behind us was the experiences of the former years and decades. What was between us was the bias that had accumulated on both sides. And I would not want to say that the amount of bias on your side was any lower than on ours."

The interview portions at this point are interrupted with film material on World War II and on the signing of the Moscow treaty. Egon Bahr then resumes his statement: "Understandably the question was difficult to clarify of what the relations of the Federal Republic of Germany with the Soviet Union would be like as long as the two states exist, that is to say as long as no peace treaty for Germany existed, as long as the special rights of the victor powers continued to exist.

"But really the most difficult point was that of the borders because on this point everything converged to the question: Is there a permanence to the borders, or is there any inviolability of the borders in the sense of the renunciation of force idea, so that our intention of implementing the German right to self-determination that has been stipulated in our constitution and fixed in our ethos cannot be misunderstood as a threat of force or as presenting the danger of a violent clash. The border issue and the phrasing indeed formed the main point of the difficulties."

Valentin Falin directly follows: "And then formulations came. I do not want to say that this was a technical process of formulation as far as the inviolability of borders was concerned in particular. This was the center of the whole thing, it was the core of the treaty."

The interviewer's voice is heard interjecting: "For you."

Falin: "For us, and I might say also for the entire European development because our bilateral treaty was much greater in its significance than any treaty for only two states. Without that treaty there would not be any Quadripartite Agreement. Without that treaty, in all probability, there would not be any final act of the pan-European conference, and so forth."

As for present impressions of the Moscow treaty the CDU's Rainer Barzel contends that in retrospect "what the Soviet Union wanted is written in the texts indeed" whereas what the German side had wanted boiled down to "expectations," hopes that, as Brandt had put it, Germany would come nearer to its national objective. "Nothing of that has materialized."

Valentin Falin declares directly thereafter that "we would phrase several articles, several points of this treaty differently if we had written these articles alone. Probably we would phrase more sharply, more clearly, more unequivocally even such passages as nonuse of force, inviolability of borders, and we would also add other issues to this treaty, express our well-known positions toward the results of the war and the postwar development."

"It seems to me," adds Falin later, "that despite all the criticism that came at the time and later above all from the rightwing of your political spectrum, this treaty will not be the worst in the practice of international law in our era. The unconventional problems required unconventional solutions."

Egon Bahr points out in this connection that "it would have been impossible to negotiate this treaty today, in a period of relative tension between the Soviet Union and the United States. At the time I believe we fitted ourselves into such a development of willingness to cooperate between the two superpowers at the last possible historical moment."

The documentary then shifts to the topic of the treaty with Poland, with PZPR Central Committee member Mieczyslaw Rakowski declaring: "To us it was clear that we had to make an attempt, despite this very cruel past, to form, to build friendly relations at long last between all Germans and Poles. This was impossible to do without such a treaty, or at least impossible without the recognition of the Oder-Neisse border by the Germans, meaning all Germans, in this particular case by the Federal Republic of Germany. I do not see anybody who has been opposed to this treaty to this day or who would call it a mishap on the way, as it were. There is no such thing on our side. Perhaps I would prefer more precise passages in this treaty because it is after all generally known that various quarters in the Federal Republic have tried in the past several years to interpret the treaty in a manner unacceptable to us. What I mean is those whom we call the revisionist front in Bonn or outside Bonn."

Rainer Barzel recalls in this context that at the time the German side had suggested that Poles and Germans simply start "getting along with each other" after the model of the reconciliation with France, without a specific treaty, but that this did not materialize. "I believe and even know that many responsible people in Poland today wonder whether the course of getting along with each other would not have been better, for we cannot indeed say that a reconciliation between Germans and Poles after the French model has taken place, or even after the model with the Jews and the Israelis."

Rakowski argues that "without this treaty it would have been practically impossible to develop such relations. Hence the first step was a treaty. You cannot put the cart before the horse, as Mr Barzel suggested. First the problem of our border had to be cleared off the table. I think, in fact I am convinced, that all Poles waited for such a treaty, for only after conclusion of such a treaty was it possible to develop relations in all fields."

Pictorial material on Berlin marks the opening of the next segment of the documentary with the narrative saying that without the Quadripartite Agreement no headway would have been made in the divided city. SPD Chairman Willy Brandt recalls that he wrote to Brezhnev directly about the pass issue involved in the Berlin negotiations "with the result that what was achieved in this field was what had been pursued." The opposition's Barzel expresses gratitude to former U.S. President Nixon who "got back three points which the Federal Government had already given up, points which pertain to free Berlin's belonging together with us." Valentin Falin is shown declaring: "It was not our wish nor in our interest to have the situation of tension around West Berlin. Rather, it had been our wish, and we said so several times, that calm should prevail in West Berlin and around West Berlin at long last." In a subsequent portion of his interview Falin continues: "Again the method was unconventional in the negotiations on the Quadripartite Agreement, because all of us, the Soviet Union and the three Western powers affirmed their legal positions, and without doing these legal positions any harm they declared the wish to achieve and implement practical improvements. And their practical improvements contributed to a cardinal improvement in the situation in West Berlin and around West Berlin."

In the segment dealing with the basic treaty with the GDR, Egon Bahr notes the difficulties involved in the negotiations on the basic treaty, while Rainer Barzel restates the criticism of the opposition that the negotiations were carried out "sloppily." Bahr adds that the relations between the Federal Republic and the GDR indeed developed just as laboriously as he had anticipated. "If you want to put it this way, it has been actually true for a few months now that we have a situation in which I find that the GDR has become as cooperative as other East European states. If you want to put it this way, the GDR to that extent has become European in this attitude toward the Federal Republic.

As for the question whether the politicians would adopt a different attitude toward the treaties now, Willy Brandt says that "on principle I would not decide any differently than I did at the time if I were facing a similar situation now." After all, he adds, "difficult things do not become any better if you let them lie."

Valentin Falin has this to say: "I believe that one could have done more, during the preparations for and after the signing of the treaty, to enlighten the public about what was at stake, what political, economic, and other motives were involved, so that the Federal Republic, the people of the Federal Republic, the people of the Soviet Union, the peoples of all of Europe will live to see more peaceful times and feel in a better secured situation."

The interviewer asks: "I do understand you correctly that you include in this improved enlightenment of the people our country as well as your country?"

Falin replies: "Yes, yes, this is what I mean. I believe that both sides could have worked better in this respect. But what I miss most is this: parallel to the preparation of the principles that precipitated the treaty proper I would also do more for the construction of some practical models of cooperation."

In reply to the general question whether Ostpolitik has been worthwhile Willy Brandt states that Ostpolitik "was necessary, and what is necessary must be done, and therefore it also was worthwhile," and he draws attention to the alleviations in travel to and from socialist countries including the Soviet Union and the GDR. The CDU's Rainer Barzel concludes that although not everything was wrong "it surely was too cheap, too poor, too hasty, and yielded too few return concessions." The USSR's Valentin Falin notes that "detente which had been most closely linked with the Moscow treaty earned your republic, our state, all people of Europe a lot of good. This would hardly be possible without the Moscow treaty. This alone goes to show that the Moscow treaty was necessary. The Moscow treaty was a contribution by both sides to the consolidation of peace and to the creation of a better situation in Europe."

Poland's Rakowski feels that "now after 10 years we can speak already of a new quality in relations and it is my observation of the development of relations in various fields, and not just in the field of the economy but also in the fields of politics and culture, we have made great headway everywhere, apart from the fact, of course, that there are some everyday problems, as it were."

Brandt Interview

[Excerpts] Bonn--The German-Soviet treaty, signed 10 years ago by the then federal chancellor, SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, has been referred to as an "essential contribution" toward overcoming tensions in Europe. Brandt said in an interview with DPA that the Moscow treaty and the concomitant Ostpolitik have given the Federal Republic greater international independence and international weight. He advocated expansion of those areas of the set of treaties not yet fully exploited, especially cultural and youth exchanges, and encouraged Bonn and Moscow to undertake further disarmament initiatives.

Brandt claimed that Ostpolitik, with the Moscow treaty being the key toward normalization with Eastern Europe, has contributed toward "relative stability" in Europe which has even been maintained in the current East-West crisis concerning Afghanistan. This result is in part also due to the joint efforts by France and the Federal Republic as well as other European partners. "The treaty materialized despite Vietnam and has endured despite Afghanistan," the SPD politician, who signed the treaty in Moscow on 12 August 1970, said. "This is remarkable--but it is no guarantee that it will remain like this in future." The treaty has also opened the door for pan-European attempts at East-West cooperation. Brandt rejected the claim that the practical application of the Moscow treaty favors primarily the Soviet Union in the sphere of economic cooperation. Economic cooperation which benefits both sides is the long-term aspect of political importance in German-Soviet relations.

Asked about the protracted discussions--protracted by East-West tensions--concerning the realization of the chancellor's recent trip to Moscow, the SPD chief replied cautiously concerning the idea of establishing regular German-Soviet summit meetings. He expressed personal reservations about "too much institutionalizing" as far as world summit meetings are concerned. There are summit meetings with "irregular regularity" in the relations between the Federal Republic and the United States. Brandt said: "This should also be the case with relations with the Soviet Union." There is "no harm in leaders talking to each other at certain intervals without making these intervals too rigid."

Genscher Statement

LD101213 Hamburg DPA in German 1000 GMT 10 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--In the opinion of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the signing of the Moscow treaty 10 years ago was a major contribution towards stability in Europe. In a statement published in Bonn on Sunday, the FDP federal chairman stated that, with the mutual renunciation of force, the treaty, in the face of the stratified situation in Europe, strained with historic burdens, set an example for breaking the vicious circle of injustices, force and counterforce. This was one precondition for overcoming the most difficult problems.

AGREEMENT REACHED WITH GDR ON AMNESTIED PRISONERS

LD081340 Hamburg DPA in German 1050 GMT 8 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Berlin, 8 Aug (DPA)--According to information received by the working group for human rights the political prisoners freed under the amnesty given on the occasion of the GDR's 30th anniversary last autumn when they were allowed to take up residence in the GDR or East Berlin will be allowed to move to the Federal Republic before the end of this year. Agreement on this, the working group said today, was reached during the preparations for the meeting between Chancellor Schmidt and SED chief Honecker. Most of the former prisoners are expected in the Federal Republic this autumn. Applications, it was stated, will be dealt with promptly. According to the working group the 21,928 persons covered by the amnesty include about 1,500 political prisoners.

GOVERNMENT STATEMENT CITES OIL EXPENDITURE FIGURES

[Text] Bonn--Since the 1973-74 oil crisis the Federal Republic has scored significant success in oil savings. In a review released today of economic, financial and energy policy in the legislative period now ending, the Federal Government states: "With the same volume of oil as in 1973, we are today creating more economic growth, driving more cars and heating a greater number of larger and more comfortable homes."

The peak oil consumption of 145 million tons in 1973 has not been equaled since. Last year oil consumption was 144.4 million tons, although the gross national product in real terms rose by 15 percent, the number of cars by one-third to 23 million and the proportion of larger and centrally heated dwellings in the total housing stock rose from 50 to 70 percent. The oil share in total energy consumption was reduced from a 1973 peak of 55 percent to 51 percent. The Federal Republic is now less dependent on oil than during the first oil crisis.

But oil has become much more expensive. The Federal Republic's oil bill rose from DM32 billion in 1978 to DM48 billion in 1979 and is estimated at DM65 billion for the current year.

MICHEL DEBRE DISCUSSES FOREIGN, DEFENSE POLICIES

LD110709 Paris LE FIGARO in French 7 Aug 80 pp 1-2

[Max Clos and Jacques Jacquet-Francillon undated interview with presidential candidate and former French Prime Minister Michel Debre: "Independence, Firmness, Peace and Freedom"]

[Text] Question: What do you think of our diplomatic action? Do you believe that the Gaullist tradition is still alive in foreign policy?

Answer: The words used by the government are similar to those used in General de Gaulle's time. National independence is asserted and the attitudes toward the Atlantic alliance, the European organization, detente and even our African policy have been placed in line with what was done in the past. But even though the words used are similar, the reality has changed. This change has taken place above all for domestic reasons. The weakening of our economy, social undertainty and political difficulties are always and everywhere bound to affect any country's diplomatic capability. How can we believe that a country suffering from high inflation and unemployment and--for many years--stagnation in the investment sphere could claim international authority? Furthermore our diplomacy has been undecided to say the least.

Question: But you continually hear references to Gaullism. Where do you see any difference?

Answer: In the past, behind these words--Atlantic alliance, Europe, and the Soviet Union--there were both a rejection of certain foreign demands and creative thought. Rejection meant a refusal to align ourselves with a big power and/or be integrated in a continental conglomerate. Creative thought meant promoting a proud attitude by France characterized both by noninterference in the domestic affairs of other countries and by support for freedom, that is peoples' independence. In the face of alignment and integration theses, a determined attitude was adopted by an independent France. There was a free diplomacy serving our interests and a high concept of international relations.

The zigzags of our foreign policy in recent years reflect two deplorable temptations to which we in turn succumb. The first is that of neutralism, that is indifference and passiveness, at a time when freedom of peoples and dignity of man are at stake. The second can be expressed by a question: Will we become a province of Europe? This temptation takes the form of a contradictory attitude toward European affairs.

In official speeches our independence is asserted but at the same time we let the Commission encroach on the republic's constitutional prerogatives and we have set a trap in our path, whose danger is beginning to become noticeable, by electing a European assembly by universal suffage without any limitations which common sense should have imposed. Let us not therefore talk about Gaullist fidelity. These two temptations have been inspired by a kind of refusal to fully assume France's independence and unity--preconditions for both its existence and its influence.

Question: We find that you have continually opposed the European idea. Do you not believe that this is an attitude contrary to reality?

Answer: Europe's professional supporters have achieved what at one moment of Christendom's history inquisitors already had achieved by replacing the concept of Christendom with their own concept of an exterminating church. Professional Europeans have managed to make people believe that their supranational and intolerant thesis, deadly for both freedom and Europe, is the only valid concept for Europe.

We have been fed this lie for 30 years. History has created European nations and even supposing that a new social organization could replace the existing one after many upheavals, acting as if things are not what they are is of a derisory and dangerous nature.

It is this derisory and dangerous nature which explains the grave weaknesses of the Community action whose bad results we now see only in the economic sphere. Community institutions refuse to see world reality, which has been marked by an economic war. Community organs' refusal to act with respect to the iron and steel industry has cost the European iron and steel industrial potential in general and French potential in particular a great deal. Now under our very eyes a similarly inadequate attitude toward a Japanese offensive in the sphere of the automobile industry could cost us a great deal in the coming 2-3 years. And many more examples could be mentioned!

The Common Market--I claim the authorship of this definition which has now gained general acceptance--is a "colander." At a time of improper competition when any means, including fraud, are acceptable, Community organs do nothing. The Common Market is the least adequately protected organization in the world. This is a costly mistake under the present circumstances.

Question: You are alluding not only to industry but also to agriculture.

Answer: As far as agriculture is concerned, Malthusianism is now fashionable. Europeans allegedly produce too much wheat, milk, meat and I do not know what else. This is untrue. Very large quantities of agricultural and agro-food products are imported. Furthermore what is the good of those continuous speeches on famine in the world and the need for Europe to show its generosity to starving peoples? Making a speech--as has been done--on aid for starving peoples on even days and another speech against surpluses and for Malthusianism on odd days--this has been an attitude adopted by Community organizations and no one has been surprised by it. If a sensible concept of Europe prevailed, agricultural production in some spheres and an agro-food industry would be developed both to ensure our continent's independence as far as food is concerned and by way of political generosity.

In other words, neither my criticisms nor even my indignation stem from an anti-European mental attitude. On the contrary!

The Common Market Is Like a Spanish Inn

Question: What are your views on yet another expansion of the Common Market in general and Spain's entry in particular?

Answer: At a time when, as a result of our surrender to British demands, the Common Market is tending to become a Spanish inn [to which travellers have to bring everything they need] it would be inconsistent to stop Spain from joining it!

As soon as Britain knocked at the Common Market's door it became clear that its entry would render many rules of the Treaty of Rome null and void. For stating this obivous fact I was called an anti-European. Now everybody admits this even if with some reservations. Since Spain and Portugal are in turn knocking at the door, their request should be considered in a favorable spirit. However, whereas a certain concept of the Common Market was valid when it had 6 members it is no longer valid now when there are 9 members and will become even less valid once membership increases to 12. It is here that the concept of a Europe of nations becomes of major importance. The grave problems which Spain's admission will create for our economy do not come under one rule from the North Sea to the Mediterranean. We have reached the moment of truth: Either Europe must be reorganized on a realistic basis or we will proceed from crisis to crisis.

Question: Do you extend your accusation of unreality with respect to French action in European affairs to include our action in the Mediterranean region and Africa?

Answer: Political changes in Muslim countries, a demographic imbalance between countries north of the Mediterranean and countries south of the Mediterranean and the consequences of strategic disputes at the entry to the Indian Ocean impose on us a need for continuous vigilance and continuous efforts in various forms with a view to anticipating events and taking action. Furthermore, we must not lose interest in black Africa. Consequently I do not follow the line of reasoning of those who make loud protests as soon as the French Government takes diplomatic action or even envisages or decides on any military intervention.

The Mediterranean is not an area reserved for the American and Russian fleets. Nor do the Cubans have a monopoly on intervention in Africa. France can have no Mediterranean or African policy unless it is able to intervene when necessary. Some 20 years ago France responded to a request from peoples over whom it first extended sovereign power and later kept in its sovereign power in the last century and the beginning of the present century. The recognition of the right to independence was also an act of trust in the preservation of a shared if not common destiny. France must not shirk duties connected with this destiny. This is its interest in peace. Let our preserved power, our increased prestige and our considered generosity maintain those young states' respect for us!

Question: With reference to the question of Iran and Afghanistan, do you believe that France's attitude has been sufficiently clear?

Answer: It has not. And is not even now.

It is unacceptable from the viewpoint of international law that any government which has ambassadors and is a member of the United Nations should seize hostages--whether diplomats or not--and pay killers to get rid of personalities living in exile. I am one of the very few politicians who supported the principle of the intervention decided upon by the U.S. President to try to free the hostages by force. The American Government took action too late and undoubtedly prepared it inadequately. However, it was natural to respond by an act of war to an act of war and this should have been stated officially. The invasion of Afghanistan has shaken public opinion and this is a good thing. However, an affirmation and an orientation should have followed the invasion. First, it was necessary to repeatedly explain publicly that detente does not merely mean an effort to establish good relations with the Soviet Union. Detente means the hope that the leaders of the communist world will participate in an international order. The invasion of a neutral country is tantamount to a rejection of this order.

Furthermore, after warning public opinion that it is the weakness of Western countries which opens the door to attacks by dictatorial regimes and fanaticism, Western action should have been strengthened. It is not merely a question of building up arments. It is also a question of realizing that the West is destroying itself through inflation, unemployment and the loss of its vital force. Therefore self-examination and appropriate measures would have been a most effective response on the part of responsible Western nations including ourselves.

Arments in Keeping With Foreign Policy

Question: If you had to give directives defining our foreign policy, what would you say?

Answer: I would say this: Only a strong and free France can come out on top of the ruthless international competition which characterizes our times. This French strength and freedom would help revive Western civilization and two of its main principles: International law and human dignity.

Question: Do you not think that you are envisaging too ambitious a role for France?

Answer: France is one of the small number of nations which ought to have a feeling of responsibility with regard to freedom. It is a duty and an honor which France cannot avoid without ceasing to be France.

Question: You have not mentioned disarmament. However, is this not one of the paths to be explored in order to allay the anxieties you express?

Answer: Disarmament is an essential action. Or rather it would be an essential action because it can only be seriously envisaged as a consequence of a political action. The SALT I and SALT II treaties were inspired by the concern to establish a reasonably controlled rate of reduced growth. Neither of these agreements therefore means a reduction in armaments.

Disarmament can only be the final step in a process of restoring order and hence stability and peace. The first stage in this process is to define a monetary system which imposes a discipline even on the richest or most influential countries. This monetary system is the prelude to an economic system. This initial approach should go hand-in-hand with cooperation organized among the industrialized countries or simply those countries which are better off than the poor countries. These two initial steps should lead to a policy--in other words to an affirmation of peoples' right to determine their future and of international law. Therefore if enough nations and their leaders adopt this path on the basis of specific agreements and clearly formulated principles, a twofold line could be envisaged: One aimed at arms reduction and the other at the reduction of demographic imbalances. It is here that mankind's hope lies. However, only the strong nations can take such action.

Question: Let us now turn to defense, and first the neutron bomb. The president of the republic stated recently that France is going to be equipped with this weapon. You expressed reservations. Could you explain them to us?

Answer: The fact that the French people are capable of developing this new enhanced-radiation weapon known as the "neutron bomb" is additional evidence of their worth! However, weapons are not manufactured for the mere satisfaction of having new weapons. A weapon corresponds to a strategy. What does building a "neutron bomb" mean for France? Manufacturing hundreds of them, and in order to do so delaying modernization of the deterrent force, postponing new aircraft, making do with distant promises of new submarines, is changing strategy. Even producing only around 50 bombs which will be included in a forward defense system in order to meet possible commitments constitutes, if you are not careful, a vacillation which is highly significant and very serious.

Indeed, U.S. strategy aims, as far as possible, only to contribute to the European allies' defense with conventional weapons. Hence the so-called "flexible response" doctrine and the U.S. proposals for the European countries to increase their conventional forces. In the framework of this strategy the neutron weapon--modern artillery--has its place.

This weapon would only have any meaning if the Soviets were to attack Western Europe in the same way as Hitler attacked Poland, France and the USSR 40 years ago.

We have passed this stage. For the Soviets the tank is no longer a tool for breaking fronts but a tool for occupying a territory which has previously been politically or militarily disarmed (this applies to Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan). The "break through weapons" are now accurate ballistic missiles such as the SS-20, 21 and 22 which the Soviets are deploying, targeted on Europe. Therefore the U.S. strategy drawn up more than 20 years ago is not a strategy of new weapons.

This strategy is not in keeping with our interests. Neither Europe nor France should regard being an element of a gradation in U.S. security's own deterrence as a valid hypothesis. Our strategy, based on French interests, is deterrence, in other words the capacity to have sufficient counterforce and counter-industrial center potential for the possible adversary to abandon his threat. Our military ability to intervene in Europe can only be regarded as an element in our own deterrence.

Strategic Views of the Future

Question: However, has it not been said in official speeches that the concept is still that of giving priority to the strategic deterrent forces?

Answer: After a period of hesitation official speeches are once more stressing the strategic deterrent forces. I welcome this; however, do the actions match the words? Although an effort has fortunately been made to modernize the range and destructive power of our missiles, the components of this deterrent force have not really made much progress. We have built 5 submarines in 20 years. During the present 7-year period a much delayed decision was made to start work on a sixth. When a country like France has no territory to fall back on and the density of its inhabited areas is relatively great, there is no other solution then to take to the seas or the air and exploit their vastness.

This strategic concern coincides with the needs of tomorrow's economy and of the exploitation of marine and submarine wealth, notably that of the 200 nautical mile zone, and also of the potentialities of space. We ought to have about 10 nuclear submarines which would enable us to have 5 of them constantly at sea, accompanied by nuclear attack submarines.

As for the other components of this force, hesitations with regard to aircraft and missiles have been aggravated by financial difficulties resulting from inflation, and the decision to manufacture mobile missiles, while important, does not make up for other delays.

Question: Do you not think that you are still bound by the strategic views which you initiated some 20 years ago together with General de Gaulle and a small number of aides? Have times not changed?

Answer: What we started in 1960 with the first programming law, submitted by the government which I led, was the beginning of a policy which in our view, and above all in the view of General de Gaulle whose strategic views it expressed, embodied the future. In 1960 there was only one sure fact: The explosion of a French bomb in the Sahara Desert had shown our mastery of this sphere. However there was still a great deal to be done gradually. The objective was to have a credible force and to develop that force in conditions which might make France a credible and respected nuclear power. This goal was attained around 1970 approximately within the scheduled period. The strategic concept to which this effort corresponds is that of the present time and the near future. France, deeply damaged by two world wars, must make very effort to prevent new losses of men and new material damage. Hence we must pursue the chosen path. While arms technology is developing toward greater accuracy and smaller explosive charges and while the Soviets are exploiting this development to the full, General de Gaulle's views, misunderstood in 1960, are now becoming obvious facts.

Deterrence Requires Us To Be Strong and Wise

Question: Aren't you producing a blind alley for the military: having an army which in a way does not fight?

Answer: Deterrence requires us to be strong and wise, not in order to fight but to avoid fighting. These exceptional qualities are not asked only of those who man the nuclear deterrent forces. Our entire military network is stamped with the desire to deter and on this point the land, sea and air security forces and the land, air and sea intervention forces take part in this general deterrence effort in addition to their various specific missions. The development of weapons has meant that the European countries' conventional defense is now not really conceivable in face of the means which the Russians can deploy in case of need. On the other hand in places where their weapons do not intervene our conventional forces and those of our European partners will have an increasingly decisive role to play. It is in this context that the "neutron bomb" is placed. However our strategy should remain essentially the same.

Question: The president of the republic has stated that our nuclear response was intended to answer a nuclear threat. Does this observation not require two strategies depending on the threat?

Answer: Our nuclear deterrent is intended for any threat whatsoever, and while the multidirectional formula may have appeared excessive, the restrictive formula now employed strikes me as a serious sign of hesitancy. Our whole military system, nuclear and conventional, has the job of deterring the adversary whatever arms he uses.

Question: Do you think that military service should be stopped?

Answer: National service should be maintained. In my view the problem is not how long it should last. The army should take whatever proportion of the draft it needs for its missions. The young men--and young women--not included should be called for 1 year of civilian service. We must never forget that while national service is crucial from the defense viewpoint, it is also the expression of national and social solidarity. In this respect it is one of the republic's institutions to which we should remain deeply attached.

Question: Do you not think that discussions on defense could eventually shake the army's morale?

Answer: This is a republic and it is better for the French to be concerned about their country's defense and discuss its methods rather than showing great indifference toward it. In our society, which is very open to having leisure facilities and pursuits, the soldier's profession is characterized by dedication and self-sacrifice. Indeed our problem is not that of the army's morale, it is once again a problem of a policy which should be as clear and precise as our military tool.

Question: You have always placed great emphasis on the need for patriotism. Don't you think that this idea is meeting with little response in the younger generation?

Answer: There can be no defense without patriotism. That is the essential thing. Snobs, fashionable people, and theorists laugh at the flag and joke about La Marseillaise. A nation and human freedom have never owed anything and never will owe anything to snobs, fashionable people and theorists. As for saying that the younger generation is less motivated than previous ones, that is a different matter and it is perhaps appropriate for the generations now exercising social responsibility to examine their consciences. A handful of theoreticians has virtually stopped the teaching of history in schools and secondary schools without consulting Parliament. [paragraph continues]

A fashionable ideology has asserted and is still asserting that the idea of the nation is outdated and that for France we must either envisage a European union or alignment either with U.S. policy or with Russian policy. What better way is there of sickening young French people of their homeland!

Question: Ir saying that don't you feel that you could be accused of being a chauvinist?

Answer: Be careful about the meaning of that word! The feeling of superiority sparked off by nationalism should no more be confused with patriotic faith than the Inquisition or intolerance should be confused with religious faith. The progress of the human mind means the end of intolerance and the Inquisition. It must be the end of any feeling of superiority which one people might have with regard to others. Progress in no way lies in the disappearance of religious faith or patriotic faith.

Dominating World Competition

Question: In the letter which you sent to RPR deputies you maintained that in recent years our nuclear response force has scarcely been developed. Defense Minister Bourges answered your criticism with a long communique a few days ago. What do you think of that?

Answer: I find a justification for my remarks in the very wording of this reply. After recalling what had been done, particularly when I was in office, Mr Bourges, who is not personally under attack in this debate, adds with reference to the post-1974 period, "It is true that many of these results stem from previous decisions and actions." The defense minister then welcomes the fact that the necessary decisions for implementing previous decisions had been made. If I might venture to say so, that is self-evident. A little later, Mr Bourges says: "It is clear that since 1975 efforts have related to research, in other words preparation for the future." Research does indeed constitute a vital element. Nonetheless, aside from an increase in power and the modernization of devices, there has been no increase in the size of the deterrent force in recent years. Furthermore the defense minister does not answer my serious question on the consequences of the decisions being envisaged on new types of weaponry. And yet this is an important question.

Question: The PS secretary general recently made a statement on our defense policy. What do you think of it?

Answer: First, it makes me think of the days not so very long ago when the PS leaders opened their election campaign by stating that, if they won a majority, their first action would be to destroy our deterrent force and abandon all nulcear weapons. Therefore I can only express my deep satisfaction and, I will venture to say, satisfaction based on the national interest. I am also pleased with regard to the content of what he said. At the beginning of this year I chaired a defense colloquium. Mr Mitterrand has quoted the conclusions of that colloquium almost word for word. I could not ask for more!

Question: Finally, one last question: Will defense and foreign policy play a leading role in your campaign?

Answer: Certainly. We are living in a state of world competition and unless we try to dominate this world competition ourselves nobody will do it for us. There can be no freedom with impotence. There can be no peace with inflation. Struggling against inflation and its social consequences which are as detestable as its economic consequences, in other words struggling for France's recovery, its capacity and its vigor and at the same time wanting French independence, strength and power means working for peace and freedom. There can be no nobler theme for a presidential campaign.

BRITAIN TO REDUCE 'OVERSPENDING' ON DEFENSE

LD081658 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1625 GMT 8 Aug 80

[By Robert Hutchinson, PA defence correspondent and David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] Britain's defence spending is to be cut back by 500 million pounds this year.

This means the Treasury has won what officials have described as "a bitter and painful" battle with the Defence Ministry over escalating defence expenditure.

The cut back emerged in written answers given to MP's today by Defence Secretary Francis Pym and Chief Secretary to the Treasury John Biffen.

Current spending over budget would have risen to 700 million pounds by the end of this year. But now the Treasury has succeeded in getting 500 million pounds lopped off this figure. The government will in turn provide an extra 203 million pounds for defence, part of which will finance services pay rises. Mr Pym indicated the economy measures he will take in a written answer to Tory MP for Woking Mr Cranley Onslow.

Mr Pym said expenditure had been greater than usual so far this year because firms had been making faster progress with defence orders. Bills had been submitted more promptly and equipment prices had increased more than expected.

"I have, therefore, taken steps to rein-in spending. I am also instituting, initially for a period of three months, a moratorium on new defence contracts (save for a few essential exceptions) and I am considering what further measures will be needed to contain spending within the revised cash limit."

Mr Pym also said he had ruled out for this year the introduction of a scheme to help servicemen buy their own homes.

The cutback was also dealt with in a written reply by Mr Biffen who emphasised that the new defence cash limit of 10,442 million pounds "will be a firm ceiling for the year." According to defence sources the cutback will have only a minimal effect on the forces operational capability.

Defence officials emphasise that 250 million pounds of the projected overspending has already been saved by a number of decisions including the cutting of an order for spares for the Blowpipe anti-aircraft missile system; the postponement of test equipment for the Rapier missile and the delay of orders for salvage and harbour service ships for the Royal Navy. Orders for new furniture for service accommodation and offices have also been postponed.

Sources point out that the government has found itself trapped by two conflicting principles of its policy: the need for tight cash limits and the pledge to boost Britain's defences.

There seems to have been a compromise on both sides--cash limits marginally based and defence overspending partly curbed. Economic observers will at least draw some comfort from Mr Biffen's repeated commitment to cash limits, but the immediate effect will be to boost the government's borrowing requirement.

PLO ENVOY MEETS WITH STEEL; MP'S TO VISIT BEIRUT

LD110825 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 8 Aug 80 p 1

[ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT report: "A British Parliamentary Delegation to Meet With 'Arafat Next Month: The First Working Meeting Between Ar-Ramlawi and the Liberal Party Leader"]

[Text] London--A British parliamentary delegation will visit Beirut on 15 September to meet with PLO Executive Committee Chairman Yasir 'Arafat and visit the refugee camps to study the Palestinian issue on the spot and learn the facts about the Israeli aggression.

The delegation will make the visit in response to an official invitation from PLO representative in London Nabil ar-Ramlawi, who recently held a series of contacts with various official and popular British circles to explain the PLO's view on current issues.

The delegation will include young members of the ruling Conservative Party and the opposition Labor Party. They are: Peter Lloyd, A. Marlow, R. Alexander, J. Farr, and A. Clark (Conservative) and W. Ross, A. Booth, W.(McFee) and J. Robertson (Labor).

Ar-Ramlawi yesterday held a first official working meeting with Liberal Party leader David Steel at Steel's office in the House of Commons. The meeting was attended by Liberal MP D. Alton and Roger Seeley, the official responsible for defense and the Middle East in the Liberal Party.

The discussions dealt with Steel's forthcoming visit to Beirut at the head of a Liberal Party delegation and his meeting with 'Arafat on 23 September.

Ar-Ramlawi told the Liberal Party leader that 'Arafat and the PLO leadership and the Palestinian people welcome his visit, emphasizing that the visit will promote Europe's understanding of the Palestinian people's rights and strengthen Europe's support for these rights in the future.

The discussions also broached the European initiative. Ar-Ramlawi emphasized that the Venice statement was a step forward in European policy despite the fact that it does not recognize all the Palestinian people's rights. He also answered Steel's questions on the accusations about destroying Israel and driving the Jews into the sea. Ar-Ramlawi affirmed to Steel that these are part of the Zionist campaigns to distort the image of the Palestinian struggle and the PLO and to maintain European support for Israel at the expense of the Palestinian people's rights.

The fact is, Ar-Ramlawi said, that the Palestinian people are the victim while Israel has become a huge warehouse for weapons, planes and lethal and destructive bombs which are used to kill unarmed children, women and civilians.

Steel said that the real problem at present is the problem of Israeli expansion. Ar-Ramlawi retorted by saying: And the question of the Palestinian people's rights.

Finally, the Liberal Party leader showed complete understanding of the Palestinian issue. He said that the Liberal Party's stance will crystallize after his visit to Beirut and his meeting with 'Arafat.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS RESUME IN NICOSIA 9 AUGUST

[Text] The intercommunal talks aimed at finding a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem resumed in Lefkosa [Nicosia] at 1000 this morning. The Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, Umit Onan, and the Greek Cypriot interlocutor, Ioannidhis, met at the Ledra Palace, which is under the supervision of the United Nations. The meeting was held under the auspices of the UN special representative in Cyprus, Gobbi.

In a statement before the meeting Onan recalled that the disagreement on the issues of bizonality [in English] and security--the main issues on which there was disagreement--was eliminated and that this was a very positive development. Noting that a bizonal and federal solution will be discussed at the talks, Onan expressed the wish that a solution will be found to the long continuing Cyprus problem through serious work.

In a statement to reporters before the meeting, Ioannidhis expressed the belief that this time a peaceful solution will be found to the Cyprus problem. Noting that they are resuming the talks with goodwill and that all aspects of the problem will be taken up, Ioannidhis expressed the belief that the Turkish Cypriot side will act in a similar manner.

In a statement before the meeting, Gobbi said that a positive atmosphere has been created as a result of the understanding shown by the parties and that the important issue is to maintain this atmosphere when substantial talks begin. Gobbi added that in order to achieve this the parties should act in a way which will create an atmosphere of confidence and that they should refrain from activities which might arouse suspicion. He noted that great responsibility falls on the press on the issue. He added that he and the UN secretary general will exert every effort for the peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem. After these statements the talks resumed. The opening statement of Kurt Waldheim was read by Gobbi at the opening session which lasted a short time. After the statement was read the talks were postponed until 16 September. The intercommunal talks had begun on 15 June last year, but had later been suspended on 22 June due to the disagreement between the two sides on the issue of bizonality and the security of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Kiprianou Press Conference

NC091732 Nicosia Public Information Office in English 9 Aug 80 p 1

[Press release of President Spiros Kiprianou's opening statement at 9 August press conference in Nicosia]

[Text] The object of today's conference, the first for a long time, is to inform the people, through the media, on the latest developments.

The opening meeting of the talks took place this morning. The talks started last June and, as is well known, they were recessed because it was not possible to make progress. There were many consultations during this period but no way was found to resume the talks, despite the fact that our side was always ready to participate in talks on the basis of the 19 May 1979 agreement. After many consultations a proposal was made some time ago by Mr Perez de Cuellar, who visited Cyprus, which was accepted by us but was rejected by the Turkish side, even though it had accepted it the day before. The consultations were continued and finally agreement was reached on the resumption of the talks.

I want to underline from the outset that our side has always wanted talks. I also wish to emphasize that my decision to accept resumption of the talks is not due to any pressure, as reported in a newspaper today, but it is the result of an evaluation and assessment of the situation. I judged that the resumption of the talks would be in the national interest and we agreed.

I would like at this stage to comment on certain statements made concerning the talks. Since it was agreed to resume the talks there has been from the Turkish side a string of provocations, provocative interpretations and misinterpretations while an attempt has been made to create the impression that the Greek side has committed itself. This is proved by the fact that they released today the text of the opening statement of the UN secretary general but from this text they have removed the statement saying that all matters are under discussion, and this is indicative of the Turkish attitude. The Greek Cypriot negotiator in announcing our decision to agree to resumption of the talks stated that our target is a solution to the Cyprus problem, a solution of biregional federation, in all its aspects.

I would like to stress that the Greek Cypriot side is going to the negotiations with all goodwill, aiming at a substantive and meaningful dialogue. We do not want talks for the sake of talks. We want the talks to be productive. On our part we are already ready to discuss the substance of all matters. In any case, the whole preparatory work in the constitutional and the other fields will be completed until the actual start of the talks about the middle of September. The working group, the interlocutor with his advisers and with the help of a constitutional expert of world renown, such as the professor of constitutional law Mrs. Palley, who is already in Cyprus, have been working hard so that we may be absolutely ready for a constructive and substantive dialogue.

It has been said and written that we accepted now what we rejected last August. There is some misunderstanding in this. Last August we rejected a proposal for a binding agreement which left no room for the expression of any reservations. I must also stress that that agreement aimed in some way at amending the already existing Makarios-Denktas agreement and the May 19 agreement. It was a binding document. It contained things similar to those contained in the present document but it was a binding document and, what is more important, it did not contain the statement that everything is under discussion. Beyond this, in today's opening statement by the special representative of the UN secretary-general, Mr. Gobbi, clear reference was made to existing differences and disagreements, which was not previously included in any formula. This clearly indicates that on our side there is no advance commitment or condition. In any case we have stated from the start that it is not possible for us to accept advance commitments or conditions for the negotiations. Moreover, yesterday I sent a letter to the UN secretary-general in which I set out our views on all points and reply to letters sent by Mr. Denktas to Dr. Waldheim in which the former tried to misinterpret various terms. Contrary to what Mr. Denktas has done, I shall not for the time being release my letter, for we want to avoid a public dialogue before the start of substantive talks at the negotiating table.

It has been argued that since the opening statement contains the word bi-zonal, we have commited ourselves with regard to this term. First of all, we have not undertaken any commitment and everything is open for discussion as stressed in the statement itself. But apart from this, the word bi-zonal refers in this case to the territorial aspect only. Since the principle of federation is accepted with regard to constitutional structure, it would be inconceivable to have a partition federation. Therefore, the only interpretation that can be given to "bi-zonal" when referring to the territorial aspect is that it means two regions.

In fact in the Turkish language the exact translation of the term is two regions. The term, of course, is not a successful one and we shall explain why at the negotiating table. No such term exists in any constitution of any federation. The term is not constitutional. If by this term the Turkish side aims at promoting a partitionist solution then naturally there will be no room for negotiation. Therefore, it is not at all correct to say that we have accepted bizonality. We have not done so. This word is simply mentioned in the secretary-general's statement concerning the territorial aspect which will be discussed. In any case our interpretation of the term and our views on it are set out in my letter to the secretary-general. Our position is clear: we are seeking a solution on the basis of the two high level agreements, a biregional solution and our suggestion is that there should be no conflict over terms during the negotiation and an effort should be made to see whether it is possible to reach agreement on the substance. If agreement is reached on the substance, then one could discuss terminologies but again the right terminology should be used. Therefore, everything can be set on the negotiating table on the basis of the Makarios-Denktas and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreements.

I regret to say that comments, reports, and allegations continue to be published to the effect that the government and myself personally are opposing the Makarios line. However, it is exactly the Makarios line that we have been implementing. I have been trying to see in what respect we have not been following the Makarios line in handling the Cyprus problem but have not been able to find out. Finally on the question of bizonality, I wish to stress that, if the Turks mean to give to bizonality the meaning given by Mr. Denktas in his letters to the secretary-general and in public statements, then there is no room for progress. I hope and pray that the other side too will come to the talks in goodwill and without prejudices, that it will get rid of terminologies, theories and concepts of the past so that a substantive dialogue may be held with a view to finding a biregional solution on the basis of the two high level agreements which could ensure permanent peace and tranquillity in Cyprus.

We want a fully independent, sovereign, territorially integral, demilitarised Cyprus with strong international guarantees.

I would like to observe that Mr. Denktas' statement that an exchange of populations has taken place and that, therefore, there is not refugee problem is at least unfortunate. He apparently refers to the third Vienna agreement. There is no agreement on the exchange of populations and nobody has the right to deprive the citizens of their right to return to their homes, to move freely or to possess property wherever they want. There may be practical difficulties in the implementation of these three principles but what we must do is to face these difficulties and not to limit rights and interfere with matters of principle. This was the whole meaning of the four Makarios-Denktas guidelines.

The Turkish and Turkish Cypriot leaders talk of an exchange of territories or about border readjustments, as they call them. In the first place there are no borders in federation. What is involved is the creation of two regions on the basis of certain criteria which have already been set. On the basis of these criteria the well known Makarios proposals were made for the establishment of a Greek Cypriot and a Turkish Cypriot administration, as two parts of a federal, united state whose government will have such powers as to ensure this unity. Anything else would mean partition. Needless to repeat that we cannot accept partitionist solutions or legalisation of the faits accomplis.

What we should do is to discuss the powers of the central government and those of the regional administrations. We should discuss the territorial aspect, but on the basis of reason. The principles on the basis of which the territorial question can be settled should be defined.

But one cannot be unreasonable and disregard the population ratio. For if we assume that 30 percent or 35 percent of the territory would be needed by the Turkish side for the state to be viable, then 180 percent or 190 percent of the territory would be required by the Greek Cypriot side for the state to be viable.

I would like to express my gratification at the resumption of the intercommunal talks. I hope that this time a meaningful dialogue will be conducted and that we shall go into the substance of the matters, that a serious discussion and a serious negotiation will take place. On our side we shall display all the goodwill needed for a solution safeguarding the citizens' rights, for a solution based on biregional federation--let me use this word because this is the correct term--solution safeguarding peace and tranquillity in Cyprus.

As regards the prospects of the talks, I would not like to make any forecast, despite the provocative statements being made, because it would not be proper to prejudge anything. It is at the negotiations that we shall see what will be done. If the Turkish provocation continues with statements or articles in the press, either by Mr. Denktas or Mr. Kucuk, or Mr. Soysal or anybody else, we shall confine ourselves only to defending our positions and we shall not be drawn into a public dialogue, with a view to causing tension. On the contrary we shall take care to prevent the creation of tension. We hope that the started dialogue will succeed. If it fails, the Greek Cypriot side will not be to blame. We are determined for an honourable dialogue and we call on the other side to do the same.

Further Kiprianou Remarks

[Excerpts] Speaking at a press conference today, President Kiprianou stressed that our side is ready to discuss the substance of all matters at the intercommunal talks.

Asked whether the other parties represented on the national council, AKEL in particular, share the president's interpretation of the federal solution to the constitutional aspect and bizonal solution to the territorial aspect, Mr Kiprianou answered in the affirmative. He added: I believe that there is unanimity as to the interpretation that should be given to these terms.

President Kiprianou also said he has the impression that this time the UN representative in Cyprus would want to play a more active role than in the past.

Answering another question, the president said that Ankara has encouraged Denktas to resume the talks.

Asked whether the present movement on the Cyprus issue is also the direct or indirect result of the meeting in Ankara among U.S. Secretary of State Maskie, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and Turkish Prime Minister Demirel, Mr Kiprianou said: No, I cannot say that the movement is the result of that meeting. The president added: Nevertheless, it may be the result of the climate created internationally that the talks must resume.

The president said that the Greek Cypriot side is preparing itself for all matters to be discussed, including the consitutional one.

Asked whether both sides have discussed, through the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, any measures for the creation of the suitable climate for an auspicious outcome of the talks, the president said that a good action by the Turkish side would be the withdrawal of Turkish troops from Famagusta and certain other areas along with the opening of the talks. He added: On our part, the measure on social insurance for the Turkish Cypriots, which has been delayed because of objective difficulties, will be implemented shortly.

President Kiprianou said that, in view of the resumption of the talks and related developments, his meeting with Denktas is not imperative. However, he did not rule out such a meeting in the future. Mr Kiprianou also expressed his thanks to Libya and its leader, Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, for their interest in Cyprus.

TA101824 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 10 Aug 80

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Mr Denktas, has said that the intercommunal talks require earnestness, righteousness, responsibility and understanding, and if the Greek Cypriot community would defend the views and thoughts of Mr Kiprianou at the negotiating table then the result would be a negative one and that the responsibility would lie on Mr Kiprianou.

Mr Kiprianou, in a statement to the press yesterday before his departure to Athens, states that the Greek Cypriot side would not accept a bizonal solution and that the exchange of territory or the adjustment of borderlines would not be an issue for discussion at the intercommunal talks.

He reiterated that the Turkish forces should be withdrawn and claimed that there was no necessity of a guarantee by (?Turkey for) any solution to be found to the Cyprus problem. Speaking to a reporter of ANATOLIA Agency, Mr Denktas stated that if Mr Kiprianou was sincere in his views expressed at the press conference yesterday then his consent for the resumption of the talks remained unanswered. [as heard] And it was a pity, Mr Denktas said, if the United Nations invited the parties to sit at the negotiating table by knowing beforehand the stand and policy of Mr Kiprianou. Because, he said, Mr Kiprianou's statement proved that the parties had a divergence of 350 degrees and not 180 on the main issues.

The president stated that Mr Kiprianou wanted to cover the 10 degree distance by putting the clock behind 1974, but he remarked that this was called among his community as in vain and said that his community would in no way share the views of Mr Kiprianou.

Asked whether the intercommunal talks would proceed under these conditions, Mr Denktas replied that he would make an assessment of the situation together with his government and adopte the necessary decision.

Commenting on Mr Kiprianou's statement on the issue of guarantees, Mr Denktas said that there was not even a single Turk who would do without the gurantee of Turkey and added that not only was it not useful but it was harmful to discuss with a Greek Cypriot leader who still maintains that Turkey's guarantee should be withdrawn.

Mr Denktas stated that there was no need for a political squint. He said that two separate governments existed in Cyprus presently and should Mr Kiprianou insist to follow his path then these two governments would be firmly established. Mr Denktas concluded that Mr Kiprianou did not want to settle the issue with a reconciliation with the Turkish community but woud rather leave it to time.

EDEK Leader's Speech

NC101406 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 10 Aug 80 pp 1,2

[Speech by Renos Prendzas, member of EDEK Political Bureau, delivered at both refugee camps of Tsakkileri and Kalavaso--dates not specified]

[Excerpts] The resumption of the talks once again does not raise the least hope for attaining a Cyprus solution. There is not even the slightest indication of optimism for their success. On the contrary, there are many facts that forecast that it will be another failure.

Speaking to tumultuous community gatherings, Mr Prendzas pointed out that the resumption of the talks is the result of concessions made by the official Greek Cypriot side which has accepted the term "bizonal solution for the territorial aspect" and has warned that this concession would further toughen the Turkish side's intransigence. He stressed: Denktas has already started to practice this new toughness, centering it on the issue of the return of the refugees by maintaining that this was solved with the Kliridhis-Denktas agreement in the third round of the intercommunal talks in August 1975, and applying it to the territorial issue in not speaking of a return to, but of an exchange of territory.

Mr Prendzas criticized the fact that after a clear and concise meeting, the talks are being adjourned for a month, and he pointed to some strange coincidences:

1. That the resumption of the talks takes place during the final phase of the American elections, at a time when the Greek-American lobby will increase its efforts to make the Cyprus problem an election issue. The resumption of the talks after our concessions--and following Greece's concessions in the issue of its own and Turkey's relations with NATO--weakens the efforts of the Greek-American lobby and propels its cadres toward disappointment and playing down its own efforts.

2. That the resumption of the talks comes at a time when popular reaction in the West against granting large-scale aid to the Turkish establishment is being aroused and against the Turkish establishment which, with fascist methods, is turning against the Turkish people. Reliable foreign press articles reveal the criminal nature of the Turkish establishment and stigmatize its methods by formulating a common hostile opinion against it denouncing the connivance and responsibilities of all those who support it politically, economically and morally.

3. That the resumption of the talks takes place while reputable international organizations are preparing a major campaign to denounce the merciless actions of the Turkish regime against the Turkish people.

Mr Prendzas stressed that these coincidences are strange and suspect, because the resumption of the talks under these conditions allows the supporters of Turkey to propagandize that supposedly the aid to Turkey also aims at solving the problem of the refugees. Thus immorality is covered with a wrapper of morality and our side practically commits harikiri.

We should strive for substantive talks and not for sensational talks which can only serve others but not the Cyprus Republic and the Cypriot people. Substantive talks will never take place as long as by self-deception we transform the Cyprus problem into a "tyranny of words" or a "wall of words"; as long as we go from one concession to the next; as long as we do not understand that it is not at all accidental or coincidental that Makarios, in the last days of his life, repeatedly stressed that there is no room for further concessions.

I KATHIMERINI: GREECE REJECTS U.S. PLAN ON BASES

AT101324 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 10 Aug 80 pp 1-2

[Text] Sidestepping the suspense of Greek-NATO relations (which are currently under negotiation in Athens) the United States has again asked that absolute priority be given to negotiations for the U.S. bases in Greece. The United States has now shown its haste by notifying the Greek side, through diplomatic channels, that it has already prepared a plan of agreement for the bases and has requested that it be given to the government so that it may have a "first taste" of U.S. positions. The Greek Government has rejected this U.S. position, steadfastly holding to the stand it has repeatedly stressed: that substantive negotiations on the U.S. bases--even more the signing of an agreement--cannot begin until the issue of Greece's return to the NATO military wing is settled.

According to reports, in the plan of agreement which it has requested to submit, the U.S. Government has proposed that the basic part of the agreement which was initialed in 1977 but never implemented be included, as is, in the agreement under negotiation. That part includes the operation, equipment and control of the bases.

Furthermore, the United States has proposed to undertake the settlement--with secret or public appendices which will be adjusted to the main agreement--of other outstanding issues like that of economic and military aid "in harmony" with what is envisaged in the great defense and economic agreement the United States has signed with Turkey.

Perhaps it should be observed at this point that this is the first time since the signing of the U.S.-Turkish agreement that mention has been made to the Greek side about some sort of harmonization of U.S. agreements with Greece and Turkey, especially when it is well known that: first, when U.S. Deputy Secretary of State [title as published] Nimetz was in Athens, the U.S. side had expressed the wish that economic relations between Greece and the United States be settled with agreements independent of the defense agreement whereas, as is well known, the defense agreement with Turkey also contains economic terms, and second, the U.S. side had expressed the viewpoint that the U.S.-Turkish agreement should not be taken into consideration to the letter when formulating the corresponding Greek-U.S. agreement. The new U.S. Government intention of achieving "harmony" in the settlement of certain issues of the Greek-U.S. agreement in accordance with the corresponding settlement of the same issues in the U.S.-Turkish agreement can be interpreted as a U.S. maneuver aimed toward at least accelerating the discussions which will concern the future of their bases in our country.

Of course, the extent to which this backtracking in relation to the previous U.S. position may produce positive results is uncertain since it may be offset by some other more serious U.S. intention that the U.S. may put forth as an issue for negotiation.

Specifically, the U.S. side appears to want fresh negotiations on the meaning and content of the special mission and goals of U.S. bases in Crete.

Provided relevant reports are true, something of this sort would mean a U.S. wish to expand the role of these bases within the framework of developments in the broader Middle Eastern area, on the one hand, and the political instability prevailing in Turkey on the other.

Finally, the current presence of the NATO supreme military commander, General Rogers, in Washington should not be considered unrelated to the two outstanding issues of Greek--and U.S.--foreign policy: NATO and the U.S. bases.

According to reports from Brussels, the general is in daily contact with NATO headquarters in the Belgian capital and with his two staff officers who are in Athens; he asks to be briefed on developments covering the "plan-formula" which will allow Greece's return to the NATO military wing. He does this in order to direct accordingly his relevant briefings to the U.S. Government and the "pressure tactics" which the United States believes it can follow vis-a-vis the Turkish and Greek sides.

The United States believes that it is "entitled" to such tactics because it seems that after the meeting in Ankara there was an agreement in principle, through the mediation of U.S. Secretary of State Muskie, for the elimination of Turkish obstacles and Greek objections to Greece's quick return to NATO.

It is stated that after this agreement General Rogers was given the "green light" to prepare his new plan which, however, he does not want to present--and the U.S. Government has consented to this--as an official plan before it is unofficially accepted by both Greece and Turkey.

This is so because the U.S. general does not want his new initiative to be linked with the failure of his predecessor General Haig and the first plan he himself had submitted.

As I KATHIMERINI has already reported, this unofficial plan has already been discussed in principle in Athens between two senior Greek military people and two of General Rogers' staff officers, and has been submitted to Ankara by the general himself. The plan has also been elaborated upon by General Evren and the same NATO staff officers who came to Athens.

As a result of the Turkish amendments, the unofficial plan is being reworked these days by Rogers' staff officers and two senior Greek officers.

The Greek side, however, does not seem satisfied with the new Turkish interventions which, with all possible means, put forth the issue of "boundaries" in the Aegean. At this moment the discussions for a "plan-formula" which will facilitate Greece's return are at their most critical point.

22 SENTENCED TO DEATH FOR KAHRAMANMARAS RIOTS

[Text] The Kahramanmaras incidents trial has ended. The Adana, Kahramanmaras, Gaziantep, Adiyaman and Hatay martial law tribunal has sentenced 22 of the accused to death and 14 to life imprisonment. The court's verdicts were announced in Adana today. The verdicts were read at the court session held at the Adana sports hall from 0800 until 1230. Of the accused 22 received death sentences, 14 received life sentences, 327 were sentenced to prison terms of up to 15 years, 5 received prison terms of between 20 and 24 years, and 414 were acquitted.

The court also ruled the rejection of the prosecutor's claim that the NAP was guilty, and his request that the Kahramanmaras branch of the Idealist Clubs organization be closed.

The martial law court tried a total of 822 suspects in connection with the Kahramanmaras incidents, of whom 509 were in custody; arrest warrants had been issued for 12 in absentia; 2 were fugitives and 174 were released during the trial, which had started on 4 June 1979.

During the Kahramanmaras incidents, which had lasted from 19 to 25 December 1978, 111 persons had been killed, a large number of persons had been wounded and 917 shops, offices and residences had been destroyed. Also, various goods and cars belonging to public institutions as well as private persons had been destroyed. The material damage caused by the incidents amounted to $150 million, which the state paid.

DEMIREL, NAP LEADER CALL FOR EARLY ELECTIONS

Demirel Statement

TA091618 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 9 Aug 80

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said today that instead of having the prestige of the Turkish Grand National Assembly damaged because a president cannot be elected and because the legislature cannot convene, the nation should have early elections.

Demirel was speaking to reporters after his weekly meeting with Acting President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil. The prime minister noted that no results have been achieved in connection with the five laws that were to be enacted to fight anarchy and terrorism more effectively. He said that being united and in solidarity does not mean merely standing side by side but acting together. He said: It is impossible not to be grieved in the face of so much bloodshed. Something must be done about this, and the thing to be done is to introduce the bills to the legislature.

Demirel noted that the president of the Turkish Grand National Assembly criticized that assembly because it had not been able to convene during the past 3 days. He expressed his concern about those remarks, and added: A lot of things can be said about the functioning of the two houses. However, it is impossible to understand remarks that are damaging to this institution which must be defended till the end. Let me ask you if it is the fault of the assembly as an institution if it cannot elect the president of the country? It cannot elect a president because its arithmetical composition is not right. It is neither me, nor the RPP leader nor the assembly president who can set this arithmetical composition right. Only the nation can set it right.

The prime minister said that merely convening the assembly was not enough to have a president elected and that this method had been tried for a long time. He added: Instead of criticizing the assembly we must look for solutions. (?The solution) is to have the nation elect a president and to hold early general elections.

Demirel said that his party would discuss the early elections issue at the joint meeting of the JP Senate and National Assembly groups on 18 August. He said that a proposal to be drawn up regarding the matter would later be submitted to the assembly chairmanship. He added: If everybody agrees on that, the nation can become the referee once again and give new blood and force to Turkey's administration.

Demirel said that if a decision was taken on early elections, then they could be held on an appropriate date between 15 October and 15 December.

Recalling that the mayoral elections in Malatya and Usak were held peacefully, Demirel stressed that allegations to the effect that there was no election security were simple pretexts for not having elections.

NAP Leader Turkes

TA091708 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 9 Aug 80

[Text] NAP leader Alpaslan Turkes has said that the Turkish Grand National Assembly must decide to hold early elections so that the people's belief in democracy will be upheld and the citizens respect the system. Replying to the letter sent to the political party leaders by National Assembly President Cahit Karakas following the assembly chairmanship's extraordinary meeting, Turkes said his party agreed with the view that the country was in a serious condition.

He stressed that the responsible authorities had not yet been able to fight, with the necessary seriousness and determination, the terror being perpetrated both inside and outside Turkey by circles that want to destroy the Turkish state and divide the Turkish country. He said the Turkish Grand National Assembly must take the necessary measures.

Turkes said the NAP National Assembly group had a helpful attitude regarding the functioning of the assembly but that the latter is not able to ratify the laws that could solve the problems of terrorism and economic crisis. That is why, he said, it would be useful if the assembly decided to hold early elections.

ERBAKAN URGES GOVERNMENT TO SEVER RELATIONS WITH ISRAEL

TA091551 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 9 Aug 80

[Text] NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan has said that the presidents of 44 Muslim countries will hold a summit meeting this month and decide to impose an oil embargo on countries that do not sever relations with Israel. That is why, Erbakan reiterated, the government must sever its relations with Israel as soon as possible.

At a news conference in Ankara, Erbakan discussed his visits to Iraq and Kuwait. Describing Israel's decision on Jerusalem as an unjust attack, Erbakan stressed that even West European countries did not side with Israel at the United Nations in the face of this injustice. The NSP leader pointed out that the Islamic countries will carry out certain sanctions in the face of Israel's recent move regarding Jerusalem and that the first step will be the oil embargo Iraq and Saudi Arabia will impose on countries that accept Jerusalem as Israel's capital. He added that at the summit to be held this month, the Islamic countries might decide that their funds in the World Bank and the IMF should not be used for loans. Outstanding loans should be immediately suspended if granted to countries that do not sever relations with Israel.

Erbakan said the necessary measures taken following the terrorist incidents that had occurred along the Iraqi border and in Kirkuk are being portrayed as cruelties committed against innocent people. Erbakan said that it is completely untrue that Turks are being treated cruelly in Iraq only because they are Turks. He added: We are warning the government: If we have innocent brothers who are being treated cruelly as a result of racial discrimination then the government should courageously protect their rights. But, the government should not damage our relations with Muslim countries by being taken in by Zionist propaganda.

Commenting on domestic policy issues, Erbakan said that the government has not fulfilled any of its promises, but that, on the contrary, it is opening wounds further.

Erbakan explained that the government is still in power because a "national solution" government that would replace it has not yet been prepared. He stressed that the nation is suffering greatly and has reached the point of explosion. He added that Foreign Minister Erkmen is trying to damage relations between the Islamic countries and Turkey, is not approaching the incidents constructively and cannot tolerate constructive approaches. Erbakan stated that this is why his party submitted an interpellation against him.

ASSEMBLY CHAIRMANSHIP CALLS ON LEGISLATORS TO COOPERATE

TA061652 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 6 Aug 80

[Text] A statement issued by the National Assembly Chairmanship Council has called on the Turkish Grand National Assembly to take the measures to make the state powerful, to strengthen democracy and to insure the tranquillity of the citizens in a bid to save the Turkish state and reestablish its unshakable strength.

The statement, which was prepared in accordance with the decisions made during the National Assembly Chairmanship Council meeting yesterday and which was sent to political party leaders, parliamentary group leaders and legislators, was released to the press by Assembly President Cahit Karakas.

Pointing out that the country is currently facing an atmosphere of confusion and anarchy unprecedented in the history of the republic, the statement noted that those who wish to divide Turkey and create strife among the Turkish people are engaged in cooperation and unity of action both inside and outside the country in a bid to attain their goals.

The statement said: The attackers who aim to destroy the Turkish state and its established order, the parliamentary democratic system, have in fact engaged in a war against the state and the Turkish people by continuously increasing their dimensions and assuming new forms. In addition to the thousands of citizens who are losing their lives through terrorist bullets inside the country, sabotage and attacks are being directed against our foreign representatives and missions and shots (?are fired at) our state. There are overt and treacherous attacks directed against the independence of the state and the integrity of the country and the nation. Under these circumstances, the duty falls on the Turkish Grand National Assembly and its members.

The National Assembly Chairmanship Council statement said that there should be no doubt that the current Grand National Assembly will fulfill its duty with fervor for the sake of the country and the nation in the same way this duty was fulfilled in the past when the country was facing extraordinarily difficult conditions. Pointing out that regardless of whether they are in power or in opposition, the political parties are obliged to assist in the duties of the Turkish Grand National Assembly, the statement recalled that this is the raison d'etre of political parties.

Stating that, despite the obligatory article in the constitution, the Grand National Assembly has failed to conclude the presidential election during its sessions since 22 March 1980, the statement said: In view of the fact that the biggest duty of the Grand National Assembly consists of electing a president, and that the administration of a republic without a president is inconceivable, it is necessary that the Grand National Assembly fulfill this fundamental and important duty urgently and rapidly. The failure to discharge this duty is hindering the functioning of the Turkish Grand National Assembly and damaging its prestige.

The statement noted that it is necessary that political party groups cast aside for some time all their partisan thoughts and assist in solving the problem in order to insure the fulfillment of this duty. Expressing the view that the healthy functioning of the Assembly and the Senate can be possible only through a sincere dialogue between the government and the opposition, the statement noted that laws pertaining to combatting anarchy and terrorism and laws with a social content could be passed in such an atmosphere as well.

The statement noted that everyone is asking the question: If the Turkish Grand National Assembly--with all its parties and members--does not cooperate to fulfill its duty now in the atmosphere of anarchy, terrorism, secessionism and inflation which is currently facing the country, then when will it cooperate? The statement concluded: The aim is to save the Turkish state and reestablish its unshakable strength. If necessary, the Turkish Grand National Assembly should work night and day with the spirit and fervor of the national struggle years and take the measures to render the state powerful to strengthen democracy and to insure the tranquillity of the citizens in order to achieve these aims.

The National Assembly Chairmanship Council considers it a national duty to make another appeal to all legislators, primarily political party leaders and parliamentary group leaders, to assist in making the Grand National Assembly and the National Assembly really workable in the belief that a great duty and responsibility falls on them.

DEMIREL SENDS RAMADAN MESSAGE TO DENKTAS

TA110939 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 11 Aug 80

[Text] Turkish Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that Turkey supports the efforts to establish a bicommunal, bizonal, independent and nonaligned federal state in Cyprus. Demirel sent President Rauf Denktas a message on the occasion of the holiday of Ramadan.

In his message, Demirel wished the Turkish Cypriot community well on the holiday of Ramadan, and said: No one doubts that the Muslim Turkish Cypriots have attained peace and tranquillity and the possibility of living in humane conditions after having shed their blood and tears and having been subjected to suffering, injustice and oppression for many years and that they appreciate the value of this. We will not consent to anything that could disrupt this situation.

We admit the importance of reaching a political solution to the Cyprus problem as soon as possible. We support the efforts to establish a bizonal, bicommunal, independent and nonaligned federal state in Cyprus. We are also confident that our Turkish Cypriot brothers will succeed in their struggle for economic development.

GOVERNMENT SCRAPS PLAN TO HELP REBUILD VIETNAMESE RAILRAODS

LD111431 Brussels LE SOIR in French 8 Aug 80 pp 1, 5

[Colette Braeckman report: "Belgian Government Scuttles Great Plan To Repair Vietnamese Railraods"]

[Text] Belgium will not help Vietnam to repair the north-south railroad; this means that Belgian industries will lose a contract worth BF1.35 billion. This is the result of a decision made at the latest meeting of the foreign policy ministerial committee, when it was decided to suspend BF350 million in aid to Vietnam intended for the building of a locomotive repair workshop.

The real project, however, was much bigger than that: during his visit to Vietnam in 1977 Mr Outers, who was cooperation minister at that time, concluded an agreement with Hanoi under the terms of which Belgium, which has a well-known tradition in the sphere, would at least partly have repaired the railroad linking North and South Vietnam. The execution of the project was to be entrusted to a Belgian consortium headed by the La Brugeoise Company from Nivelles and including the Charleroi Electrical Engineering Shops, Cockerill, and the Anglo-Belgian Corporation (a Ghent Company).

Since then the political situation has changed in Vietnam and also in Belgium. The Vietnamese Army has intervened in Kampuchea to defeat the Khmer Rouge and installed Heng Samrin's regime. And the Vietnamese regime has taken a tougher line folling the relative failure of its approach to the West. In Belgium, while the boat people's exodus and the Kampuchean tragedy were arousing great emotion, Mr Eyskens replaced Mr Outers at the Cooperation for Development Ministry.

Mr Eyskens proved sensitive to his voters' reactions. That is why he gave some of the money provided for cooperation with Vietnam to finance the settling of Southeast Asian refugees last year and also why he opposed money for the Vietnamese railroads this year.

No Military Support for Development

The Cooperation for Development Ministry stresses that this decision was dictated by two considerations: The first is economic: the development cooperation budget has been reduced by BF1.27 billion this year (out of a total of BF24 billion, in other words, 5 percent of the total) and severe cuts have had to be made in many projects.

In addition and above all, the development minister did not think that the improvement of the north-south railroad was a priority project aimed at meeting the population's vital needs (a disputable opinion since it is a vital artery for Vietnam's economic development and for the transport of food).

In addition Brussels maintains that it has received reports that this railroad would also serve to transport troops and equipment to Kampuchea, and consequently it is thought that the Belgian taxpayer's money should not be used to help Vietnam on the military plane, even indirectly.

Indeed, although this project is an important contract for the above-mentioned enterprises, 60 percent of the finance was to come from the Belgian state (through interstate credits, Compromex and the Cooperation for Development Ministry).

It has been specified, however, that there is nothing to stop this contract's being concluded on a strictly commercial basis without any state backing. However, it is clearly not very likely that Vietnam will still want to invite Belgian enterprises to cooperate in its economic recovery under these circumstances.

This is particularly unlikely since all the agreements concluded at the time by Minister Outers, which were advantageous to both Vietnam and Belgium, prompted only delays and reservations in Brussels.

The political arguments put forward by the Cooperation for Development Ministry, despite their apparent logic, would be more credible if these scruples were also applied to other countries, such as Indonesia, for instance, which has annexed the former Portuguese colony of Timor, now decimated by famine, and which is blocking or misappropriating humanitarian aid.

Of course, for good measure, Mr Eyskens has canceled two projects in Bolivia amounting to BF165 million. However, aside from the fact that Vietnam's case is not comparable, there is reason to wonder whether the systematic break in economic relations and the freezing of political relations with Hanoi will not eventually have the opposite effect to the one sought, namely, to increase Vietnam's dependence on CEMA and the Soviet Union which, given the West's reservations, is the only country effectively helping Vietnamese rebuilding.

BRUSSELS ISSUE PENDING FOLLOWING REGIONAL AUTONOMY DECISION

[Jacques van Solinge report: "Flemmings and Walloons: Autonomy Outlined; Brussels on the Sidelines"]

[Excerpts] Between Monday night and Tuesday morning Flanders and Wallonia obtained what they wanted, namely, autonomy in many political decisionmaking spheres. However, it is autonomy in principle to the extent that the financial means they will have seem very limited. The Walloon "region" will have an executive responsible to an elected regional assembly while Flanders will be more of a "community" since the Flemish community's new institutions will absorb the regional power and a single assembly will run the Flemish executive. This leaves Brussels, whose fate is to be settled before the next commune elections (October 1982) and which, meanwhile, will be governed by a regional executive kept within the central government; this executive will not be answerable to a regional assembly.

It was, finally, shortly after 0400 Tuesday morning that the Chamber of Deputies won the right to go on vacation after approving the special bill relating to the communities and regions by 156 votes (majority) to 19 (opposition) with 5 abstentions. The abstentions included the Brussels Socialist and Christian representatives, and the Malines Socialist Jef Ramaekers, whose intention was to protest the self-satisfaction shown by the Christian People's Party and by Flemish Catholic Jan Verroken, who was not reassured adequately by the content of the plan.

Nonetheless the reform passed is incomplete. When parliament starts its new session in the fall the majority parties will have to try to reach agreement on the Brussels region's future. Throughout the marathon debate which the chamber has just held, the spokesmen for the various political parties have constantly positioned their pawns in a way which is, to say the least, chaotic. The Dutch speakers stressed the sacrosanct nature of Flemish Brabant, including the six communes on the outskirts of Brussels which have a system of language facilities. They also stressed their determination, as did former Christian People's Party Minister Renaat van Elslande, to make Brussels a "real capital" in which the two communities will be treated equally and will be able to determine their future freely." The French speakers, with various degrees of emphasis, tried to keep open all the options offered by the future negotiations.

This is the meaning attached by Andre Degroeve to the Brussels' Socialists abstention: "There is no reason to give up, and we warn all those who might be tempted to speculate on a failure of future negotiations, either by stepping up extreme statements or abusing the law of numbers."

In the Walloon regionalists' camp there was clear satisfaction, although it was moderated. As Socialist Party [French-speaking] President Andre Cools said, not only must the Brussels problem be settled but the Flemings and Walloons only have a legal and institutional framework which must now be expanded. The state reform has been made possible; it must now be realized.

NETHERLANDS

DE VOLKSKRANT URGES REJECTION OF EUROMISSILES

LD111541 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 9 Aug 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Strategy"]

[Text] Mutual deterrence forms the avowed aim of nuclear armament in the United States and the Soviet Union: Nuclear weapons are not manufactured to be used but to deter each other from using them on pain of mass destruction. A nuclear attack will be countered with a nuclear attack. Our peace is largely based on that cynical balance.

President Carter's latest decision to change U.S. nuclear military strategy--populated areas must not be the target of a possible U.S. nuclear retaliation but rather the Soviet Union's military and industrial centers--is a threat to that balance, and hence to peace. The reason is not that missiles fired at industrial areas and military targets would make the inhumane character of a nuclear attack less inhumane. Most Russian industrial centers--like those in our country--are the most heavily populated. The moral dilemma of the loss of millions and millions of human lives remains prominent.

Carter's "new" strategy--it was advocated by Defense Secretary McNamara in Ann Arbor in 1962 and was again confirmed by his colleague Schlesinger in 1974--increases insecurity in the world by its offensive nature. In order to be able to destroy the mostly well-protected military targets, powerful nuclear weapons are necessary, but they must also be extremely accurate.

This development had been coming for a long time but there is reason to fear that, now that Carter has proclaimed the so-called counterforce to be the official U.S. strategy, the nuclear arms race will increase greatly. The strategy which aims at destroying the whole Russian retaliation arsenal in one strike contains the danger that in a serious conflict the Russians will press the notorious button first.

Carter's announcement of the new nuclear strategy also has repercussions for Western Europe. The Pershing II and cruise missiles, whose deployment was decided by NATO in December last year, are both capable of reaching Soviet territory. Both weapons can therefore serve in the framework of the new nuclear strategy. Since these endanger general security in the world, European security would be served by rejecting them. At the same time, incorporating Pershing II and cruise missiles in this strategy would mean that both weapons could less readily be the subject of arms limitation negotiations with Moscow. That is unacceptable. All the more reason to reject the deployment of both types of nuclear weapons in Western Europe.

LEADERS SEND MESSAGES TO SOVIETS ON TREATY ANNIVERSARY

[Excerpt] Bonn, 11 August--Leading representatives of the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union have paid tribute to the Moscow treaty, concluded 10 years ago, as a valuable basis for relations between the two states. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, president of the Bundesrat Ulrich Klose--deputizing for Federal President Karl Carstens--and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher as well as Soviet head of state Leonid Brezhnev, Premier Aleksey Kosygin and Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko have exchanged messages of greetings to mark the signing of the treaty on 12 August 1970.

"This treaty created the basis on which it has been possible to achieve a substantial amount toward improving relations between our countries," writes Schmidt. In this way, important contributions have been made toward political stability in Europe and hence to preserving peace. Of particular importance in this respect is the political dialogue between the two governments, which has only been able to achieve the intensity (?enjoyed today) on this basis. Schmidt's letter to Brezhnev and Kosygin states: "You know how highly I regard our repeated discussions, including those which we held on 30 June and 1 July this year amid the serious international situation around us." The future calls for the delineated course to be continued during the coming years.

Genscher Greetings

LD111734 Hamburg DPA in German 1632 GMT 11 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn--On the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the Moscow treaty, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has sent a message of greetings to Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko. It says that since the treaty was signed, relations between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union have developed "to an exceptional degree." This applies to many spheres, not in the least the political dialogue which has proved to be particularly valuable. Genscher expressed the hope that this development can be continued and that the "serious, current international situation" will improve.

OFFICIAL GDR INVITATION FOR SCHMIDT VISIT DELIVERED

[Text] Bonn--The GDR leadership today handed over to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt the official invitation for the planned meeting in the GDR with Erich Honecker, GDR State Council chairman and SED chief. Honecker has invited the chancellor for a visit on 28 and 29 August to Lake Webellin, north of Berlin, and not to the GDR Baltic resort of Dierhagen, near Rostock, as was originally thought.

Honecker's invitation was delivered today to the minister of state in the Federal Chancellor's Office, Guenter Huonker, by the GDR's permanent representative in Bonn, Ewald Moldt. Moldt and Huonker held an almost 2-hour discussion on preparations for the Schmidt-Honecker meeting, after which Moldt confirmed the date of the meeting to journalists and the unexpected choice of venue of Lake Werbellin. Moldt would give no details of his discussion on preparations for the, as he called it, "working visit" by the federal chancellor [word indistinct]. With regard to the meeting, there is an "abundance of questions" to discuss. The diplomat announced that he will hold further talks on this with the Federal Chancellor's Office. According to Moldt, the date for the next discussion has not yet been set. Asked why the GDR had decided to invite the chancellor to Lake Werbellin and not, as originally expected, to Dierhagen on the Baltic, Moldt would give no reply. Nor did he comment on whether Minister of State Huonker had been surprised at this choice of venue.

Schmidt on Economy, Visit

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 9 Aug (DPA)--In the opinion of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Germans need have no fear of Japanese export successes. Schmidt, in an interview in today's HAMBURGER ABENDBLADT, says he has no doubt that FRG businessmen and workers will be able to meet the international economic challenge. "Provided we adjust to the new situation in time, and are prepared to rethink and learn; I see no danger." The chancellor said that a general reduction in working hours in the Federal Republic to a 35-hour week is out of the question for the time being. It is something that cannot be achieved within the next 5 years. "But I think I shall see the 35-hour work week during my lifetime," he said.

Concerning his impending meeting with SED chief Honecker, the chancellor said that he will not embark on this trip "with a full wallet," because the current budget situation does not allow it. A lot of progress in politics is being paid for with currency. Improvements in relations with the other part of Germany had also, in part, been paid for in currency, "and no doubt we shall continue to do that in the future. But our current financial situation is not exactly rosy and Herr Honecker is aware of this."

STRAUSS INTERVIEWED ON EAST-WEST RELATIONS

DW110836 Bonn DIE WELT in German 11 Aug 80 pp 1, 2

[Rolf Goertz interview with Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister-president and chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU--date of interview not given]

[Text] Malaga [Spain]--WELT: Mr Minister-President, how do you assess the forthcoming meeting between Schmidt and Honecker on the Baltic sea?

Strauss: Unfortunately I cannot help but assume that the Schmidt-Brezhnev, Schmidt-Gierek, and Schmidt-Honecker meetings are part of an election campaign script. What is at stake is not so much political results but the publicity effect. Besides, the meeting was planned by Honecker. Hence it is part of Moscow's strategy which seeks to extricate Bonn as well as Paris from the moral front of the West, with the objective, first of all, of drowning the NATO decision on the closure of the arms gap. To this end Moscow is employing both Warsaw and East Berlin. Ultimately the inter-German dialogue serves to relieve the Soviet Union. What would be attainable, desirable results would be genuine normalization and, despite the anomaly of two German states, ensuring the meeting of people in freedom, the exchange of information and of publications.

On our side, State Secretary Gaus, as the federal commissioner for the relations between the two German states, has been involved in the preparations for the meeting. This is why I read with shock in DIE WELT that Mr Gaus does not deem a lowering of the age limit for visits from the "GDR" to the Federal Republic attainable, unless a sizeable sum is paid for this. Nothing could describe the anomaly of the relationship between the two German states more plainly. If Helmut Schmidt signs any cultural agreements or traffic agreements under these preconditions, then this no longer is a summit meeting but at best a meeting at the ground floor.

WELT: What would you do if you were chancellor?

Strauss: The question is whether the dialogue should be conducted at all under the present circumstances. And in this connection, Honecker is not the advocate of German interests--nor of the people of the "GDR"--but the mere executive organ of the Soviet will for power.

I would very much like to tell Mr Honecker quite clearly that one cannot talk of a normalization of relations as long as a death strip exists, as long as the wall, the order to shoot with automatic weapons exist. If the freedom of travel is denied and the slight traffic must be compensated with large sums of money--the release of prisoners costs hundreds of millions of marks--you cannot talk of normalization. I would not sign any technical agreements for this reason, rather having those sign them whose official competence it is to render such signatures.

WELT: What do you anticipate from the CSCE followup conference in Madrid?

Strauss: Security, cooperation, and detente are good goals, worth working for. What constitutes the structural fault of the CSCE is the fact that East and West understand entirely different things by these terms. These words are merely used as shells for completely different concepts. Helsinki and CSCE form instruments which can be used for an improvement in the relationship between Bonn and East Berlin in only a very modest way. By means of the whole variety of CSCE instruments the communist side intends to place its regime in East Berlin as equal to the Federal Republic--equal not only in the meaning of international law but also in the moral sense.

But two theses are coinciding in Madrid: the Polish proposal on a disarmament conference--it is being supported by the Soviet Union--and the French proposal on a European disarmament conference. Both proposals have hit upon the CSCE which thus is plunged into the danger of taking an entirely different direction than originally planned, such as was the case in Helsinki in 1975 with the Final Act. Thus, the reality of the world may be forgotten over the conference clamor.

WELT: How do you perceive reality?

Strauss: I came out with my warning prior to the signing in Helsinki, because I consider detente indivisible. Developments that took shape even then, for example in Africa, simply should not have been ignored. Helmut Schmidt, however, considers detente divisible. Let me recall this: In August 1975 when the Final Act was signed the civil war in Angola already was clearly taking shape. The communist underground movement was bound to come out the winner because it was massively supported by the Soviet Union whereas the Western-oriented freedom movement in Angola was deplorably forsaken by the West.

Consequently I feel that the developments in Afghanistan must not be pushed aside in Madrid in November. What's happening in Afghanistan is genocide.

WELT: Even prior to the CSCE conference the Socialist International will be meeting for a congress, likewise in Madrid. The main point on the agenda will be disarmament.

Strauss: The Socialist International has specific concepts for the future of Europe. On the domestic level this is the socialist social system in all European states. Thus, Mitterrand said that there will either be a socialist Europe or none at all. On the foreign policy level they are pursuing the gradual neutralization and thus the gradual dissociation from the United States. In this context it is necessary to mention Moscow's three psychological weapons: coexistence, disarmament, and detente.

WELT: Just like the SPD within the framework of the Internati al the CDU/CSU, too, supports its sister parties abroad. During the most recent parliamentary crisis your Spanish friends demonstrated that they are forming the stabilizing factor in Madrid. How do you judge the politician of the Spanish right, Frage Iribarne, who is similar to you in various respects?

Strauss: You cannot judge politicians in Spain today by the criterion of whether they served Franco in the past and after Franco's demise changed over to the left or whether they served Franco and then settled in the center or center-right. I do not want to name any names of the leftists here. Hence you cannot call some the vanguards of democracy and the others the preservers of the tradition of the authoritarian regime.

I came to know Frage Iribarne during the Franco era as a critical politician. He is a liberal conservative who alone is capable of relieving the governing center party in the middle. There are forces on the other side, to be sure, which aspire to a cooperation between Socialists and Communists in a new people's front against the background of the Socialist International. And as a remedy against this politicians like Frage are indispensable. And yes, I do not want to call him a man of the right.

WELT: It is the second time that politicians in Spain and Portugal are drawing attention to the Soviet Union's vivid interest in the islands of the Central Atlantic, the Azores, Madeira, and the Canary Islands. As early as 10 years ago Moscow succeeded in having Spain set up a fishing base for the Soviet Union in the Canary Islands. Spain's foreign minister said at the time: This is our reply to the Ostpolitik of the German Social Democrats. Now an expansion of the conflict zone threatens as a result of the developments in the Western Sahara. Do you, Mr Strauss, advocate an expansion of the NATO area?

Strauss: If you mean the Polisario by the Sahara crisis, then all I can say is that a politician occasionally neglects to say what he knows. The Spanish-Soviet agreement naturally is one of the dangerous effects of Ostpolitik. As for the NATO area, the northern Tropic of Cancer as the official NATO border hits the African mainland in Morocco. Hence the Mediterranean and the Canary Islands are included. Therefore I am not among those who want to take part in a long debate on a change in the NATO boundaries.

But it is my view that NATO's classical maritime powers--which do not, however, include the Federal Republic--should be made capable of also representing the interests of the NATO countries in the Persian Gulf and in the southern Atlantic.

WELT: The following question in concluding this interview: Do you believe that a Bavarian Minister-President Strauss would be able once again to persuade Bonn and thus also the European allies to make a decision such as that on the closure of the arms gap?

Strauss: First of all, we will make every effort to win the elections. Second, the CDU/CSU will always exert an essential influence on Federal Government policy--be it in the front line or not. But each year longer that the Socialists stay in government in Bonn brings us a step closer to the mitigation of the liberal-democratic basic system and to Germanization. What I mean by Germanization is formally staying in the Western alliance with the moral mitigation of the commitments within that alliance.

REPUBLICAN SENATORS MEET WITH SCHMIDT, GENSCHER, PARTY LEADERS

[Text] Bonn, 11 August--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has stressed the importance of U.S. cooperation with Europe and the Federal Republic. During a discussion with four U.S. Republican senators who arrived in Bonn today during a European tour Genscher described German-U.S. cooperation and European-U.S. cooperation as a particularly important element for the West's independence and security. With regard to the Federal Republic's role within the alliance, Genscher said: "We are part of the West and will remain so."

Senators Howard Baker, Henry L. Bellmon, Thad Cochran and William B. Cohen were received earlier by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. According to a government spokesman, the main topics of this meeting were general issues relating to the current situation of world politics and problems of joint security and energy supplies. They also discussed the future of joint European and U.S. relations.

The CDU gave a luncheon for the U.S. politicians. In a brief address Alois Mertes, the foreign policy expert of the CDU parliamentary group, said that as far as foreign policy is concerned there continues to be a number of common interests between the government and opposition in Bonn. Basic differences arise in evaluating the goals of Soviet policy. According to Mertes, these are assessed realistically by the CDU/CSU.

Genscher also discussed in detail with the Americans the topic of disarmament. Progress in the sphere of arms control is important. The Soviet occupation of Afghanistan has not changed the topicality of this need. Although Western policy is only credible if it refuses to accept Afghanistan, there is at the same time no reason to alter the comprehensive Western arms control proposals of last December. There has never been any intention of conceding any advantage to the other side.

The four senators also held meetings in Bonn with CDU General Secretary Heinrich Geissler and Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski. Geissler stressed that the Federal Republic's ties with the West, German-U.S. friendship and NATO partnership in security policy must constitute an inalienable part of German foreign policy. German-U.S. friendship should not be reduced to a temporary relationship of expediency. It has been founded on common basic values and political interests.

According to the SPD, Wishnewski and the senators agreed that during the coming years the close alliance between the United States and the Federal Republic will be an essential factor in an active policy of security and peace. This holds true regardless of the question of who rules in Bonn and Washington.

POLL SHOWS ATTITUDES TOWARD RELATIONS WITH U.S.

DW311232 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 30 Jul 80 p 14

[Excerpt] Attitude of the Population Toward the United States

A public opinion poll on the relationship between the United States and the FRG, carried out by the Bonn-Bad Godesberg Institute for Applied Social Sciences (INFAS) on behalf of the Press and Information Office of the Federal Government, shows in a comparison of trends that the United States' image in the view of the German people, and especially the German people's confidence in the United States as an alliance partner, generally has not changed in comparison with 1974 (survey period: 21 April to 18 May 1980).

Attitudes and Opinions Concerning the Relationship Between the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany (INFAS, 1,609 Cases)

1. Assessment of the relationship to the United States through a chronological comparison:

FRG citizens think a bit more of the United States in the spring of 1980 than they did in 1974: In an assessment on a graduated scale (+5 to -5) the mean image obtained for 1980 is 2.0 (1974: 1.9).

Some 59 percent of FRG citizens--including 65 percent of SPD followers, 57 percent of CDU/CSU followers and 53 percent of FDP followers--judge the relationship between the FRG and the United States to be "very good" and "good" (1974: 61 percent).

Some 74 percent of FRG citizens (1974: 70 percent) expect that the United States would come to the aid of the Federal Republic and West Berlin in crisis situations. The number of those anticipating the assistance of the United States "in any event" has clearly increased--from 46 percent in 1974 to 64 percent in 1980.

Some 75 percent (1974: 65 percent) consider the presence of U.S. troops in Western Europe necessary; 33 percent--10 percent more than in 1974--advocate greater financial contributions than heretofore to that end, if necessary, so as to guarantee the continued presence of U.S. troops in the Federal Republic.

Some 75 percent--exactly the same as in 1974--regard the United States as the most important FRG ally in NATO (12 percent France, 2 percent Great Britain).

Some 33 percent (1974: 37 percent) note a declining interest on the part of the United States in Europe; 42 percent--or 14 percent more than in 1974--advocate the view that the convergence of the European member states has had a favorable effect on U.S.-European relations.

While 66 percent of FRG citizens in 1974 felt that the essential interests of the FRG were very much or considerably in harmony with those of the United States--only 25 percent regarded them as being different--57 percent regard them as very much or quite in harmony in the spring of 1980; 35 percent see different interests.

2. Topical judgments concerning the policies of the United States and the FRG:

The U.S. course of action toward Iran--prior to the abortive attempt to liberate the hostages, the severance of diplomatic relations and the initiation of an economic boycott--is judged as "absolutely right" and "right on the whole" by 66 percent of FRG citizens; 25 percent consider this "rather wrong." Some 79 percent of the persons interviewed deeming the U.S. course of action rather wrong would have considered earlier and harsher reactions toward Iran appropriate.

A total of 60 percent of the people feel that the Federal Government "fully and wholly" and "on the whole" 30 percent "partially" 5 percent "hardly" supports the Iran policy of the United States. Some 57 percent advocate the view that the Federal Government should support the United States in all measures against Iran and sever diplomatic relations with Iran immediately as well, while 31 percent feel that the Federal Government should not heed the United States so much, but should rather pursue an independent policy jointly with the other European states because we depend on oil from Iran.

The Federal Government's reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan is considered "absolutely right" and "about right" by 83 percent, "rather wrong" and "completely wrong" by a total of 13 percent. Of the persons interviewed who deem the Federal Government's reaction wrong, 59 percent advocated a more energetic, 34 percent a more reserved, reaction by the Federal Government.

A total of 57 percent feels that the Federal Republic as a member of the Western alliance "wholly and fully" and "on the whole" supports the measures initiated by the United States against the Soviet Union; some 33 percent feel that this support has rather increased (11 percent: rather decreased) in the past several weeks.

The foreign policy of U.S. President Carter is assessed rather skeptically: 21 percent (19 percent of SPD followers and 27 percent of the CDU/CSU followers) agree with it; 23 percent disagree; 48 percent partially agree.

DENMARK

AGRICULTURE MINISTER JUSTIFIES LARGE GRAIN SALES TO USSR

LD111545 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 6 Aug 80 p 6

[Tidningarnas TELEGRAMBYRAA--Ritzaus Bureau report: "Denmark: More Grain to Soviet Union"]

[Text] Copenhagen--Compared with other EEC countries, Denmark has exported an inordinately large proportion of its grain to the Soviet Union during the U.S. grain embargo of that country. Agriculture Minister Poul Dalsager admitted this Tuesday. Dalsager explained the large export by "Denmark's closeness to the Soviet Union." Danish grain shipments to other countries in Eastern Europe have also been considerable during the U.S. boycott. The agriculture minister stressed that only permitted sales were involved. "In sympathy with the United States the EEC countries decided to stop granting export licences for grain to the Soviet Union from 10 January. But Denmark had outstanding licences up to the end of April," he said.

FINLAND

FINLAND ESTABLISHES AMBASSADORIAL RELATIONS WITH ZIMBABWE

LD110835 Helsinki HELSINGIN SANOMAT in Finnish 5 Aug 80 p 5

[Excerpts] Diplomatic ties at the ambassadorial level have been established between Finland and Zimbabwe. The diplomatic ties took effect from the beginning of this month. The Finnish Government has already approved a 15 million markka development credit to Zimbabwe. During the Rhodesian conflict Finland gave humanitarian help to the Patriotic Front, the different branches of which form the core of the independent Zimbabwe's Government.

For the time being Finland's diplomatic representation in Zimbabwe is being handled as a subsidiary accredition from the Zambian capital, Lusaka. The Foreign Ministry confirms that "Zimbabwe's position as an observation post in following the situation in southern Africa and the commerical interest being shown toward the country have in a relatively short time induced many countries to set up missions in Salisbury and to start developing contacts in general."

NORWAY

FRYDENLUND SAYS 'ARAFAT WILL NOT BE INVITED TO NORWAY

LD111355 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 Aug 80 p 8

[Text] Norway will not invite PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat to Norway. Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund made this statement yesterday in response to PLO Scandinavian information chief Daud Kaloti's announcement that 'Arafat is interested in visiting the Scandinavian countries. Norwegian authorities have not had contacts on the political level with the PLO, Frydenlund pointed out, and repeated that Norway's attitude to the PLO is dependent on the PLO view of the central principle in Norwegian Middle Eastern policy, namely, the Israeli State's right to exist. The foreign minister also pointed out that a different Norwegian view of the PLO is thus dependent on a change in the Palestinians' attitude to Israel and their involvement in the Middle East peace process. Frydenlund also stated that the Israeli resolution to make Jerusalem the country's capital does not mean that Norway will move its embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

TURKISH CYPRIOT OFFICIALS CRITICIZE KIPRIANOU STATEMENT

Denktas Meeting With Gobbi

TA111754 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 11 Aug 80

[Text] President Denktas received today the United Nations special representative in Cyprus, Mr Hugo Gobbi. The meeting, which lasted about an hour, was also attended by the assistant special representative, Mr Gorge, and the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, Mr Onan, and his adviser Mr Ertekun.

In a statement at the end of the meeting, President Denktas said: We brought to the notice of the special representative of the secretary general the damaging statement of Mr Kiprianou, because if this statement has any value whatsoever then Mr Waldheim's opening statement is negated. President Denktas stated that if Mr Waldheim's opening statement for the agreement was valid, then Mr Kiprianou's statement glares as an outstanding monument of self-contradiction. He stressed that both could not be valid and could not form the basis of the talks. He said that it was thought that it was a duty of the Turkish Cypriot side to draw the attention of the secretary general to this development particularly in view of the appeal made on his behalf on the 9th of August at the opening session to the effect that the parties should refrain from any initiative susceptible to endangering the continuation of the talks.

Kucuk Message

[Text] The acting prime minister, Mr Kucuk, has said that the Greek Cypriot leader, Mr Kiprianou, had no right to embargo the wishes for peace of the two national communities in the island. In a Bairam message issued today, Mr Kucuk repeated the determination of the Turkish Cypriot community to defend its freedom and democracy and the determination in its efforts for economic self-sufficiency. He pointed out that the world had now understood from the statement made by the Greek Cypriot leader, Mr Kiprianou, immediately after the resumption of the intercommunal talks that he was the one responsible for obstructing a final solution. He recalled that the inaugural message of the United Nations secretary general had been prepared following the taking of the views of the two communities, but, Mr Kucuk said the statement by Mr Kiprianou immediately after the intercommunal talks was not only against all diplomatic rules but also all rules of sincerity, morals and responsibility.

Mr Kucuk said that this situation was weakening the Turkish Cypriot hopes for the future of the talks and solidified the Turkish Cypriot distrust in the Greek Cypriot leadership. He concluded by saying: Nevertheless, the Turkish Cypriot community will await with its customary tolerance for the Greek Cypriot leadership to return to commonsense.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN REFUSES TO COMMENT ON DENKTAS REMARKS

NC120645 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 12 Aug 80 p 8

[Text] The government spokesman has declined to comment on the fresh statement by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas, who said that "intercommunal talks would be jeopardized if the Greek Cypriot side shares Mr Kiprianou's views."

The spokesman reiterated that the Cyprus Government will avoid holding a public dialogue with Denktas.

CYPRUS, LIBYA SIGN CULTURAL, INFORMATION AGREEMENTS

NC081532 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 8 Aug 80

[Text] Cultural and information agreements were signed today between Cyprus and Libya. The two agreements were signed on the behalf of Libya by Information Secretary Al-Hijazi, while on the behalf of Cyprus Foreign Minister Rolandhis signed the cultural agreement and Director of the Public Information Office Khristodhoulou signed the information agreement. Rolandhis handed Al-Hijazi a message from President Kiprianou for Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi. He also expressed the thanks of the Cypriot Government for the interest being shown by Libya. He said that the cultural agreement will contribute to further developing the already existing ties and friendly relations between Cyprus and Libya. In reply, Al-Hijazi said that his country's interest in further developing closer Cypriot-Libyan relations can be seen by its cooperation in the cultural, technical, informational and other fields and by the presence of a Libyan delegation in Cyprus. Al-Hijazi expressed the hope that other bilateral agreements would also be signed and added that a Cypriot delegation would gladly be received in Libya.

Speaking after the signing of the information agreement, Khristodhoulou stressed that this agreement constituted yet another confirmation of the efforts to further strengthen and improve the friendly ties between Cyprus and Libya in all sectors, which he said would continue to be strengthened even more. The Libyan information secretary described the agreement as the outcome of the cooperation and mutual understanding which exists between Libya and Cyprus.

LIBYAN INFORMATION SECRETARY MEETS WITH DENKTAS

TA081751 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 8 Aug 80

[Text] The Libyan information minister, Mr Al-Hijazi, has ended his talks in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus today with a call on President Denktas. In a statement at the end of the meeting, President Denktas said that Libya was a very good friend of the two national communities in Cyprus and their motherland. He added that the latest initiative by Libya had resulted in the early resumption of the Cyprus intercommunal talks. Meanwhile, it has also been announced that Libya has donated 25,000 Cyprus pounds to the federated state for the repair of several mosques. Libya has also underwritten the traveling expenses of 100 Turkish Cypriots who will be going to Mecca on pilgrimage.

Al-Hijazi Departure Statement

[Excerpts] Libyan Information Secretary Al-Hijazi left Cyprus today at the end of a 10-day visit. In a statement before his departure, the Libyan information secretary said that his country's initiative regarding the effort to find a Cyprus solution had yielded positive results. Mr Al-Hijazi said that the intercommunal talks were resumed yesterday and that he believed yesterday's meeting of the two interlocutors will have a favorable influence on furthering the course toward a resolution of the Cyprus issue. He also said that the role Libya played, under the auspices of the UN secretary general, was a good beginning toward finding a solution. Al-Hijazi said that his country has nothing to gain from its initiative and added that it has undertaken this initiative because it wishes what the Cypriot people wish, namely the unity, independence and integrity of Cyprus. With regard to his talks with the officials, the Libyan information secretary sadi that the talks were successful. He added that a Cypriot Government delegation will visit Libya in September to further study the promotion of cooperation in the commercial and economic sectors. Al-Hijazi was seen off at Larnaca Airport by the commerce minister, the director general of the Foreign Ministry and the Libyan charge d'affaires.

ECEVIT EXPRESSES SUPPORT FOR SECURITY BILL, CITES VIOLENCE

Accusation of JP Obstruction

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that his party will support the special agenda proposal prepared by the National Assembly president and will exert the necessary effort to enact the bills concerning domestic security. At a news conference in Ankara, Ecevit said that his party exerted the necessary effort for the discussion of the bills in question but that the JP did not exert any efforts on the issue. Noting that the government wanted to enact every bill without any amendments, Ecevit added that there were also JP legislators who were opposed to the final form of the bills. Ecevit noted that the JP was hindering parliamentary activities and the discussion of the bills in question to avoid supervision.

Pointing out that the interpellations were not submitted in a bid to obstruct parliamentary activities, Ecevit continued: Had the JP and the government not obstructed parliamentary activities for the last few days the five bills on security would have been enacted by this evening. JP and government evasion of supervision is the only reason the bills were not enacted. Noting that supervision and legislation were the duties of the parliament, Ecevit said that the government wanted to enact the bills it favored verbatim, without any amendment. He added that this attitude showed how the government mentality was devoid of democracy.

Pointing out that the government was more concerned about its future than preventing anarchy, Ecevit continued: So long as this government remains in power and so long as it continues its current attitude the escalation of terror and anarchy in Turkey cannot be prevented. How can this escalation be prevented as long as a government that uses fugitive rightist militants as masked informers remains in power? Who is to prevent terror in a country at a time when judges, public prosecutors and impartial policemen can no longer exercise their duties for fear of their lives?

Expressing his views on the joint taxation of the salaries and compensation of health personnel, Ecevit said that a new directive reversing the decision on the cuts of health personnel fringe benefits should be issued.

Bairam Message

TA111624 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 11 Aug 80

[Text] In a congratulatory message issued on the occasion of the Ramadan Bairam, RPP leader Bulent Ecevit expressed grief over the escalating violence in the country. Ecevit said that the number of persons being killed in incidents of violence is increasing daily, cities and quarters are being divided and that many families are being forced to move from city to city and from quarter to quarter in order to insure their security and the peaceful education of their children. Noting that citizens are still able to live in peace in regions where secessionists and instigators have not been able to penetrate, that Turkish citizens abroad are able to live together and that youths are able to serve in unity under the same flag in the army, Ecevit recalled that until 5 or 6 years ago the Turkish nation was united.

Ecevit noted that the people were not the source of the problems and that those who wished to weaken and exploit a nation and a community throughout history were trying to instigate secessionism and internal strife. Ecevit added that this plot was being staged by forces both inside and outside Turkey.

Noting that those who were concerned about the strengthening of Turkey in the region and its good relations with Islamic countries were instigating terrorists and secessionists inside Turkey, Ecevit added that some of those were avenging themselves on Turkish representatives abroad. Ecevit said that instigations and plots from the outside can be terminated if terror and secessionism inside Turkey are overcome.

Ecevit noted that the region in which Turkey is situated is the major target for plots. He added that, however, the plots of those who have attempted to occupy and annex Jerusalem by exceeding the limits have recoiled and that the plotters will observe that the Islamic world is gradually uniting in the name of peace. Noting that this unity will gradually positively affect the whole of the human race, Ecevit concluded his message by congratulating the nation, the Turkish Cypriots and all Muslims on by Bairam.

CUMHURIYET ON RESUMPTION OF CYPRUS INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

NC111119 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 9 Aug 80 p 3

["The World Today" column by Ali Sirmen: "A Positive Step"]

[Excerpts] The Cyprus intercommunal talks are being resumed today at the Ledra Palace, which is under UN control. As is known, the talks were suspended on 22 June 1979 when the Greek Cypriots turned down a bizonality-based settlement proposed by the Turkish Cypriots.

The first question that comes to mind is why is Kiprianou now accepting the proposal he turned down last summer? One could find the answer in the Greek Cypriot sector and in the international arena. The pressures from the left, particularly from AKEL, have recently been intensified. Under the circumstances, Kiprianou found it difficult to maintain his uncompromising stand. More and more people among the Greek Cypriot community began to realize the long-term dangers of allowing the present situation to persist.

The international factors that brought Kiprianou to reason are: the Libyan initiative. Libya's offer to act as a mediator in the Cyprus dispute along with the reason mentioned above greatly alarmed both Kiprianou and the Western world and undoubtedly compelled Kiprianou to come to the negotiating table under the auspices of the UN secretary general.

The Western world has obviously considered the mediation of an anti-imperialist country like Libya, which has a good reputation among the nonaligned countries, and whose views the West does not embrace, to be a disadvantage. This has resulted in intensive pressure on Kiprianou.

No matter what the reasons may be, the Greek Cypriot side's acceptance of a settlement envisaging bizonality as well as its return to the negotiating table are important positive steps toward solving the Cypriot dispute.

The outcome of these negotiations depends on the goodwill that both sides are prepared to show at the negotiating table.

VENUE CHANGE FOR SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING 'POSES PROBLEMS'

LD121222 Hamburg DPA in German 1118 GMT 12 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--The surprising change by the GDR leadership in the venue for the meeting between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED chief Erich Honecker to Werbellinsee, north of Berlin, poses "great problems" for the Federal Government. Bonn government circles said today that it is now being considered whether this new proposal for the location of the meeting will be acceptable. Further talks with the GDR are necessary to clarify details of the GDR invitation.

One of the main problems for the Federal Government concerns the route the chancellor will take to Werbellin. According to the information available so far, Schmidt will certainly not travel via East Berlin, because this route would affect questions of Berlin's status and could be seen as an enhancement of the GDR capital.

Despite the problems that have arisen, it is considered certain that Schmidt will meet Honecker in the GDR on the planned date. Following the change of venue by the GDR, Schmidt is now likely to insist even more strongly on deciding the manner and way in which he travels to the meeting.

POLL SAYS GERMANS ADVOCATE REUNIFICATION

[Heinz Vielain article: "Two-Thirds of the Citizens for Reunification"]

[Text] Bonn--Sixty-seven percent of FRG citizens advocate the view that the Federal Government should continue expressly endeavoring for German reunification as per the provision of the Basic Law. This is the result of a public opinion poll on the German problem carried out by the Emnid Institute which has now become known, just a few days prior to the meeting of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt with SED chief Erich Honecker in the "GDR".

In a report submitted to the political parties in Bonn the pollsters state that for the first time questions have been posed involving alternatives to the reunification provision. While the vast majority wants to adhere to German unity, 28 percent of the people interviewed advocated the view that reunification ought to be given up. Reportedly 5 percent declined to comment on the issue.

According to the Emnid Institute 32 percent of the SPD followers are for abandoning reunification. Yet 64 percent want to stick to the provision of the Basic Law. As for CDU/CSU followers, 69 percent advocate reunification while 27 percent no longer want to insist on it.

As for the FDP voters, 80 percent advocate sticking to the objective of reunification. Only 17 percent want to reconcile themselves to Germany remaining divided.

Adherence to reunification is advocated most strongly in Schleswig-Holstein, Lower Saxony (79 percent each), Hesse (77 percent), and Bavaria (69 percent). The figure for North Rhine-Westphalia is only 58 percent.

While in a poll 14 years ago 31 percent believed that Germany's unity could be attained within the following 10 years, the corresponding percentage now is a mere 4. While 20 percent at the time harbored hopes for reunification within the following 20 years, only 8 percent are so optimistic now.

Of the people interviewed 52 percent believe that there will not be any reunification in the foreseeable future. In 1966 only 38 percent were so pessimistic. At present a mere 18 percent of FRG citizens believe in Germany unity in the remote future.

In summation Emnid states that 14 years ago, when "the birth of a new Ostpolitik" took shape, nearly every third FRG citizen still deemed German unity possible for the following decade. Considering the decline in optimism the pollsters make the following comment: "It is all the more surprising therefore that only about every fourth FRG citizen (28 percent) pleads for renouncing German reunification for good."

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON CURRENT CAMPAIGN, FOREIGN ISSUES

[Chief editor Werner Holzer and Bonn correspondent Eghart Moerbitz interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at his vacation resort on Brahmsee, Schleswig-Holstein--date not given]

[Text] FR [FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU]: Mr Chancellor, how much do you trust the public opinion pollsters, anyway? Or asked another way: Do you, too, believe that the elections in October are as good as over? If the figures which are being quoted right now are right, doesn't it seem peculiar to you to enter into an election campaign which actually has been decided already?

Schmidt: I do not think that the election campaign has already been decided. It is also necessary to draw attention to the fact that we are still 8weeks away from election day, and by then quite a lot can still shift. I believe that especially at this time a great deal of political manipulation is being done in Germany with public opinion polls.

FR: Why so?

Schmidt: Some people would like to suggest that everything is over and done, just to mobilize the CDU/CSU electorate that way, and at the same time to demobilize part of the Social Democratic voters, to give them the feeling that their vote does not matter anymore, that they might as well stay at their campaign site and not worry about voting by mail in advance; for everything is all done and settled anyway.

Surprised About Strauss

FR: And what does this look like in figures?

Schmidt: To return to the manipulation once more: In 1976 the CDU/CSU scored 48.6 percent in the Budestag elections whereas the SPD came out with 42.6 percent. This was a difference of 6 percentage points. If a swing of 12 percent were to take place on 5 October and not one of 6 percent, then this would be a landslide unprecedented in the history of the Federal Republic of Germany. And yet this would not even suffice for an absolute majority of the SPD; for the CDU/CSU with its 48.6 percent did not have any absolute majority, either. Hence I do not believe that the election campaign is all over. But I do see quite clearly that the chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU so far, against my expectations to be sure, has not gained any ground. This amazes me. After all, it is normal that the nearer the election day draws the more a leveling [einflachung] occurs. If the top man lags behind his party in popularity he tends to gain ground. This would have had to be expected of Strauss. Where the top candidate runs ahead of his own party he either loses ground or his party makes up for lost ground. To that extent the preliminary election campaign did not have the effect that I would have expected.

Induced by Troublemakers

FR: How do you explain this?

Schmidt: I believe that one of the reasons lies in the change in the tactics of the opposition's chancellor candidate. As late as in the fall, in winter, and then in spring he verbally attacked and criticized the Federal Government in every possible field, but in the field currently most important to the voters--security policy, foreign policy, world politics--he essentially adapted to what the government said. He failed to maintain these tactics.

Nor did he keep up the tactics of a calm states man's demeanor with which he had started out. He allowed himself to be induced by troublemakers and by unpleasant and in part indecent disturbances to come out with verbal invectives. This did not allow him to continue the calm statesman's attitude any longer.

I assume that these two changes in the tactics of Mr Strauss and his election campaign staff have harmed him and, if you want to put it this way, benefited the social-liberal coalitition. But all this is 8 weeks before election day, and everything may well yet change. Besides, a competition for votes is taking place between the two coalition parties which has not yet been decided at all.

FR: Any way you look at it, you prestige among the FRG voters meanwhile has assumed a dimension which surely makes many Social Democrats happy but also scares some people. Even if we assume that the phrase the chancellor's party is inappropriate, isn't it true that the danger increases that too great a gap might exist, or already does exist today, below Helmut Schmidt, or even after him, between the public and the party?

Schmidt: With respect to the next 8 weeks until election day I do not consider this a danger. For the subsequent 4 years it could be a danger if matters stand as you say, Mr Holzer. I doubt that this is how they are.

On the one hand, it is natural that a chancellor who does his job well gains authority. This was true for Willy Brandt, this was true for Adenauer. I do not want to put Erhard and Kiesinger on the scales so much since both of them were chancellor for less than 3 years.

Thus this is natural, to begin with, and would be true also for any other chancellor doing a good job. Now if you visualize other Social Democrats in my place--and I can very well imagine several as chancellor--then I would deem it quite normal for them to attain such a growth in authority or such a so-called chancellor bonus after a while.

FR: Would you care to name any names?

Schmidt: I can imagine several people, and I am saying this in all earnestness.

Have I Forgotten Anybody?

FR: Can the voter reckon that you will remain in office in any case, provided the elections turn out as expected?

Schmidt: The chancellor is elected by the Bundestag for a term of 4 years, and there is no reason whatsoever to imagine anything else.

FR: Could we learn anything about the composition of this cabinet? We are always asking Mr Strauss, and for a change we would like to hear from you who will, or will remain, finance minister, for instance.

Schmidt: At this time I fail to see any reason at all to change anything in the personnel pillars of this cabinet. This is true for the foreign minister, this is true for the finance minister, the minister of justice, the defense minister--who have I forgotten? I cannot imagine anything of the sort. After all, people doing a good job must not be made the subject of talk simply because we have the silly season right now or because we are in an election campaign.

FR: And you do not plan any change in the cabinet structure, either?

Schmidt: If I had any such plans I would not tell you about them today. But I fail to see why any significant changes should be made in the structure of functions in the distribution of responsibilities, within the cabinet.

FR: Is combining the transport and postal affairs ministries into one something that ought to be changed?

Schmidt: I do not consider this a question of principle.

FR: A question concerning the economic situation. It is obvious, isn't it that initial signs of a decline in the economic boon are appearing in our country as well. Do we need any state support programs, and if so, how can we finance them?

Schmidt: The second oil price explosion of the summer of 1979 and of last winter has plunged nearly all the world into payments difficulties and some countries even into payment problems, and that at a time when the problems of the balance of payments, which had been caused by the first oil price explosion of 1973/74, had not even been overcome in most states. Consequently it is conceivable that the effects on the 1980/81 economic development will not at all be negligible.

What is more, a profound recession in the United States--which has emerged there autonomously and not perhaps by world economic interrelations--exerts an effect on all the United States trade partners. Its orders are going down slightly. This applies to most trade partners of the United States which also are our trade partners. The extent of the U.S. recession, with an unemployment rate twice as high as ours, with price increases more than double those in our country, hence is bound to have its effect on the Federal Republic as well.

A Record With a Crack

FR: So some cause for worry after all?

Schmidt: There is no reason whatsoever in our country to be worried over this state of affairs. During the past 6 years we have demonstrated that we have been able to cope with this relatively well and, compared with the other great industrial societies, even best of all. This will also hold true in the future.

At the moment I do not see any need for talking publicly about economic development programs. Last but not least, in foreseeing the U.S. recession we decided upon a considerable tax cut for this winter. Not even Messrs Strauss or Stoltenberg can rescind it. It will be taking effect at exactly the right time. We might say that it not only serves taxation justice for the payers of wage and income taxes but also and especially has a high-ranking purpose in economic development policy. We deliberately did not plan this tax cut for 1 July 1980--which would have been conceivable technically as well--but for 1 January 1981 because we deemed it desirable for that time for reasons of economic development policy. Hans Matthoefer's borrowing plans naturally have long included the losses in state tax revenues effective 1 January 1981, and for the time being I would like to wait and see what effect in economic development policy this tax cut will have.

FR: The second catchword which the opposition plays up time and again is state indebtedness. What about it?

Schmidt: We have been hearing for nearly 10 years now the criticism that our country's financial management is not solid--currently we are hearing this from Messrs Strauss and Stoltenberg, formerly from Mr Kohl and before him from Mr Barzel. This is an eternally recurrent tune, and it seems to me as though this record has a crack and the same groove is being played over and over again. This has nothing in common with reality In reality there is, barring Switzerland, not one great Western industrial state having a similarly low degree of state indebtedness, if it is measured by the sole criterion by which it can be measured, namely by the people's income of 1 year as the expression of the economic potential of a country.

It is particularly piquant that the criticism comes from two minister-presidents whose parties have been governing their two federal laender, namely, Bavaria and Schleswig-Holstein, for decades without interruption but which have been unable to develop the structure, the potential of their laender in such a way that these two laender could make do without financial subsidies by the other federal laender and without any annual--voluntary, mind you--special allotments from the federal budget. It is grotesque that Messrs Stoltenberg and Strauss complain that the Federal Government allegedly is running into too much debt, even though they are among those who come begging to Bonn at regular 12-month intervals. They could do some borrowing themselves instead of the amounts we let them have from Federal Government funds, with the consequence that we would correspondingly reduce the borrowing by the Federal Government.

Let me add one last remark. It is absolutely normal that a state borrows funds for its investments--just as it is a foregone conclusion for a skilled worker with the Opel Corporation to contract a mortgage, and not just one but two or even three, if and when he buys a one-family home or a row house. Whatever he takes on his shoulders depends of course, on what he can pay from his income each month. This goes without saying. It is similar for every company that does any investing. Beyond that it is absolutely normal that companies take up credits even for their current operations. The Federal Government borrows only to an extent less than its total investment spending.

FR: Aren't you afraid that there will be a murderous distribution struggle between the Federal Government and the laender in the next 4 years?

Schmidt: Basically this is an entirely different question. But this is true: The CDU/CSU majority of the Bundesrt, whose approval is necessary for all tax distribution laws, throughout the seventies has enforced a gradual shift of the tax revenues from the Federal Government to the laender. It managed to push the revenue share of the Federal Government down to less than 50 percent, to its own advantage. And then this Union majority goes and laments that we are forced to contract more credits in view of growing tasks. Our tax revenue share in 1980 will amount to a mere 48.6 percent; in 1970 it still came to 54.2 percent. Consequently it is not surprising that with 57 percent of the net borrowing by all public authorities the Federal Government is ahead today. In 1970 we could still be satisfied with 17 percent. This must not remain so in the long run. But this is not a topic restricted, say, to the election campaign in 1980, but rather is a topic for German domestic policy throughout the eighties.

Tensions Narrow Down the Leeway

FR: In connection with what you keep calling international crisis management Ostpolitik has assumed a new quality, not least as a result of the fact that the Federal Republic in the past several years simultaneously gained leeway and had to take over additional responsibilities. How much leeway do your interlocutors in Eastern Europe have vis-a-vis their leading power?

Schmidt: This is not easy to judge. No doubt Ceausescu has the greatest leeway, and he uses it too. That of the others does not have the same dimension in every case. The stronger the international tensions which have been dominating the year 1980 since the invasion of Afghanistan, since the conflict between the United States and Iran, since the postponement of the ratification of SALT II, to the degree the tensions aggravate the situation, the foreign policy leeway of the East European states and governments no doubt is curtailed.

Conversely, the following is applicable: To the degree in which these dangerous tensions marking the world in 1980 can be ironed out, absorbed, put under control, the leeway of the East European governments will increase again. In addition to a general interest in peace they have, of course, a special interest in defusing these international tensions. This additional, special interest can be felt quite clearly.

FR: Perhaps we can expand on this question a bit in connection with the Polish party chief's visit with you which is forthcoming. Everybody knows that you have obviously found in Mr Gierek a partner with whom you can also frankly discuss difficult international issues.

Schmidt: This is correct.

FR: I do not want to talk about the world-political leeway of Mr Gierek but of a problem which is being openly discussed in Poland as well, namely how much freedom of movement he has left in view of the obviously oppressive economic problems in his country. In what way can the Federal Republic contribute toward helping the Poles stabilize their situation?

Schmidt: The People's Republic of Poland indeed is in a difficult phase of its economic development. This mostly has not been caused by the Polish economic and finance policies but largely by the immense world economic difficulties which affect not only Poland but which one can also study in the United States of America, in Italy, in England and which also exert an effect on the Federal Republic of Germany, albeit to a far lesser degree. To this extent Poland is not a special case.

In the first dramatic phase of this world economic structural crisis in 1974, 1975, the Federal Republic of Germany helped a number of states. It also extended help to a number of states in the second dramatic phase triggered by the second explosion of the oil prices in the summer of 1979 and in the winter of 1979/1980. What we have done, for example, was an increase in development aid hitherto unprecedented in history, a move which came hard to us under financial-economic aspects. Our global economic responsibility compelled us to do that despite the opposition's charge that we are running into debt. Naturally we could have done less borrowing if we had increased development aid to a lesser degree. But we also considerably helped some states that had been hit particularly hard in other ways. Among them was Turkey. We would very much like to help the Poles too, but by our institutional options we do not see any chance of doing that from state to state.

I am not betraying any secret if I say that not only the Federal Republic but also the U.S. Government, in fact any government in the Western world, are very much interested in seeing the Poles well off and in having international private bank consortiums raise credits for Poland--under considerable German participation.

FR: Mr Chancellor, aren't you afraid that in the event of an attempt to help the Poles now, in this difficult situation, the opposition will charge you in the election campaign with supporting the Gierek regime without receiving any return concessions?

Schmidt: It is conceivable that such a charge might be leveled. But even greater foolishness is conceivable. You cannot make your international policies dependent on election campaign polemics.

FR: Soon after you receive your visitor from Poland you will be going to the GDR, Mr Chancellor. In these days Mr Honecker is talking with the Soviet head of party and state, and actually it is obvious to ask the same question: How great is Mr Honecker's leeway in his talks with you? You said a while ago that the more critical the international situation the smaller the leeway. On the other hand, one does have the feeling that some of the East European heads of state and party in this crisis situation of 1980 have greatly utilized at least the leeway they do have.

Schmidt: The meeting between Mr Honecker and myself had been publicly envisaged as early as last December. At first a date in early 1980 had been planned. As a consequence of the international aggravation a number of meetings then were postponed. The Poles were the only ones who nevertheless had their foreign minister go to Bonn as planned. All these governments basically are very glad, of course, that Giscard d'Estaing, the French president, and the German chancellor jointly with the foreign minister succeeded in parallel activities in overcoming the lack of dialogue phase that had broken out between Washington and Moscow. As I indicated a while ago, 1980 continues to be characterized by dangerous tensions extending all over the world. But thank God we have a bad phase behind us; the two world powers are talking again. This is a success for the French and German foreign policies of the past several months, and naturally this is favorably accepted in Eastern Europe as well, with respect to their own foreign policy leeway.

In other words: Without the meeting between Giscard d'Estaing and Brezhnev in Warsaw, without the meeting between Brezhnev and Schmidt in Moscow, without the talks between Muskie and Gromyko--which will be continued in the near future--a meeting with Gierek or with Honecker presumably would not have been held under particularly favorable circumstances.

Natural Gas Also for West Berlin?

FR: Can we hear something about the composition of your delegation?

Schmidt: The date has not yet been finalized. The East Berlin side has known for months that I would very much like to have Graf Lambsdorff along, just as I have requested that Mr Mittag, who is responsible for the economy over there, be present on the East Berlin side. But nothing complete and final has been said about the composition of the delegations on either side.

FR: Surely energy problems will be discussed during your meeting with Mr Honecker. Do you see any chance that the new, planned natural gas pipeline from the USSR can also be used to supply West Berlin, or will it bypass Berlin entirely?

Schmidt: I do see a chance.

FR: A brown coal power plant near Leipzig possibly will be discussed as well. Will it be built? Is a connection to West Berlin planned? Is the DM 0.5 billion under discussion for this project too high or appropriate?

Schmidt: Mr Holzer, this is going too much into detail to be answered by me at this time. I am giving you a truthful answer.

FR: Free travel between the two German states is always on the inter-German agenda and probably also at the meeting which you will have with Mr Honecker in the GDR.

Schmidt: This is correct.

Interest in Travel Options

FR: Suppose the GDR does not want to, or cannot, generally reduce the age limit for travel by GDR citizens. What progress in this field do you deem feasible? I may perhaps remind you that group travel by GDR citizens has been under discussion and cost settlements via inter-German trade.

Schmidt: If I knew all the answers to your questions I would not need to talk with Mr Honecker. But I do want to affirm that the GDR leadership is by nature particularly interested in an enhancement of the economic exchange including energy policy, and that our side is particularly interested in broadening mutual travel activities--I mean mutual, not just from West to East but also from East to West.

FR: The dialogue is also important for the climate.

Schmidt: Not only that. It is also important for the matters at issue.

SCHMIDT EXPECTS NEW ROUND OF EAST-WEST ARMS TALKS

LD131000 Hamburg DPA in German 0908 GMT 13 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt expects a new round of negotiations or talks between West and East on disarmament to start in late autumn or winter. In an interview published in NURNBERGER NACHRICHTEN today, the chancellor stated that he does not think there is any danger that the prospects for talks on nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe, resulting from Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev's offer of talks during his visit to Moscow, will evaporate. Immediately after his return from Moscow the process of preparing for such talks between the United States and Soviet Union, in which the European states were involved, had got underway. This process is being continued without delay and with the necessary discretion.

Commenting on the world economy and the economic situation in the Federal Republic Schmidt said: "There is no justification for pessimism. In that I agree with the Federal Bank." The Federal Republic and other important industrial countries like Japan and France are, despite negative influences emanating from the United States, still expecting economic growth.

DIE WELT CRITICIZES EGON BAHR'S DISARMAMENT INITIATIVE

[Article signed VL: "Bahr's Initiative"]

[Text] Egon Bahr's latest armament policy drive toward founding "a citizens' initiative against any further armament" is amazing, for generally speaking citizens' initiatives are organizations expressing civic or outsider [unbuergerlich] dissatisfaction with the respective government policy. But which government is it that the SPD's federal manager wants to be seen pressured by mobilizing those on the streets?

What becomes rather plain after Bahr's interview is that he does not think of anti-armament initiatives where one gets armed for aggressive purposes, namely in the Soviet Union. This is why the SPD's federal manager owes an explanation to the public of whether he believes that the Federal Government, which is borne by his party, is frivolously stepping up armament or whether he is of the view that we should disarm unilaterally, or whether he wants to give a perspective to the party within the party, namely the leftist SPD wing, which according to general expectations will return to the next Bundestag with doubled strength.

Such an "initiative," by the way, already exists, though it is not a very civic one; it is the "Committee for Peace and Disarmament," which is a people's front organization of the DKP. This is not what was meant by Bahr, as could be learned later on. But the SPD's federal manager certainly knows that unilateral disarmament in this country is reserved exèlusively for the initiative of communists and their sympathizers.

PAPER QUESTIONS SERIOUSNESS OF REVISED U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY

[Article signed Ein.: "A Gag?"]

[Text] The American secretary of state has complained in public about his colleague, the secretary of defense. The Pentagon had not informed the State Department that new directives for nuclear strategy have been mapped out. This was not good news for candidate Carter at the opening of the Democratic Party convention, because it thereby was confirmed once again that the acting President does not care much about coordination and cooperation within his administration. He had signed the directive but bypassed one of the most important departments. Meanwhile it was precisely the "new" strategic concept that was supposed to impress the convention. Besides it was also conceived as a response to the criticism leveled by the Republicans, who reproach the man in the White House with doing too little for defense. Carter's "nuclear initiative" now might be drowned in the whirlpool of events surrounding the nomination. Experienced observers, however, will remain suspicious that even the atomic issue is only one of the gags during the big political circus of the election year, because a government that bypasses the State Department when nuclear decisions are at stake cannot have tackled the problem seriously.

BRANDT, BREZHNEV EXCHNAGE LETTERS ON TREATY ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Bonn--In a letter to Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has called for further efforts for disarmament on the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Moscow treaty. He says that the policy of detente faces a new test. Arms control, arms limitation and disarmament with pproximate balance have become the most important tasks, Brandt says in the letter which has published today. This will require specific efforts, while at the same time bearing in mind that a balance of military forces is not an end in itself but should be the instrument [toward] the lowest possible level for achieving a peace that can no longer be destroyed. Brandt says that the Moscow treaty has contributed to stability in Europe which (?has stood the test of practice). The renunciation of the threat of, and use of force included in the treaty ought to become the common task of agreeing to this principle for other regions and giving it world-wide validity.

In a letter to Brandt to mark the anniversary, Brezhnev expressed the opinion that the treaty has provided the initiative for far-reaching positive changes in German-Soviet relations and for the situation in Europe as a whole. The last 10 years have provided firm proof of the fruitfulness of the course embarked upon by the Soviet Union and the Federal Republic in 1970.

BRITISH, FRENCH OFFICIALS CONFER ON VANUATU SITUATION

OW111801 Paris AFP in English 1716 GMT 11 Aug 80

[Text] Paris, Aug. 11 (AFP)--Peter Blaker, British minister of state at the Foreign Office, and Olivier Stirn, French secretary of state at the Foreign Ministry, conferred here today on the crisis in Vanuatu, the former New Hebrides. Britain and France, the two former colonial powers of the South Pacific island group which won its independence on July 30, recently agreed to the demand of the Vanuatu Government, headed by Walter Lini, that their troops remain in the archipelago to maintain order. Today's talks were believed to concern the continued deployment of the troops and possible replacements for them, including a mixed forced provided by Australia, Papua New Guinea and Fiji, all, incidentally, Anglophone countries.

FIRMS WORKING ON IRAQ NUCLEAR PROJECT RECEIVE THREATS

[Text] Paris, Aug 11 (AFP)--Five French companies participating in the construction of a nuclear research reactor for Iraq "Osirak" today received threats from a "Committee To Safeguard the Islamic Revolution", sources in one of the companies disclosed. The director of the Mediterranean Naval and Industrial Construction Company (CNIM), Vsevolod Dmitriess, to told AFP that his company had received an anonymous telephone call from someone claiming to represent the "committee". "If you make atomic weapons, it will bring bad luck to you and your skilled employees," the caller threatened. "We have proved our capability to attack you," the French-speaking caller continued. According to Mr Dmitriess, he warned him to immediately halt sales or the "committee" would employ "all the means" at its disposal.

A "Committee To Safeguard the Islamic Revolution" last week claimed responsibility for the attack on Thursday which mistook bookstore owner Jean Jacques Graf for a man of the same name who is a high-ranking official of the Technicatome Company, a branch of the French Atomic Energy Commission, which is working on the Osirak project.

Mr Dmitriess said that Technicatome, prime contractor for the nuclear part of the research reactor, had received similar threats, as did the General New Techniques Company (SGN), also a branch of the Atomic Energy Commission, and two service companies, Bouygues (civil engineering) and Cosmip Enterprises (industrial computers). The French Atomic Energy Commission declined to comment on this report, refusing to either confirm or deny it. According to Mr Dmitriess, the threat that the committee had already "proved its capability to attack" his company referred to an attack on the Seyne Shipyards in Marseilles in April 1979, during which an unidentified commando blew up the heart of the nuclear reactor which was to go to Iraq.

GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR MARSEILLES BOMBING

COLOMBO COMMENTS ON GERMAN-FRENCH 'ENTENTE'

[Text] Rome, 12 Aug (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo said today that French-West German entente was a necessary condition for "the birth of Europe" but warned that Rome would not countenance two countries deciding the European Nine's politics for them. Colombo aired the government's views about European politics in an extensive interview with LA REPUBBLICA Editor-in-Chief Eugenio Scalfari published today.

This is what he had to say about the French-West German axis emerging in Western Europe: "French-West German entente is, for us, a preliminary...condition for Europe to emerge.... But...if you are talking about two countries, two powers, two governments authorized to speak on behalf of the rest, to present the Community with faits accomplis, to decide European politics ahead of time, then no, we don't agree"!

The Italian diplomatic chief said that there was more of a "convergence" between Italy and West Germany than between West Germany and France in the field of defense. That, he added, was demonstrated by the recent (NATO) decisions about correcting the balance of nuclear forces in Europe as well as by the offer to negotiate with the Soviet Union. But these were not the only differences, Colombo asserted, pointing to another "key point" regarding relations with the East and the Soviet Union in particular. Elaborating on the difference between Bonn's and Paris' approach to East-West relations, Colombo stated: "France has always emphasized her privileged relationship with Moscow...Germany defends her 'Ostpolitik' and rightly so, but has always perceived of the dialogue with the East as an approach that involved the entire West, and not as a bilateral affair".

When Scalfari asked him if he was saying that French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's recent moves were not made with the agreement of the other Allies and Schmidt's were, Colombo replied: "In fact Schmidt's were, that's the truth. We were informed about them by the West German foreign minister in Luxembourg, as soon as he returned from Moscow".

Asked about French moves in the Middle East, Colombo replied that "bilateral moves have little effect in this area too". "You have to be able to speak on behalf of all of Western Europe to achieve any results," he added. Colombo said that Italy's efforts in the Middle East had been "decisive" for stitching together initially distant stands, commenting "the result showed up at the end". The Italian official charged that Israel's recent move to proclaim Jerusalem its indivisible and eternal capital would "not help things". The Arabs, he said, have shown a "major interest" in European moves.

Colombo rejected the allegation that Italy was subservient to the United States, or "the Bulgaria of NATO" as the interviewer put it. "When we have reason to dissent from United States policies, we have done so with frankness," the foreign minister insisted. "But on the other hand, I reject the idea that it is necessary to systematically dissent from America in order to build Europe," he stressed, adding "that vision is completely false".

When pushed further by Scalifari, who charged that Italy has settled for a status of "limited sovereignty", Colombo replied as follows: "I see it differently....The more Europe becomes a political subject, the stronger her voice and autonomy will be with respect to the United States. Italy has done and will continue to do her part in this direction. Italy is institutionally and politically a sovereign country, which discusses things and takes responsibilities along with other sovereign countries and allies. I would look elsewhere for countries with a limited sovereignty".

MAURITANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER 'VERY SATISFIED' WITH MADRID TALKS

LD111307 Madrid ABC in Spanish 7 Aug 80 p 7

Shortly before boarding the aircraft, Ould Zamel told journalists that Spain and Mauritania have maintained relations of friendship for years for historical and geographical reasons, and that this compels both of them to conduct a policy of cooperation. "I am very satisfied," he said, "with the meeting held with Spanish Foreign Minister Marcelino Oreja, Minister of Transport Jose Luis Alvarez and the first deputy prime minister, Lieutenant General Gutierrez Mellado."

When asked about relations between the two countries in the field of fisheries, he stated: "Mauritania is seeking to control its territorial waters and to ensure that its fisheries resources are not destroyed. We possess stocks, and Spain possesses technology and vessels to exploit those stocks. Proceeding from the two states' desire for cooperation, it does not seem logical that we should be unable to reach some kind of agreement on fishing in our waters."

The Mauritanian minister stated that the seizure of two Spanish fishing boats by Mauritania is a minor incident and "an unimportant problem--a police and border problem, because the fishing boats had no permit. I believe that this is something for the Spanish consul in Mouadibbhou to resolve. In any event, the fishing boats' crews will be well treated."

With respect to possible Mauritanian mediation to secure the release of the "Gargomar" fishermen in the hands of the Polisario, the minister said: "This is a matter stemming from the Sahara problem which concerns Spain and the Polisario. However, Mauritania cannot remain indifferent, and will take the matter into consideration, although I cannot be more specific."

DENMARK'S SOCIAL DEMOCRATS DEFENSE POLICY CONTROVERSY CONTINUES

LD081019 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 4 Aug 80 pt 1 p 8

[Editorial: "The Defense Policy Abyss"]

[Text] After a shaky start a discussion of defense policy is, at long last, developing in Denmark. At long last, for the current defense budget expires on 1 April 1981 and the people, the defense authorities and our allies should be informed, in good time, before the expiration of the current defense plan, of the terms under which Danish defenses will function.

So far the debate has not been promising. Its central theme is the questioning of the Social Democrats' views on the basic defense policy. This theme has not been chosen by a spiteful opposition, but by people from within the governing party's own ranks.

In the most recent exchange, Social Democratic Defense Chairman Lasse Budtz declared that his party wants Denmark to remain a member of NATO. He has further reminded us that his party wants a broadly based defense agreement, because this removes defense from the realm of controversy. We should not doubt that these are really Lasse Budtz's views. Nor should we doubt that among Social Democrats there are persons, including the defense minister, who still acknowledge that the Social Democrats have a special responsibility, which also includes future commitments and that Denmark became a NATO member in 1949. But it is open to considerable doubt whether these views as has been asserted will be represented by a united Folketing group after the present debate. Will Jytte Hilden be able to support the goals and basic principles that have been established? And what about Eggert Petersen, who, as is well known, has a talent for cajoling his party colleagues?

During the latter part of the year it will become clear what definite form the Social Democrats will give their defense policy. If the party wants to meet its commitments and follow the line which Lasse Budtz seems to be advocating, it will have little choice. It must enter serious negotiations with the other parties which support NATO while the Radical Liberals, the Single Tax Party and the Socialist People's Party must be sent about their business. But if the Social Democrats choose to go their own way on defense--and Lasse Budtz has also hinted at this possibility--it would be tantamount to bringing 30 years of stability surrounding defense policy to the verge of breakdown, for a 1-year extension of the present defense budget would not only give the defense forces an economic headache. It could also lead to political breaches that could not be repaired later.

The disagreement that has existed up to the present among Social Democrats is an obstacle to serious negotiations, and bitter experience of the prime minister's style of leadership give rise to the fear that attempts to reach party unity will be made even though the cost might be defense policy chaos. Does the government really think that it can afford to bring this country to the edge of several abysses?

GOVERNMENT PLANS INTENSIFIED OIL EXPLORATION, DOUBLES BUDGET

AT121632 Athens Armed Forces Television Service in Greek 1500 GMT 12 Aug 80

[Text] Today Prime Minister Rallis chaired a conference on issues which concern the Public Petroleum Corporation [DEP]. Significant decisions were made during the conference in connection with the solution of the country's energy problem which, as mentioned in a related government statement, is linked with the exploration for oil. Specifically, it was decided during the conference to more than double the DEP's budget for prospecting and raise it to the maximum limit of expenditure that can be absorbed by the specialized technical personnel which are available in the country. Thus, in the next 5 years DEP will be allotted about 17 billion drachmas so that 10 percent of the country's possibly oil-rich areas can be explored. The decision was made after it was ascertained that, at present, DEP has neither adequate capital nor the technological capabilities for ocean exploration at great depth. At the rate with which current exploration is being carried out, at least 50 years and more than 160 billion drachmas would be required to explore possible oil-rich areas. The conference also decided to increase prospecting efforts and to ask interested foreign companies to participate, after bids have been made and always within the framework of existing legislation covering exploration for hydrocarbons. The first areas for which specialized oil companies will be asked to express interest, after bids have been made, are the following: Paxoi and Antipaxoi, the area of North Lefkas, West Sterea Ellas, Southwest Peloponnese, the delta of the Nestos River, the Pedhias of Mesaras and Livikon Pelagos.

The government statement stresses that the energy problem has become the chief problem for almost all countries of the Western world and, with the decisions which have been made today, local possibilities are being exhausted and the framework is being defined for a more systematic, extensive exploration for oil. As of today, the statement stresses, the DEP has entered the second stage of its activities and, at this point, it can decisively contribute to the solution of Greece's energy problem. It should not be forgotten, concludes the statement, that, if everything goes well, Prinos oilfield will cover 7 percent of our oil needs next year. A 10 percent increase in oil prices will more than offset the benefits that will accrue from Prinos. Consequently, we must conduct a systematic, rapid exploration of possibly oil-rich areas and, in order to respond to this need, the government has decided to follow methods with which Western developed countries have confronted and solved similar problems.

I VRADHINI: MUSKIE MISUNDERSTANDS 'GREEK-TURKISH DIFFERENCES'

AT111328 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 11 Aug 80 p 2

[From the "Evening" column: "U.S. Interests]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Muskie's interest in a solution to Greek-Turkish differences is truly moving. After all, it is natural that an allied country should be interested in good relations among its allies. It seems, however, that the U.S. secretary does not understand Greek viewpoints or his colleagues have not properly briefed him, because it is not difficult to understand them. It has been repeatedly stated that the Cyprus problem is not a Greek-Turkish difference. It is an issue which concerns an independent and sovereign state--a UN member. Also, the issue of returning to NATO is a problem of the alliance, not a bilateral issue. The solution of other problems that may naturally exist between neighboring countries requires an atmosphere of trust and the Greek side has repeatedly appealed to Ankara to renounce violence and work for the peaceful solution of differences--like resorting to the Hague Court--so that an atmosphere of trust can be restored. However, the Greek side has received no response. Therefore, Muskie should direct his remarks to Ankara instead of making generalized statements about Greek-Turkish differences.

DEMIREL SENDS CONGRATULATORY MESSAGE TO NEW IRANIAN PREMIER

FINANCE MINISTER CITES ECONOMIC COOPERATION WITH YUGOSLAVIA

TA081228 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 8 Aug 80

[Text] Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin has announced that a loan of $70 million has been procured from Yugoslavia for a shipbuilding project. In a statement to TRT following his 3-day official visit to Yugoslavia, Sezgin said that the loan would finance the machinery and equipment of five ships to be built by Turkey. He added that with the same loan Yugoslavia would build a freighter for Turkey.

The finance minister pointed out that an agreement was reached with the Yugoslav officials whereby the Turkish TIR [International Highway Transport] trucks, which used to pay high transit fees, would pay the minimum as of 30 September at the latest.

Sezgin also said that an agreement was reached under which Yugoslavia would compensate the Turkish citizens who had immigrated to Turkey from Yugoslavia for the immovable property they had left behind.

Sezgin said that they also agreed on the expansion and diversification of the volume of trade between Turkey and Yugoslavia. He added that a Yugoslav delegation would arrive in Turkey to discuss this.

The finance minister noted that joint projects would be undertaken with Yugoslavia for the construction of power lines and thermal and hydroelectric stations.

INTERIOR MINISTER COMMENTS ON ANTITERRORISM MEASURES

TA121535 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 12 Aug 80

[Text] Interior Minister Orhan Eren has said that special operation units will be established within the police organization to combat terrorism. In a statement to the National Press Agency [Ulusal Basin Ajansi], Eren noted that training experts within the police will be stressed and the antiterrorist operation units will be trained specially. He said that the special operation units will be provided with equipment suitable to their tasks. Pointing out that arms smuggling plays an important role in anarchy and terrorism, Eren said that a deputy under secretary at the Interior Ministry is charged with working on the prevention of arms smuggling and that a department has been set up in the security directorate general to deal with this subject.

CABINET APPROVES 10-YEAR COOPERATION PROGRAM WITH USSR

[Communique on 12 August Vienna cabinet meeting]

[Excerpt] The Federal Government has approved the long-term program on the development and deepening of economic, scientific-technical and industrial cooperation between the Republic of Austria and the USSR for the years 1981-90 and authorized the minister of commerce, trade and industry to sign it.

The long-term program contains stipulations and guidelines for various sectors of cooperation (trade, production co-operation, planning and construction of industrial plants, scientific-technical cooperation, agriculture and forestry, transportation, environmental protection, tourist trade, exhibits and fairs, insurance), an index of the most important goods for mutual deliveries between the two countries, and a list of directives for potential cooperation on a barter basis, for cooperation in production, and for cooperation in third countries regarding the planning and construction of industrial plants and scientific-technical co-operation.

On the strength of the new long-term program the Austrian side expects to secure energy and raw material deliveries from the USSR on a long-term basis as well as to expand Austrian exports to the USSR.

The new long-term program is in the nature of a recommendation and does not exclude the possibility of cooperation in other fields not covered by the program. If necessary, it can be more precisely defined and expanded. The long-term program will go into effect as of 1 January 1981 and will be valid until 31 December 1990. Thereafter, its validity will automatically be extended every 5 years, provided that the sides do not stipulate otherwise.

ANDROSCH DELIVERS REPORT ON ECONOMIC SITUATION

AU131500 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 13 Aug 80 pp 2, 5

From report on Austria's "Economic Situation in Mid-1980" delivered by Vice Chancellor Hannes Androsch to the Austrian Cabinet at its 12 August session in Vienna]

[Summary] In the first half of 1980 the Austrian economic development was marked by particularly favorable business activity, a continuing rise in employment and lower unemployment, strong growth of industrial production and brisk investment activity, acceleration of the upward price trend, and a marked deterioration of the balance of trade. The domestic output in the first quarter of this year was 6.6 percent higher than a year ago, and the growth rate in the first half of this year is estimated at 5.5 percent. Despite a downward trend an average growth rate of more than 3.5 percent is to be expected for the whole year of 1980.

The labor market situation most clearly reflects the favorable economic development. In July the total of wage and salary earners, at 2,829,000, reached the highest employment figure ever recorded in Austria. Unemployment declined from 1.2 percent in July 1979 to 1.0 percent in July 1980. The price index, which in June at 7.1 percent exceeded the 7 percent mark for the first time since 1976, declined in July again to 6.6 percent. There are several indications that price increases have passed their high point and that the upward trend in prices will be less pronounced in the coming months.

"The development of Austria's trade with Eastern Europe in the first half of 1980 has been very unfavorable. For the first time since 1963, trade with these countries has shown a deficit (2 billion schillings)." Imports strongly increased (39 percent), while exports went up only 3 percent. In the first 7 months of this year, the hard currency policy was continued in order to offset cost increases from abroad as far as possible. In the first half of this year, Austria's balance of payments showed a deficit of 45.2 billion schillings as against 27.5 billion schillings a year ago.

[Summary] Vienna--Following the protest march against the planned tank exports to Chile, 25 persons--Austrians and Chileans--began a 24-hour hunger strike in front of the chancellery on Monday evening, 11 August. "Vice Chancellor Androsch, who again stressed that he most deeply disliked the Chilean regime for a number of reasons, declared on Tuesday after the cabinet meeting that the decision on the tank deliveries would be made on 20 August at a session of the enlarged party presidium.

"In making this decision, all legal and economic angles as well as deliberations on Austrian national defense must be taken into consideration, but also the fact that Argentina received Austrian arms 2 years ago, Androsch declared."

Chancellor Kreisky stressed on Tuesday that he had been misinterpreted by the paper DIE PRESSE which cited him as having said in connection with the training of the Bolivian military at the Hirtenberg ammunitions factory that the deals with the Bolivian Government had been authorized by the Austrian Government. This remark, Kreisky said, referred to tank deliveries under a contract concluded earlier with the recently overthrown democratic government of Bolivia.

The training course for the Bolivians at the Hirtenberg factory is sponsored by a French ammunitions-machine firm that has business relations with the Austrian company. According to Hirtenberg Director General Hadwiger the Austrian company has no intention of exporting any ammunitions to Bolivia and therefore has not submitted any export license applications to the Interior Ministry.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON ARMS PRODUCTION, CHILE ARMS DEAL

[Georg Possanner report on interview with Defense Minister Otto Roesch in Vienna on 12 August 1980]

[Summary] On Tuesday morning, after the cabinet meeting, Defense Minister Otto Roesch consented to an interview at the chancellery. Asked about the pending tank deal with Chile, he declared that the Defense Ministry has always approved such export applications provided that there was no risk of the arms being used against Austria. Anything else is the government's concern, and it will make a decision in the near future, he says, and adds: "I am excluding the human rights aspect, simply because that is not a matter for the defense minister but the concern of the government."

Asked if the Austrian Army could not buy the tanks should the deal with Chile fail to materialize, so as to safeguard jobs, Roesch said: Yes, but that would depend on whether the finance minister could allot the required money--indeed a huge amount of money. [paragraph continues]

"More unequivocally and in a sharper tone stanch socialist Roesch rejects the demand of Josef Cap, chairman of the Austrian Socialist Youth, for a curbing of the Austrian arms production: 'that contradicts the Social Democratic Party program which has also been approved by Mr Cap. For this program expressly states that we should try to insure the equipment of the Austrian Army with domestic products. However, the Austrian Army is too small to buy these products alone, or else production costs would be so high as to be prohibitive. This demand would mean the importation of all arms, and thus dependence from abroad. That won't do.'"

In reply to a question regarding the recently amended conscientious objectors' law, Roesch declares that he does not share the misgivings voiced by some high-ranking officers and pleads for a review of the new law after 2 or 3 years. The highest number of conscientious objectors of any annual draft group to date has only been 1,122 men, he says, and higher figures that have worried the public were misleading as they were totals for longer periods, up to 20 years.

"As far as the interceptors are concerned [which Austria is planning to buy], Roesch expects a decision about the type 'probably as late as by next spring.' A special financing plan is to insure that foreign currency payments are avoided and that payments will be made by delivery of Austrian products in the form of barter transactions. 'Ultimately, payments would of course have to be made from the government budget, but in installments rather than all at once--over a period of 10 years, or maybe more.'"

FOREIGN MINISTER PAHR COMMENTS ON EASTERN MBFR PROPOSAL

AU111235 [Editorial Report] Vienna DIE PRESSE in German on 11 August carries a 700-word report by Ludwig Marton on an interview with Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr, the time and place of which are not given; on his summer holiday plans and his activities envisaged for the fall. Pahr points out that he is going to spend his vacation in Austria and will not need any substitute as he will be in constant touch with his ministry and will attend to all important matter himself. Pahr then previews Austria's foreign policy activities in the second half of 1980, mentioning the following facts:

At the UN General Assembly special session on North-South questions Austria's delegation will be headed by State Secretary Nussbaumer. He himself will attend the UN General Assembly fall session and deliver a speech there. During his stay in New York he will discuss with other foreign ministers the preparation for the Madrid CSCE followup conference.

Early in September Italian Foreign Minister Colombo will visit Vienna, and talks with him will include the pending full implementation of the South Tirol "package" agreement. Later in the fall, he will receive in Vienna his Swiss counterpart Aubert and Finnish Foreign Minister Vayrynen; he himself will visit Liechtenstein, then in early October Bulgaria, and in the second half of October Malaysia and Japan.

Asked about his opinion of the latest Warsaw Pact proposal at the Vienna MBFR talks in which the Soviets have offered to withdraw 20,000 men if 13,000 U.S. soldiers were to leave Europe, Pahr declared: "This is certainly a highly interesting proposal which to us seems very much worth considering, because any proposal that aims at a reduction of armament is assessed positively by Austria as a matter of principle."

OFFICIALS DISCUSS PREPARATIONS FOR SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING

LD131228 Hamburg DPA in German 1140 GMT 13 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 13 Aug (DPA)--The permanent GDR representative in Bonn, Ewald Moldt, and Minister of State Guenter Huonker of the Federal Chancellor's Office met today for another 1-hour discussion in preparation for the meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED leader Erich Honecker on 25-29 August in the GDR. It was presumed in Bonn that one of the main topics of the discussion was the surprise invitation to the chancellor to visit Werbellinsee, north of Berlin, and the attendant problems.

Itinerary Agreed

[Text] Bonn, 13 Aug (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will travel to the meeting with SED General Secretary Erich Honecker on 28-29 August on Werbellinsee by a special train from Hamburg to the GDR on the eve of the meeting. This was announced to the press in Bonn today by Government Spokesman Armin Gruenewald following a discussion between Minister of State Guenter Huonker and the permanent GDR representative in Bonn, Ewald Moldt.

Huonker officially accepted the invitation on behalf of the federal chancellor during the meeting with Moldt. According to Gruenewald, Schmidt will also visit Guestron and Rostock in the GDR on the return journey.

STRAUSS ASKS SCHMIDT TO DISCUSS WALL CONDITIONS WITH HONECKER

LD132332 Hamburg DPA in German 0856 GMT 12 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 12 Aug--Franz Josef Strauss, the CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor, has called on Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to talk to GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker at their meeting about revoking the order to shoot [at fugitives from the GDR]. In a statement on the 19th anniversary of the wall, Strauss said that if the meeting was to be more than a "headline-making electioneering trip" and if the chancellor took seriously his oath of office to enhance the benefits of the German nation, then his talks with Honecker must concentrate on getting the order to fire withdrawn and dismantling at least the automatic firing devices on the border, which are criminal.

Strauss added that the intra-German border had been fortified as the most inhumane border on earth. After the building of the wall, East Berlin had even stepped up its demarcation policy in breach of agreements and in violation of international obligations assumed in the basic treaty and the Helsinki Final Act.

PAPERS DISCUSS NEW YORK DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

DW131217 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 13 Aug 80

[Press review]

[Text] SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes: Senator Edward Kennedy's renunciation of his presidential candidacy has cleared the road already for Carter to the final round in the U.S. election campaign. The Democrats' chances on 4 November now will largely depend on how they succeed in hushing up the internal rift in their party. As a result of Kennedy's waiver Carter at least has his back clear.

Unless new revelations about financial transactions by his brother turn into a real scandal, Carter can now proceed to an active election campaign; many of his fellow party members may follow him only with gritted teeth, yet the Democratic convention in New York proves that they still back him with a surprisingly vast majority.

Muenster's WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN declares: The majority turned out to be greater than predicted. The party convention backed the President whose nomination as candidate is now clear. No doubt Jimmy Carter thereby has scored a clear success. But if we ask about the reasons for the voting behavior of the delegates in Madison Square Garden it become plain soon enough that it was not his convincing policies or even the impact of his personality which induced the Democrats to vote as they did but simply the fear of the loss of power--including the 2/3 majority in Congress. Carter, who shows the lowest popularity rating ever scored by an incumbent president, remains an unpopular candidate in the ranks of his party.

The Mainz ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG stresses the following point: A mere 28 percent of Americans would vote for Carter as president today, as many as 46 percent for Reagan. Still, Carter is not devoid of hope. The memory of the elections of 1948 when Harry Truman scored an overwhelming victory over Thomas Dewey despite even worse auspices, enhances the readiness for action of the Democrats. Besides, it will be helpful to Carter that at least in his own party there is no longer any dispute over Jimmy and Billy but the sights are set on the man now who ought to be the natural target of criticism from Democratic ranks: Ronald Reagan. The concentration on the political adversary and dexterous exploitation of the advantages of an incumbent president ultimately make the outcome of the race uncertain after all. Thus the showing of John Anderson then could indeed decide whether Carter or Reagan would have to bear the title and burden in Washington. But one thing is definite by now: Only a small minority in the United States considers these candidates the best man for the White House. But it is not the Americans alone who must live with this bitter realization, ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG comments.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN arrives at the following conclusion: Carter has scored a convincing victory which rules out any doubt about his forthcoming nomination. The satisfaction over this should, however, not prevent the President, who certainly has not been spoiled by the experience of successes, from seeing that his problems and those of his party thereby have not at all been resolved. Why not the best? is a question which Carter himself had raised formerly. No doubt it has not been answered by his renomination but has, quite to the contrary, been charged with new explosiveness and will still have to be discussed intensively by the Democrats with a view to 1984.

DIE WELT Commentary

[Thomas Kielinger commentary: "Carter's Victory"]

[Text] The Democratic convention in New York has cast its vote, even though the nominating vote proper will take place only tonight. The pledge for Jimmy Carter has been renewed: He and not Edward Kennedy will lead the party in the election campaign against Ronald Reagan. For Kennedy 1984 is the next target.

Thus the matchup is Jimmy Carter versus Ronald Reagan which frightens away quite a few Americans who want to give John Anderson a chance to build up his own image as a third force. The unusual triple running may result in a particularly isolationist election campaign in which the domestic scene as well as the tactical perspectives push so much to the foreground that America once again will fail to see its relevancy for the outside world.

This certainly would be fatal. It is urgently necessary that the United States define its rank and rating in the world, because otherwise it will not be capable for long of maintaining its leading role. Besides, Jimmy Carter is simplifying matters if he announces as the cornerstone of his foreign policy credo that the times have passed when America was able to impose its will on others. This is a truism. Nobody asks for compulsion. The magic word is "leadership." This is how willingness for support, the very matter that is at stake, is created.

The Democrats start with two big handicaps. The first is that the party despairingly is looking for a new identity, though defeated Kennedy nevertheless is shaking the pillars of cohesion. As the last soldier of the New Deal he considers the Carter era as an error of the spirit of the age or at least as a mistake of the party. This is why he and his friends will continue to bring pressure to bear on this administration with their liberal ideas of long standing: the state acting as the provider, distributer of the public sector, and as the leader of social-above-security policy. Some of these ideas are quite tempting, because millions of people are living in the United States under intolerably inadequate and also insecure conditions.

The second handicap is Carter himself. "He remains what he always has: an outsider and a riddle," TIME magazine writes this week. This is not a solitary voice. The New York TIMES (of 17 July 1980) says: "Even when serious and thorough-going followers of Carter talk about his second term in office they sound like blind persons describing an elephant." How flattering! Who is Jimmy Carter to brand the unpredictability of Ronald Reagan? Of the two Reagan actually appears to be the most steadfast one as far as continuity and loyalty to his own global outlook, including all its contradictions, are concerned.

There can be no doubt that the Americans are longing for more competent leadership. They urgently need it, to be sure. There are advisers in Ronald Reagan's surroundings who during their period in government were more successful than their Democratic successors, not least in the economic field as well. This could become the decisive factor on 4 November, though nothing more can be predicted prior to the forthcoming four television debates. The medium crowns candidates--and its destroys them.

FORMER GENERAL CRITICIZES NEW U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY

[Text] Hanover--Former Gen Wold Count Baudissin suspects that the change in U.S. nuclear strategy is motivated by "election propaganda and other domestic reasons." In an interview in Thursday's edition of NEUE PRESSE of Hanover, he expresses misgivings about the plan to respond to nuclear attack not by retaliation against cities, but against enemy military targets. Baudissin is the father of the Bundeswehr's moral leadership concept and is currently director of the Institute for Peace Research and Security Policy at Hamburg University.

Baudissin said: "The Soviet missile launching ramps are located in a belt straddling the trans-Siberian railway between Moscow and Vladisvostok. If the United States, for whatever reason, initiates a strike against these systems, it will not be easy for the USSR leaders to detect whether it is directed against cities or armed forces. I cannot imagine that one can be sure that the opponent would react with due restraint, particularly since he has to decide within minutes, i.e., before the impact of these systems which would already be in flight."

BANKS AGREE ON FINANCE PACKAGE FOR POLISH BANK

[Text] Frankfurt--Agreement on a finance package for the Polish bank Handlowy was reached at a meeting of the syndicate member banks in Frankfurt, Dresdner Bank confirmed on Tuesday in reply to an inquiry from VWD [economic news agency associated with DPA]. Dresdner Bank with Bank Fuer Gemeinwirtschaft, Commerzbank and Deutsche Bank are the syndicate's leading managers. The negotiators have agreed on a credit totaling DM1.2 billion to redress the payments balance between Poland the the Federal Republic in 1980. One-third of the credit will be used to develop Polish coal deposits and backed by a Hermes [export credit] guarantee. One-third of the credit will be raised on the German market and two-thirds on the Euromarket. The negotiations on the terms are yet to be concluded.

CDU ENERGY SPOKESMAN OPPOSES MORE SOVIET GAS SUPPLIES

[Text] Bonn, 13 Aug--The CDU/CSU opposition has expressed concern at the current talks on additional deliveries of Soviet natural gas to the Federal Republic. Commenting on the Soviet offer to deliver starting in the mid-80's an additional 40 billion cubic meters of gas from Siberia to the Federal Republic and other West European states, the CDU spokesman on energy, Karl-Heinz Narjes, said it was not enough to refer to the USSR's fulfillment of contracts in the past and to the involvement of several countries in concluding the proposed contract. In considering the security of energy supplies, one must always bear in mind the worst possible contingency, i.e., the predominance of power and force.

At this year's Hanover Fair the Soviet side had stated, in connection with the debate on Western economic sanctions in response to the invasion of Afghanistan, that the supplies of Soviet natural gas could also be interrupted. Narjes said that gas imports from the Soviet Union totalled just under 17 percent of West German overall requirements. It was a proven rule that this dependence should not exceed 20 percent. "We should not exceed it if we do not wish to become vulnerable to blackmail or to provoke the mistrust of our allies," he said. The Federal Republic would do better to concentrate its efforts on gas imports from the North Sea and other strategically safe zones of the Western world.

MINISTER COMMENTS ON SOUTHERN AFRICAN DEVELOPMENTS

[Text] Baden-Baden, 9 August (DPA)--Rainer Offergeld (SPD), federal minister for economic cooperation, has underlined his view that the political development of southern Africa is largely dependent on the West's attitude. In an interview for Southwest Radio (SWF) Baden-Baden the minister said on Sunday that at present Moscow's influence in that part of the world is not overpowering, and that a number of states now leading heavily on the Eastern bloc are trying to get out of the "fraternal embrace." They should not be given the cold shoulder or else these states would have no option but to cooperate with Moscow.

According to Offergeld the example of the new Zimbabwe has shown that in the final analysis well-considered development aid pays off for the donor. The Federal Republic had already maintained with Zimbabwe and its liberation movements "peaceful cooperation prior to the new independence," for which reason relations with the new government "today are definitely better, not to say friendly."

ECONOMIC COOPERATION MINISTER OUTLINES DEVELOPMENT POLICY

DW121115 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 9 Aug 80 p 14

[Statement by Federal Economic Cooperation Minister Rainer Offergeld on the cabinet bill on "the Future Development Policy of the Federal Government in Light of the Recommendations of the Independent Commission for International Development Questions" including summary of the most important points of the document]

[Text] The "Independent Commission for International Development Questions" under the chairmanship of Willy Brandt has drawn attention in its report to the future development of the North-South relations as one of the crucial problems in the world. The 2-year work of the commission, in which politically experienced and influential personalities from industrial and developing countries having divergent political convictions cooperated, essentially contributed to the revitalization of the international discussion on development policy. I recall the detailed statement of the heads of state and government in Venice on these issues. In our country the report has also had its impact. By growing support in parliament and among the public the Federal Government feels encouraged to further enhance its cooperation with the Third World. On this course we already achieved between 1977 and 1979 a doubling of our development aid contributions to more than DM6 billion, and since this amounts to .44 percent of the Gross National Product, we are above the average of the Western donor countries (.34 percent).

The Brandt Commission proceeds from the community of the interests of North and South, on which alone lasting solutions can be based. This basic idea is in keeping with the policy of the Federal Government. The Federal Government may interpret many demands of the commission as an encouragement to continue the development policy which it has pursued to date, including the strong emphasis on aid to the world's poorest countries, the demand for intensified promotion of rural development, the need for supporting energy-insuring programs, and the protection of natural resources. The rejection of protectionism in world trade also has the express support of the Federal Government.

The Federal Government recommends the proposal concerning occasional summit meetings of a limited number of heads of state and government of the industrial and developing countries. Such meetings can exert a positive influence on the international climate.

Today the Federal Government has again set down the basic lines of its development policy in light of the recommendations of the Brandt commission. This makes it plain in detail that the Federal Government approves of most of the recommendations. In so doing it underscores its view that apart from the dramatic effects of the oil-price hikes the rapid increase in the population of the Third World constitutes the central problem of development policy.

Strengthening Independence

1. It is the priority objective of German development policy to support the nonaligned countries of the Third World so as to strengthen their independence and sovereignty. In this respect the Federal Government particularly would like to help promote social progress in the countries which are aiming at implementing the elementary human rights by counteracting poverty and insuring the basic requirements.

2. Three sectors have particularly high priority: rural development, conventional and nonexhaustible energy sources, and protection of the natural resources (ecology).

3. Key regions are the countries in the poverty belts of Africa and Asia. The volume of cooperation with the poorer developing countries will be further increased.

4. The share of technical cooperation in the overall contributions will increase in the future.

5. Regional and community projects which are to benefit several developing countries will be increasingly promoted.

6. The Federal Government will participate in special programs (for example, combatting certain diseases, large-scale irrigation projects and improvement in river channels). In its development policy it will attach special significance to the ecological necessities and effects.

7. The promotion of private capital transfer will be complemented with new instruments and programs for the promotion of enterprising service transfer.

8. The strategy of joint responsibility developed in the basic lines of development policy extends above all to the following spheres: energy, raw materials, nutrition, trade, finances, and currency. Some important accents are the following:

A. Energy: Jointly with the other industrial countries and crude-oil exporting developing countries the Federal Government will support the developing countries dependent on oil in coping with the inevitable adaptation of their energy-supply structure to the increasing oil prices.

B. Raw materials: The Federal Government will intensify its technical and financial cooperation for the utilization of the potential in natural resources of developing countries.

C. Nutrition: The Federal Government will help the developing countries in projects aimed at improving the nutrition safety (safety reserves, establishment of storage and distribution capacities, foodstuffs assistance).

D. Trade: Integration through liberal, nonprotectionist trade policy must be made possible to threshold countries, with essential development impulses for the poorer developing countries to be expected for the time being from a greater inland orientation.

E. Finances and Currency: With a view to achieving the goal of .7 percent the Federal Government will endeavor to increase rapidly and considerably the share of public contributions in the Gross National Product in the course of the eighties. The credit-granting policy of the International Monetary Fund should adequately take into account the social and political effects of adaptation measures.

Lasting agreements between industrial and developing countries require that both sides are receptive to compromise and accept the basic idea of give and take.

The New Basic Lines of Development Policy of the Federal Government (abridged version of the next pronouncements)

A. Goals, Tasks, and Methods of German Development Policy:

1. The countries of the Third World should develop in accordance with their own guiding images of progress.

Development especially presupposes liberation from undignified dependence, domination, and oppression as well as the satisfaction of the basic requirements. The countries of the Third World should develop in accordance with their own guiding image of progress.

2. Intensified support to countries which direct efforts of their own particularly at the counteraction of absolute poverty.

The counteraction of absolute poverty is a priority task of German development policy. What first of all matters in this respect is to satisfy the basic requirements of the people for food, pure drinking water, health, clothing, housing, and education.

The Federal Government will make funds available to an increasing extent to those countries which direct their own efforts especially toward the counteraction of absolute poverty.

3. Promotion of economic cooperation of the developing countries through favorable conditions.

Regional and joint projects which benefit several developing countries will be promoted to a greater degree. The significance of such projects will be acknowledged through correspondingly favorable terms and conditions.

4. Implementation of special programs of development policy.

The Federal Government will participate in special programs of high priority in development policy. Eligible in that respect are sectorially or regionally devised programs and/or large-scale projects which benefit several developing countries or are carried out in an international action, for instance, programs for combatting specific diseases, for the support of the transport and communications sector in Africa, for counteracting erosion and desert, for the promotion of nonexhaustible energy sources, large irrigation projects and projects for improving river channels, as well as educational programs. The Federal Government proposes an internationally coordinated program of ecological key projects.

5. Integration in the world market.

The experiences gained in the past several years have shown that the developing countries have very divergent options of integration. This course must be open to the threshold countries, which have good chances for greater integration in the world economy, through a liberal and nonprotectionist world trade policy. For the rest of the developing countries, especially for the least developed countries, essential development impulses probably may be expected from an intensified inland orientation for the time being. German development policy considers it an important task to support these countries in measures aimed at strengthening the inland-oriented economic structures.

6. Development-policy cooperation serves the sovereignty of the partner countries.

The Federal Government decidedly comes out against the establishment of zones of influence in the Third World by outside powers. Development policy proposes to strengthen the sovereignty and political independence of the developing countries.

Cooperation under development policy, therefore, on principle is independent from internal political changes in the partner countries and is adapted to long-term considerations.

7. Human rights to development, against racial discrimination, support to liberation movements.

The Federal Government welcomes the fact that the United Nations, with the human right to development proclaimed in the past few years, has underscored the significance of the human rights for all efforts of development. In states in which the relations between those governing and those governed are characterized by arbitrariness, intimidation, and physical threat, projects will at best be promoted which directly benefit the destitute people.

The Federal Government advocates the elimination of racial discrimination in southern Africa; it supports the frontline states there and promotes their regional cooperation.

The Federal Government is prepared to support such activities of liberation movements which are aimed at a peaceful and democratic realization of the right to self-determination.

8. Support for social reform programs in the Third World.

It is necessary to carry out social and economic reforms in the developing countries. Mitigation of internal impediments to development (unjust distribution of income and property, neglected land reforms, corruption, privileges, high military expenditures).

The Federal Government supports social reform programs in the Third World, especially in the field of land utilization aimed at satisfying the basic needs.

B. Bilateral Cooperation:

9. Sectorial key projects.

German development policy accords particularly high priority to three sectors. The share of the following fields of promotion in the whole bilateral cooperation will be increased:

Rural development (including setup of decentralized artisan and petit-industrial production enterprises, agricultural research);

Energy: promotion of conventional energy sources (water, coal, gas, crude oil), non-exhaustible energy sources (wind, sun, biomass, terrestrial heat);

Protection of the natural resources: preservation of natural ecosystems, struggle against erosion and the development of deserts, reforestation programs.

10. Regional key projects.

The countries in the poverty belts of Africa and Asia are key regions of cooperation. The volume of cooperation with the poorer developing countries will be further increased. The Federal Government seconds the proposals concerning an international program of action for the least developed countries. In the cooperation with threshold countries intensified use will be made of mixed financing between private and public capital.

11. More technical cooperation.

The share of technical cooperation in the overall contributions will increase in the future.

12. Increase in program financing.

In view of the worsening foreign-trade situation of many developing countries the program financing will play a greater role in the future. It will complement the financing of individual projects.

13. Consideration of social and cultural followup effects in project planning and project examination.

Development processes may impair or destroy in developing countries any grown social structures and forms of religious creed and deportment, without any comparable new such forms taking their place. The Federal Government will support the strengthening of the cultural identity of the developing countries within the framework of its foreign cultural policy. In project planning and project examination the Federal Government will attach greater weight to the treatment of social and cultural followup effects.

14. Intensified efforts toward overcoming the shortage of skilled personnel.

The requirements of the developing countries for better qualified and more highly specialized skilled personnel makes it constantly more difficult to find suitable personnel. The public employers and private entrepreneurs therefore must more effectively than heretofore clear the road for their employees to a temporary job in developing countries. The Federal Government is prepared to organize for developing countries [entwicklungslaendernah] study courses and study promotion courses oriented toward development work in the Federal Republic through the promotion of visits and practical work abroad.

15. New instruments for the promotion of enterprising service transfer.

The promotion of private capital transfer will be complemented with new instruments and programs for the promotion of enterprising service transfer. The Federal Government supports the efforts of private enterprises to intensify their training services for technical and commercial personnel from developing countries. The Federal Government intends to promote production methods requiring great labor input and saving capital in small and medium enterprises within the framework of a middle-class program by means of advisory assistance and financing aids. The Federal Government intends to participate in the development and in the economical application of assimilated technologies through conditionally repayable loans (risk financing).

16. Strengthening of the negotiating capability of the developing countries through the application of technical assistance. The capability of the developing countries to look after their own interests in negotiations with private foreign enterprises will be strengthened through the application of means of technical cooperation.

C. European and Multilateral Cooperation:

17. Key tasks of multilateral development cooperation.

The Federal Government regards the alleviation of acute refugee problems through lasting solutions, birth control policy, energy policy, the protection of natural resources, the safeguarding of world nutrition, the technical and scientific cooperation of the developing countries among themselves, the improvement in the chances of education, as particularly important fields of multilateral development cooperation.

18. Against politicizing and institutional proliferations of the UN organizations.

The Federal Government does not deem desirable the linkage of controversial foreign affairs questions with decisions on measures of UN development policy in the interest of the operational capability of the development institutions and of the universal character of the United Nations. In coordination with its EC partners and other Western industrial countries the Federal Government will advocate the avoidance of excessive red tape, double work, and institutional proliferations in the UN organizations.

19. For the extension of the program and sector financing of the multilateral financing institutions.

The Federal Government advocates an extension of the program and sector financing by the multilateral financing institutions.

20. For the intensified use of the multilateral funds for promoting regional cooperation of the developing countries among themselves. The Federal Government welcomes the contemplations of a greater decentralization of the World Bank group.

21. For further regional development of EC development policy.

The Federal Government actively advocates the further development of the EC policy which concentrates regionally on Africa and the Mediterranean area. In so doing it seeks a deepening of the relations with the ASEAN states, Latin America, the countries of the extended Mediterranean region, and the Persian-Arab Gulf, tailored to the respective regions. The program of the financial and technical cooperation of the EC outside the cooperation agreements, which benefits above all the poorest developing countries in Southern Asia, should be expanded.

D. World Economic Framework Conditions and Strategy of Joint Responsibility.

22. The basic idea of give and take in the North-South dialogue.

The strategy of joint responsibility extends primarily to the following fields: energy, raw materials, nutrition, trade, finances and currency. Lasting agreements between industrial and developing countries require that both sides are receptive to compromise and accept the basic idea of give and take.

23. Energy supply.

The Federal Government supports initiatives aimed at initiating talks between crude-oil exporting and crude-oil importing countries on the future development of energy supply and demand and related topics, so as to attain as steady a price development as possible.

The Federal Government will support the developing countries in the change of their energy-supply structure, a change which is inevitable owing to the increasing oil prices. It expects the oil-exporting countries to also make an essential contribution to this end in view of their rapidly increasing oil proceeds. The preparation and the financing of the investments required for the adaptation of the energy-supply structure of the developing countries, however, is such a huge task that additional considerations about the mustering of advisory capacity and funds are necessary. For this reason the Federal Government welcomes the fact that at the Venice economic summit the World Bank was asked to review the prospect of founding a new subsidiary institute of a facility with which it might be able to improve and enhance its programs for the grant of loans for energy projects.

24. Raw materials.

The Federal Government calls on the developing countries to insure a better cooperation climate to revive the cooperation of enterprises in the raw-material sector.

In its cooperation under development policy the Federal Government will intensify its possibilities for the purpose of recognizing and utilizing the potential of natural resources in developing countries. Intensified technical and financial cooperation with developing countries reduces risks and improves the political prerequisites and the requirements of infrastructure for the necessary transfer of capital, technology, as well as management and marketing services from private economic enterprises. The Federal Government advocates an improvement in the existing multilateral financing facilities which serve the raising of funds at favorable terms for the exploration of natural resources in developing countries.

25. Nutrition.

The Federal Government is prepared to help the developing countries in the preparation of national nutrition programs. It will participate in suitable projects for the improvement in the safety of nutrition of the developing countries, including the installation of national safety reserves, predominantly from domestic production, and in setting up storage and distribution capacities. It advocates the early conclusion of a new, effective international wheat agreement.

The proposal to create a special facility for the financing of foodstuffs imports by the developing countries particularly dependent on high and vacillating foodstuffs imports should be carefully examined.

To insure nutrition foodstuffs must be supplied in special situations of distress, foodstuffs aid, however, must not be any substitute for, or impair, the developing countries' own efforts. Within the framework of the renewed international foodstuffs aid agreement, the EC programs, and the "food for work" projects of the world food program, the Federal Government will continue granting foodstuffs aid.

26. Trade and structural adaptation.

The policy of market opening in the future will take the different export possibilities of the developing countries into consideration more strongly. For the poor developing countries the most suitable way is the increased inclusion of agricultural products in the general preference system since these countries predominantly have export possibilities in these products alone. This requires that a further opening of the agricultural markets in the EC be expressly pursued.

Improvements in the market access for advanced developing countries must dissociate themselves from the principle of preference to the degree in which these countries become internationally competitive in a growing number of finished and semifinished products. Especially the threshold countries should gradually dismantle their trade barriers vis-a-vis the other developing countries as well as vis-a-vis the industrial countries. The Federal Government supports efforts aimed at intensifying the information exchange between threshold countries and the OECD.

The Federal Government will insist that--just as national tariffs and quantitative import restrictions were mitigated gradually over several years after the founding of the EC--the liberalization of trade vis-a-vis the developing countries will be continued. This could be done in the form of an international liberalization plan. Such a scheme, which makes allowances for the export possibilities of the developing countries, should extend to the gradual mitigation of tariffs, quantitative import restrictions, subsidies, and non-tariff trade impediments. It would also reduce the requirements for selective protective measures.

An international agreement on appropriate working conditions (social clauses) along the lines of a demand on the developing countries to adapt the respective working and social conditions to certain minimum standards within the framework of the economic possibilities, is welcomed.

Yet, nonobservance of such minimum conditions must not serve as a pretext for an import protection on the part of the industrial countries.

27. Finances and currency.

The Federal Government has recognized the target set by the United Nations, namely, to raise .7 percent of the Gross National Product in the form of public contributions to the developing countries. With a view to achieving this target the Federal Government will endeavor to rapidly and considerably increase the share of its public payments in the Gross National Product in the course of the eighties.

New Credit Program

The Federal Government recommends: The increase in the loan volume of the World Bank and of the regional development banks, the replenishment of the international fund for agricultural development; amplified cofinancing between the multilateral financing organizations, private banks, and export credit institutes; improved access of the developing countries to the international capital markets.

The Federal Government expressly supports the novel credit program of the World Bank for financing structural adaptation measures.

The Federal Government is prepared to cooperate in its international measures by which part of the foreign-exchange surpluses of the OPEC countries is channeled to the developing countries (recycling).

Part of these proceeds should be allocated to the developing countries in the form of long-term development credits at favorable terms. Beyond that the OPEC countries should also make intensified direct investments in the developing countries.

For the purpose of financing the foreign-trade deficits the developing countries, in the opinion of the Federal Government, must utilize the International Monetary Fund's credit facilities more and earlier than heretofore. The financial allotment must be adapted to the liquidity requirements of the member countries. It is the view of the Federal Government that in this respect all options should be taken into account which could contribute to this end, especially the earliest possible enactment of the quota increase already adopted, the continuation of the allocation of Special Drawing Rights in keeping with the requirements in international liquidity, the borrowing in oil states at the most favorable terms possible.

The Federal Government welcomes the fact that the International Monetary Fund is examining ways to make the borrowing by developing countries with a low per-capita income more attractive by cutting credit costs. The credit-granting policy of the International Monetary Fund should make adequate allowances for the social and political effects of adaptation measures.

28. Disarmament and Development.

Since the high, worldwide arms expenditures limit the options of development financing, all states, including the countries of the Third World, should curtail their arms spending. Funds saved as a result of arms limitation agreements should above all be used for development tasks. The necessary increase in development contributions, however, must not be made dependent upon any headway in disarmament negotiations.

LE FIGARO EXAMINES U.S. 'COUNTERFORCE' STRATEGY

LD140855 Paris LE FIGARO in French 12 Aug 80 pp 1, 3

[Paul-Marie de la Gorce article: "Carter's Response"]

[Text] As we indicated in our 7 August edition, the American press has made public the substance of "Presidential Directive 59" by which President Carter has modified the doctrine governing the use of U.S. strategic nuclear forces.

The idea which inspires it is as old as nuclear arms themselves. It is still a question of using strategic nuclear arms while ensuring that this does not lead to the adversaries' "mutually assured destruction." This is understandable. By ensuring in advance this kind of mutual suicide, nuclear parity paralyzes the two biggest powers facing each other by making hardly imaginable any direct conflict between them in which the likely defeat of one protagonist would make him resort to nuclear arms and, as a result, engage in an "escalation" almost impossible to control. In any event, this has in fact preserved peace so far. Therefore, specialists and especially--we are not joking about this--general staffs eager to make any conflict plausible and "winnable" through rational use of nuclear arms have been obsessed by the idea of escaping from this predicament.

Today's Presidential Directive 59 seems to fall within the framework of change initiated in both concept and plan by the new Soviet arms systems, making an act of aggression conceivable and rational by envisaging the use of counterforce nuclear arms before the enemy uses his. At least this is the way it looks. The question is whether this can, in fact, be either an effective or indeed a plausible answer.

We certainly cannot be suspected of minimizing the significance of the new and major development constituted by the deployment of Soviet SS-20 missiles; following the publication of a study by General Gallois in a magazine specializing in these matters, we were the first French newspaper to analyze this question comprehensively and to demonstrate that, because of the invulnerability which their mobility ensures for them, their low yield and their extraordinary accuracy, these missiles have rendered the entire NATO military deployment vulnerable to a first strike and made NATO's entire strategy obsolete. However, it should be realized that the United States already has--albeit fewer--some medium-range nuclear arms, that is arms capable of reaching European Russia. These arms constitute the U.S. "forward based systems" and include F-111 aircraft based in Britain and strategic missiles and aircraft carried on naval craft belonging to the American Mediterranean fleet. What does "Presidential Directive 59" add in this respect?

It makes possible the use in a similar, that is, counterforce strike of a proportion of U.S. strategic (that is, long-range) arms. Theoretically, this would be by no means impossible. However, what should be fully realized and always remembered is that all this makes sense only if you strike first. Only then can you hope to destroy all fixed military targets on enemy territory. If the enemy takes the initiative, his forces will be on the move and his depots, barracks and bases either cleared or moved, and any counterforce nuclear strike against targets of this kind would lose most of its effectiveness.

It remains to be seen whether it is a plausible proposition for any Western country to take the initiative in starting a conflict. General Gallois, who was the first man to study the doctrine of use of the new medium-range nuclear arms and has studied it more thoroughly than anyone else, takes the view that such a hypothesis is improbable, and all Western leaders will swear that they will never be aggressors. [paragraph continues]

It is obvious, however, that no potential enemy can rely on guarantees of a moral nature. Let us leave this subject, merely remembering that, as far as enemy conventional forces are concerned, the doctrine governing the use of nuclear arms as determined by Presidential Directive 59 makes sense only if that enemy does not strike first.

As presented by the American press, this directive also anticipates that not only cities but also transmission and communication centers, command posts and so forth will be among targets subject to attack by American strategic nuclear forces. The least that can be said about this is that the "information" is rather disconcerting. For a great many years the United States has had many more nuclear warheads than it needs to destroy all the main population and economic centers in the USSR. It now has some 10,500 such warheads (whereas the Soviets have fewer than 6,000). It is sufficient to look at an atlas to see that the number of Soviet cities whose destruction would be significant is much smaller. Designated targets were diversified a very long time ago in accordance with an "extended anticity strategy," and this probably also applies to the French strike plan.

However, the new threat which the implementation of Presidential Directive 59 would represent for the silos in which Soviet ballistic missiles are stored has generally been emphasized in the United States. And it is on this basis that the directive has been described as a step initiating an era of counterforce strategy which is to replace the anticity strategy. Obviously, this is a response to questions voiced by American opinion stemming from the fact that, the Soviets can destroy with their "hardest" nuclear warheads the silos housing the Minuteman missiles, which represent some 50 percent of American stragegic launchers and 25 percent of their nuclear warheads. Peoples' minds could be put at ease if they learned that the United States was capable of a similar performance. However, in this sphere more than in any other people must neither rest content with official statements nor forgo criticism.

To destroy underground targets it is necessary to ensure a so-called crater effect which, unlike any other nuclear strike, calls for an explosion at ground level. As a result, the radioactivity produced reaches its maximum and its effects are enormous. A 1-megaton explosion makes 6 million tons of ground radioactive. The USSR has 2,200 silos housing ballistic missiles. It is reasonable to assume that it would take 2 megatons per silo to ensure the destruction of all of them. Therefore, to assess the results of such a "counterforce" strike it is necessary to multiply the above mentioned effect by 4,400. This simply means that the Russian people would be largely exterminated. And the Soviets would achieve a similar result if they were to act in the same way. According to an American survey, one strike against Minuteman bases in Arkansas would result in the death of 6-16 million people. It is perfectly clear that any attack of this kind would lead to a counterattack using nuclear arms which would have not been destroyed, that is, in any event and at least by fleets of submarines carrying nuclear missiles. And this would take us back to "mutually assured destruction." The truth is that at this level there can be no counterforce strategy which is not also an anticity strategy to the highest degree.

LE MONDE VIEWS IMPLICATIONS OF DEFEAT OF IRANIAN 'MODERATES'

[Editorial: "The Defeat of the 'Moderates'"]

[Excerpts] The appointment of Mohammad 'Ali Raja'i as the Islamic republic's prime minister constitutes a major defeat for Bani-Sadr and hence for the "moderate" wing of the Iranian revolution. For more than 3 months the head of state had tried to appoint a man he trusted but he has finally given way to strong pressure from the Islamic Republic Party [IRP] by resigning himself to Mr Raja'i's candidacy.

Nonetheless Mr Bani-Sadr has not given up the fight. He has not resigned, as some people had said he would. However, in the letter he sent to parliament he clearly stated that he takes no responsibility for this decision. Mr Raja'i's candidacy was proposed, he wrote, "to take account of the wishes of the 'ad hoc' committee and the Majles." The president's thinking seems clear: He thought it preferable to maintain a key position backed by popular support than to step down in the face of his adversaries.

The speech he delivered Sunday, 10 August, demonstrated his combativeness. With unusual virulence he denounced the "so-called Islamic group" which is trying to "monopolize power"--a group which, he claims, comprises "flatterers," "liars," "thugs" and "charlatans." Expressing almost word for word the opinions--paradoxically the same opinions which he formerly regarded as "counterrevolutionary"--expressed by former Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan, he warned the people against the danger of a "dictatorship of the clergy."

Now that the IRP has gained control of the levers of power a new phase is opening in the Islamic republic's tormented history. However, it does not seem to promise any stability. The power struggle between the "radicals" and "moderates" will probably continue in other forms.

L'HUMANITE DISPUTES MEDIA 'LIES' ON AFGHAN DEVELOPMENTS

LD121053 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 6 Aug 80 p 5

[Text] "No Soviet general has been assassinated in Kabul. Nothing has happened in Ghazni." This is the official denial given by the Afghan Foreign Ministry which we questioned following "reports" published by AFP and cited by the whole of theprinted press, radio and television. Once again the reports were untrue.

From LE FIGARO to LE MONDE via LE MATIN and LIBERATION, there was a wealth of headlines followed by extremely detailed commentaries. It was as if they had been there. They gave the makes of automobiles and everything. There were no grammatical precautions or use of the conditional tense. The Soviet general's Volga was hit by a Volkswagen coming from the opposite direction "and, as the officer was trying to get out a shot was fired, killing him outright."

If the truth is not always conceivable, what is conceivable is not always true. Imaginary "details" cannot turn a lie into the truth. However, it is very convincing to the reader.

This applies to the city of Ghazni where, according to the same AFP special envoy, the Afghan Army's 14th Division rebelled on 24 July and deserted its barracks. LE MONDE, LE MATIN, LE FIGARO and the others write that the Soviet Air Force then "bombed Ghazni and the surrounding villages."

The Afghan foreign minister has stated in a telegram that nothing happened at Ghazni.

Everybody remembers how, at the end of July, Education Minister Anahita Ratebzad was "assassinated" for several days in the French press. This continued until the Kabul government was informed and denied the "report." Since then Anahita Ratebzad has appeared alive and well at rallies and meetings.

Argentine journalist Francois Lepot, special envoy from the Buenos Aires newspaper CLARIN, has just visited all the villages around Kabul which LE MONDE mentioned as having been razed to the ground by bombs. There is no trace of any bombing....

However, this has not discouraged the liemongers. They are continuing to do what is expected of them, namely discrediting the Afghan Government.

AUTHORITIES CHECKING IDENTITIES OF ARRESTED IRANIANS

AU140840 Rome ANSA in English 0825 GMT 14 Aug 80

[Text] Rome, August 14 (ANSA)--New checks have been ordered on the identity of the 22 Iranian students arrested August 8 after staging a demonstration in St. Peter's Square in Vatican City.

At the time of their arrest, the students all gave their name as Ali, the name of Mohammed's cousin. It has been rough going trying to ascertain their true identity as most of them had no documents with them at the time of their arrest.

The studetns had demonstrated in front of St. Peter's to protest Israel's unilateral decision to transfer its capital to Jerusalem. The Vatican's Swiss Guard rounded up the protestors and, in line with the convention which exists between the Holy See and the State of Italy, handed them over to Italian police.

The students were detained on charges of refusing to correctly identify themselves. Investigators are now checking identities and domiciles and whether the Iranians are legally in the country. On the basis of this information, the detainees will either be released or prosecuted.

MSI LEADER: COSSIGA 'TOO QUICK' IN BLAMING RIGHT FOR BOMBING

[Text] Bologna, August 14 (ANSA)--In an interview to the ESPRESSO weekly, MSI-neofascist party leader Giorgio Almirante said that in his view Premier Francesco Cossiga had been too quick to see extreme rightwingers behind the Bologna bomb massacre which has so far led to 82 deaths.

"I don't rule out anything, but I think that all leads must be followed up", he said. Almirante admitted that rightwing terrorism existed and said that the recent assassination of the Rome magestrate Mario Amati testified to that. However, "these assassins have nothing to do with us and are our worst enemies," he added.

Turning to (?one first) suspect Mario Tuti, the "MSI" secretary said that he was a criminal deserving life imprisonment or even the death penalty for having killed the policemen. However, Almirante said he didn't think that Tuti had anything to do with the Italicus train massacre.

A bomb exploded on the train of August 4, 1974, near Bologna, killing 13 and wounding 52. The nazi-fasicst group "Black Order" claimed responsibility for that attack and police considered Tuti one of the chief suspects in the case.

ROBLES PIQUER ON CURRENT ASPECTS OF FOREIGN POLICY

LD131531 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 9 Aug 80 p 9

[Carmelo Martin report: "Robles Piquer Acknowledges That Difficulties Have Arisen in Spanish-USSR Relations"]

[Text] Tenerife--Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Carlos Robles Piquer has acknowledged to EL PAIS in Tenerife that, despite the fact that Spain's relations with the USSR "are correct and frequently cordial," it is nevertheless true that, as a result of the Spanish Government's condemnation of the Russian military invasion of Afghanistan, "certain difficulties in relations have arisen."

Robles Piquer has remained on the island of Tenerife after attending the ceremonies marking the first anniversary of Macias' overthrow in Equatorial Guinea in order to accompany former Venezuelan President Rafael Caldera during his tour of the Canary Islands.

Regarding NATO, the Spanish politician reiterated the views expressed by Spanish Foreign Minister Marcelino Oreja, although he specified that "entry into the Atlantic alliance will have to be negotiated in a tough manner." In his opinion, "this entry will strengthen our defense capability, which Spain is required to achieve within its means."

Referring to the Sahara conflict, Robles Piquer told this newspaper that the self-determination of its people has not been completed. "The Saharan people will have to have their own say with respect to their future under conditions which will have to be carefully worked out, because they must be master of that future," he stated.

The secretary of state gave a talk on the Canary Islands' international significance in Garachico (Tenerife), as part of its 10th cultural festival. Robles Piquer stated that "Spain's most desired and coveted apex rests on the Canary Islands." At another point in the talk he stated, with regard to Spain's entry into the Common Market, that "nobody can want the process of our country's integration into the European structures to be turned into negotiations among storekeepers."

Oyarzabal: "Entering NATO Does Not Imply Accepting Bases"

"The government's decision that Spain should enter NATO does not mean--far from it--that we are going to accept foreign bases on our territory or that we are going to send our troops abroad," Diplomatic Information Director General Antonio Oyarzabal has stated in Tenerife. "All these aspects are details of our membership which will have to be negotiated, since it should be very clear that the principle of entering the alliance is no more than the principle of joint defense," he added. In the diplomat's opinion, this defense covers the entire national territory, although the government "wants the Canary Islands to be defended solely by Spanish forces," though, according to what he said, it has not yet discussed this matter with NATO leaders. Oyarzabal asserted with regard to the islands: "The government's policy is clear." He said that, as an integral part of the national territory, the archipelago "will enjoy the guarantee entailed by belonging to an alliance," and emphasized that "our entry into NATO will not mean--far from it--that there will be any foreign bases in the Canary Islands."

MINISTERS OPPOSE CALLS FOR INCREASED DEFENSE SPENDING

Prime Minister Joergensen

LD131523 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 11 Aug 80 p 10

[BJ. report on remarks by Danish Prime Minister Anker Joergensen at 10 August Social Democratic Party rally in Helsingoer: "Anker Joergensen Does Not Want To Increase Defense Spending"]

[Excerpt] "The nonsocialist parties are calling for cuts in public spending, but not as far as defense spending is concerned. Here they are calling for an increased budget. The Liberals' Henning Christophersen is calling for an increase in defense spending of at least 3 percent as a condition of their support of a multiparty defense bill. The Conservatives' Poul Schlueter has said the same, but has softened a little and is now calling for 2.8 percent or perhaps only 2 percent."

"The government's move means a defense budget of more than 7 billion kroner. This has been acceptable up to now. For this reason an unchanged budget framework with the necessary adjustments for price rises would not be as unreasonable in 1981 and the years after as people are making out," Anker Joergensen said.

The prime minister made it clear that the government is prepared to resume negotiations for a new defense agreement next month with the same partners as it negotiated with in the spring. "But with the demands made by Henning Christophersen and Poul Schlueter the prospects of achieving broad agreement are not great," the prime minister said.

"We cannot agree to increase defense spending and to increase international tension. This is also the reason why we still refuse to have nuclear arms on Danish soil," the prime minister said.

Comment on Olesen's Statement

LD131543 Copenhagen BERLINSKGE TIDENDE in Danish 11 Aug 80 pt 1 p 8

[Editorial: "The 3 Percent"]

[Text] The debate on the 3 percent increase in the defense budget, which the Social Democrats are not willing to accept, is blocking a much more important debate on what a future defense plan should contain. The discussion of the 3 percent deals also more with the past than with the future. Thus Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen is now saying that Denmark never promised to let its defense spending rise by 3 percent and he accuses others of a poor memory when they claim that this is the case.

Kjeld Olesen was not present at the summit in Washington in 1978 when the 3 percent increase was adopted. He forgets that Prime Minister Anker Joergensen's reservations covered the period up to the current defense plan's expiration, that is, 1 April 1981.

Because the Danish defense budget was fixed for a 4-year period from 1977 to 1981, the prime minister could not promise in 1978 to increase it before 1981 and the government has not increased it. On the contrary, this year it has cut the defense budget by 100 million kroner. Now the reservations expressed in 1978 are supposed to cover the period after 1 April 1981. This is a most unbecoming way of wriggling out of a joint resolution in the Atlantic alliance.

Kjeld Olesen also says a number of other unfortunate things in his statements to Frederiksborg Amtsavis and gets himself involved in the defense debate. He states, with apparent superior knowledge, that there is not much wisdom in saying that all countries should only make increases of 3 percent. One could, for example, imagine, says Kjeld Olesen, that some countries could increase their defense budgets by more and others by less.

Judging by the government's and the Social Democrats' attitude, Denmark would then belong to a new third category, which does not increase defense spending at all. But Kjeld Olesen has an answer to this. He confidently explains that the government, by restoring the 100 million kroner it has cut from the defense budget this year and by sticking to the system of adjustments for price rises that has been in effect until now, is in fact increasing the defense budget. In doing so Denmark is fulfilling its defense commitments, the foreign minister adds.

Is it with this type of argument that Denmark is to convince the rest of the world of the credibility of Danish security and defense policy? It would not even be convincing if the Danish defense forces' target troop strengths had already been reached. But the defense forces have a deferred salary increase payment of over 2 million kroner, and the international situation has become more tense since the 1978 resolution, especially as a result of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Juggling with figures cannot hide, much less solve, Denmark's defense problems. And this juggling is not made better by the fact that it is being done by the country's foreign minister. Its just becomes more revealing and more embarrassing.

NORWAY

NORWEGIAN, FRG LEADERS TO MEET 24-25 AUGUST

LD071102 Hamburg DPA in German 1007 GMT 7 Aug 80

[Text] Oslo, 7 Aug (DPA)--The Norwegian Prime Minister Odvar Nordli, and his foreign minister, Knut Frydenlund, will meet with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on 24 and 25 August. The Norwegian Foreign Ministry stated in Oslo on Thursday that unofficial talks are planned in Hamburg and Bremen. It is a return invitation resulting from Schmidt's visit to Norway last year. According to Norwegian newspaper reports, at the forefront of the talks at the meeting will probably be the East-West relationship and in particular the relationship with the Soviet Union. The Norwegian foreign minister received an invitation to visit Moscow in the autumn.

PLO URGED TO BRING POLICY ON ISRAEL IN LINE WITH NORWAY'S

[Editorial: "Norway and the PLO"]

[Text] Voices have been heard calling for a new debate on Norway's attitude on the Middle East situation. Storting Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Arvid Johanson (Labor Party) thinks it time for a pause for thought in foreign policy. We ought to use this to discuss the question of whether it is now time to review our approach to this complicated problem. Now that Foreign Minister Frydenlund has declared his agreement with his party colleague, we can expect that such a discussion will take place. The foreign minister is right to fear that it could be a difficult exchange of views, because the subject is so emotionally charged.

In any debate on the Middle East, Norway's attitude toward the PLO will be a key question. Until now Norway has been one of the countries most restrictive toward the PLO. Should we soften our approach to Yasir 'Arafat and his supporters? The question has become urgent since Norway alone among European nations last week voted against the UN resolution supporting the establishment of a Palestinian state.

It goes without saying that the PLO and the Palestinians must have a place in any arrangement that will bring lasting peace to this troubled area. Some circles claim that by recognizing the PLO in the same way as we recognize independent states Norway could help to start such a process. But this is an idea which in our opinion must be rejected. And the main reason for our negative opinion of a declaration of sympathy for the PLO is its own attitude toward Israel.

There has never been--nor must there be in the future--any doubt about Norway's view of the foundation on which the State of Israel must build its existence. It must have guarantees that its inhabitants can live within secure borders. For this reason it was correct for Norway to oppose last week's UN resolution. It made no mention at all of this obvious Israeli right, but supported instead the PLO's demand for its own Palestinian state.

The PLO has time and again been urged to commit itself to respecting the Israeli State. It has replied with spiteful declarations that its goal is to destroy Israel. In other words, the PLO has declared war on Israel, whereas Norway is working to give Israel a peaceful future. This part of our Middle East policy must never be allowed to be the subject of any discussion. In the same way, we must never forget the Palestinians' legitimate rights in a peace settlement.

Without overestimating our country's international importance, it is possible to assume that the PLO has taken greater interest in Norway since the UN vote. It has become even more desirable for it to have Norway on its side. But before Norway can enter into any form of political contacts with this fighting organization, it will have to formally accept our terms. The precondition for the "normalization" of the relationship between Norway and the PLO must be that the PLO review its own policy toward Israel and bring it into line with our own.

DEFENSE MINISTER NOTES IMPORTANCE OF INCREASED BUDGET

LD121327 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 10 Aug 80 p 7

[Text] "We must never forget that we are not only defending our own country. We have an international role which is also important." Defense Minister Eric Kronmark said this in a speech at the Nolia Conference in Eiteaa on Saturday. He asserted that the structure and strength of the Swedish Defense Forces also influence the military situation in neighboring countries. "But with a reduced or unchanged defense budget our ability to make a credible attempt to defend all parts of the country would be reduced," the defense minister went on to say.

ARMS COMMISSION TO PROPOSE MORE EXPORT RESTRICTIONS

LD121537 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 8 Aug 80 p 21

[Monica Eklof report: "Tigher New Rules for Arms Exports"]

[Text] It will be more difficult in the future to export Swedish arms. The standing commission on arms exports will make this recommendation, SVENSKA DAGBLADET has heard.

Swedish arms exports have trebled in the last 5 years. Last year exports totaled 1.7 billion kronor, a 52-percent increase in comparison with the previous year.

In 1979 a parliamentary commission was appointed to revise the arms export regulations, which were often vague and difficult to interpret.

The present guidelines were written in 1971. The commission was given the task of establishing distinctions between civilian and military exports, creating rules for the production under license of Swedish arms abroad, and finally of drawing up criteria for countries to be given the "green light."

"Legislation will probably be altered so that the circle of countries to which exports are permitted will be limited," Sven Andersson, committee chairman and former defense minister, said.

Borderline cases are, for example, several countries in the Middle East such as Iraq and Libya. The extent to which Sweden may or may not sell arms to these countries is currently dependent on the type of weapons involved.

Before the commission began its work there were expectations within the Swedish arms industry that arms exports would be liberalized. The then Trade Minister Hadar Cars also said in the directive to the commission that war materials exports are often of great local importance for employment. The export trade can compensate for the decrease in orders from the Swedish Defense Forces, the trade minister said. Up to now 25 percent of Swedish arms production has gone toward exports.

But now there will be stricter rules instead.

"A number of commission members want to strangle arms exports completely. But to produce arms for our own defense forces we must have long production runs, so we have to be able to export," said Sven Andersson, who is himself responsible for the current regulations.

The commission has studied the last 5 years' arms deals in detail. According to Sven Andersson the increases can principally be ascribed to countries that are completely "green." Green areas on the permitted list are Scandinavia and most of Western Europe.

But if a Swedish company wants to sell arms to Greece or Turkey (which has troops in Cyprus) the war materials inspector will say no. It is he who checks all arms export deals before they are submitted to the government. Eastern Europe and many countries in the Third World are also doubtful cases.

The exact distribtution of arms sales between various countries is secret. According to the Adult Education Association newspaper IMPULS the largest purchasers of Swedish arms are Norway, Britain and Yugoslavia. More than 15 percent probably goes to developing countries.

At present Kockums shipyards are negotiating the sale of submarines worth 1.5 billion kronor to India. If the deal comes off, 1980 arms exports will exceed those of 1979 by a wide margin.

Sweden has a general prohibition on arms sales to foreign countries. All arms deals with foreign countries are thus special dispensations. [paragraph continues]

According to the law adopted by the Riksdag in 1971 which governs arms exports, Sweden is not allowed to sell war materials to countries in armed conflict with another country, involved in international conflict and running the risk of being drawn into war, or to countries which have armed internal unrest.

However, in a commentary the government makes a distinction between war materials of a defensive type and others. A more generous interpretation is made when defensive arms, such as coastal artillery and air defenses, are concerned.

The international arms trade amounts to 100 billion kronor every year. Nowadays it is the developing countries that are the largest purchasers. Today the Third World buys almost three-fourths of all arms sold.

Sweden is in 12th place among arms exporters since overtaking Czechoslovakia last year.

The commission is expected to present its recommendations at the beginning of next year.

GOVERNMENT RECOGNITION OF PLO DEPENDS ON 'RESPECT' FOR ISRAEL

LD121515 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 9 Aug 80 p 1

[Editorial: "'Arafat Will Have To Wait"]

[Text] The Swedish Government does not think it particularly important to receive PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat on an official visit. This has caused indignation in certain circles, which is not surprising since the Palestinian question has in recent years become much more emotive and sympathy for the Palestinians has grown apace with the increasingly provocative line pursued by Menachem Begin in Israel.

But Begin's provocations do not make the PLO's avowed goal of liquidating the State of Israel any more acceptable. No one can close their eyes to the fact that the PLO will have to play a role in the troublesome peace process which is moving so slowly forward in the Middle East. But the Swedish Government is right to state that the time is not right for a visit from the PLO leader, since Sweden already has the necessary contacts with the PLO.

When the government tersely states that it has "adequate information on the PLO's long-term political objectives and on its current standpoints," then the hint is bound to be understood in Beirut, subtle though it is. If it is not, then reference may be made to Norwegian Social Democratic Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund's recent declaration. Frydenlund, who unlike his Swedish Social Democratic political friends has to take strong pro-Israeli pressure groups into account, has clearly stated that he does not intend to receive a Palestinian politican who is not prepared to state that he respects the Israeli State's right to continued existence.

In recent years Yasir 'Arafat has been able to notch up a series of diplomatic successes, and his political offensive is now directed at the EEC nations, since they decided in June to send a fact-finding commission to the Middle East.

In his attempts to initiate a dialogue with Europe and to isolate Western Europe from the United States, 'Arafat has denied that he cherishes any plans to eradicate Israel. But his soft negotiating line has been rejected by large groups within the PLO. Even if tensions within the Palestinian movement are exaggerated in Israeli arguments, there is clear evidence that they do exist.

This could explain why the Palestinian representative in Stockholm has been quick to act and personally tried to invite 'Arafat to Sweden. Once 'Arafat and the Fatah guerrilla movement led by him can assure us with one voice that they respect the existence of the Israeli State, then talks could be more useful. Even in Stockholm.

EMPLOYMENT OF EEC NATIONALS IN GOVERNMENT OPPOSED

[Terence Shaw report: "EEC Jobs 'Open Door' Opposed"]

[Text] Claims by the EEC Commission in Brussels that under Common Market law nationals from other member states should have wide access to jobs in government departments are being vigorously opposed by Britain.

There is deep concern that if the Commission's view of the law--designed to protect free movement of workers within the Community--is upheld, it will seriously disrupt the civil service's structure and organization and cause administrative chaos.

Under the Commission's interpretation of EEC law, there should be no automatic ban on a person from another EEC state working for a government department or service.

It argues that member states only have power to exclude them from higher-echelon jobs where they exercise some form of executive discretion.

In the British Government's view this is too broad an interpretation of the Treaty of Rome.

The goverment's challenge to the Commission's interpretation of Community law has come in a case that the Commission is bringing against the Belgian Government claiming that its exclusion of other EEC nationals from working for Belgian Railways violates this law.

In proceedings against Belgium before European Court of Justice judges in Luxembourg, the British, French and West German governments have intervened, claiming that the Commission's interpretation is too wide.

Sir Ian Percival, QC, solicitor-general, has appeared before the court to argue the British case. Judgment is expected later this year.

Treaty of Rome provisions protect workers from movement between member states but protection does not apply to "employment in the public service."

In the Commission's view this restriction should be interpreted narrowly and only allow member states to exclude other EEC nationals from jobs which involve security or exercise executive discretion.

In his argument before the court, Sir Ian challenged the Commission's view under which, he claimed, a person would only be regarded as employed in the "public service" if by chance he was made custodian of secret files. It would become a "bureaucratic nightmare" if it became necessary to examine what a man was doing at every stage of his career to ensure that a Community national did not stray into an activity where national interests were involved.

He pointed out that the Luxembourg court had already ruled that once a national of another member state had been admitted to the public service it was no longer lawful to discriminate against him on the ground of his nationality. He told the court that the British Government regarded as "wholly unacceptable" the Commission's suggestion that a member state should be obliged to admit non-nationals to its public service but that it should be entitled to erect barriers against their promotion and transfer so that they could never exercise official authority.

ATHENS PAPER INTERVIEWS KIPRIANOU ON RESUMPTION OF TALKS

AT121430 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 12 Aug 80 pp 1, 4 special edition

[Exclusive interview with President of the Republic of Cyprus Spiros Kiprianou--date, place not given]

[Text] Question: As has already been officially announced, "continuous and uninterrupted" talks will begin in order to seek a solution to the Cyprus problem. Could you tell us on what basis the dialogue will be held and what are the prospects for success in light of the consultations which preceded the acceptance of the opening statement that was read at the first meeting on Saturday, 9 August?

Answer: The intercommunal talks will be resumed on the basis of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements of 12 February 1977 (Makarios-Denktas) and 19 May (Kiprianou-Denktas). Regarding the prospects for success at the talks, it would not be realistic to express great optimism due, on the one hand, to our bitter experience with the Turkish Cypriot side's stance during the previous rounds of talks and, on the other hand, to the very negative statements which Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas made just after the announcement on the resumption of talks. Nevertheless, the Greek Cypriot side will come to the talks with lots of goodwill so as to work positively and constructively for the pursuit of a just solution that will serve the interests of the Cypriot people as a whole.

Question: What basically was the reason the resumption of the intercommunal talks had been impeded until now?

Answer: The basic reason the resumption of the intercommunal talks had been impeded until now was the stance of the Turkish Cypriot side which insisted that we accept from the outset commitments and conditions that would prejudge an unacceptable solution to the Cyprus problem.

Question: The controversial point and prerequisite which the Turkish side put forth for accepting the dialogue was, among other things, that you accept the term "bizonal." Should we understand that the Turkish demands have been accepted? Under what terms and prior commitments from the Greek Cypriot side is the dialogue resuming?

Answer: Our viewpoint regarding bizonal--as the Turkish Cypriot side understands, analyzes and explains it in public statements--is well known. On the basis of the procedure which has been agreed upon for the resumption of the talks, our side will in no way be bound on the issue of the bizonal solution. The Greek Cypriot side has not made any prior commitment. Of course the issue of bizonality, like any other position or viewpoint of each side, can be discussed during the talks.

Question: Doesn't the acceptance by the Greek Cypriot side of the inclusion of the term "bizonal" in the opening statement of the UN secretary general contain the danger of degenerating the talks into unending discussions concerning the interpretation of the term, especially taking into consideration the fact that the interpretation which the Turkish side attaches to the term prejudges a solution that will be contrary to the four guidelines and your agreement with Denktas?

Answer: Of course there is a danger that the issue of bizonality may lead into unending discussions but this possibility would exist anyway if the issue were raised during the talks without having been included in the opening statement. Whether this will happen will basically depend upon the stance adopted by the other side and on the sort of solution it seeks.

Question: Is the timing of the resumption of the talks connected with a Turkish maneuver aimed at circumventing the Cyprus Government's recourse to the United Nations?

Answer: I cannot state with certainty the reasons the Turkish side is currently coming to the intercommunal talks. In any case, however, the Cyprus problem is already included on the agenda of the next UN General Assembly meeting on the basis of a decision that was made during last year's General Assembly meeting. Developments will decide the course which the discussion will take at the General Assembly.

Question: Cypriot political circles have claimed that our proposals submitted in 1977 did not provide for a federation but for local autonomy for the Turkish Cypriots. Would you like to comment on this?

Answer: The proposals we submitted in 1977 provided for a federation and not merely for autonomy for the Turkish Cypriots; this is confirmed by the favorable response with which they were received internationally.

Question: You have repeatedly stressed the need for unity on the domestic front. What kind of unity can emerge when the island's various political forces are putting forth two diametrically opposed courses regarding the solution of the Cyprus problem?

Answer: I believe in the need for absolute unity on the domestic front as an indispensable prerequisite for the successful conclusion and vindication of the struggle we are waging. It is a fact that the various political parties and factions do not see the problem in the same way. Despite this, I believe that all the parties and political factions aim at a just solution--under the current circumstances--which will guarantee the state's survival and protect the citizens' rights. Thus we can say that there is a common denominator in the positions of the various parties; the very necessary unity could be built on this common denominator.

Question: The gesture of unity you made toward AKEL and Glavkos Kliridhis' Democratic Rally Party was rejected by the leaders of these two parties. What is your comment on their stance?

Answer: It is said that AKEL and Democratic Rally did not respond positively to my efforts for unity. In any case, my efforts to achieve unity will continue because I believe that without unity both our internal front will weaken and prospects for an acceptable solution will recede even more.

Question: Both AKEL and Kliridhis' Democratic Rally blame you for the deadlock in the Cyprus problem and for encouraging Turkish intransigence, directly or indirectly. They accuse you of not recognizing the proposals of 1977 and that, in substance, you reject the Makarios-Denktas agreement. What have you to say to this and to the timing of this attack against you?

Answer: The claim that I do not recognize the proposals of 1977 and that I reject the Makarios-Denktas agreement is entirely unfounded. Proof of this is the fact that a reference to the Makarios-Denktas agreement was made in the agreement of 19 May 1978 which I concluded with Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas. Obviously this claim was put forth within the framework of the campaign to undermine the president of the state, the consequences of which, however, will be to undermine the position of the Greek Cypriot side which is presented as having equal responsibility--an unacceptable thing--with the Turkish Cypriot leadership for the past failure of efforts to solve the Cyprus problem. As regards the timing of the attack against me, this is something about which I have not yet reached a final conclusion.

Question: Given the fact the Turkish Cypriot side has not moved at all from its unacceptable partitionist positions, should we understand that your acceptance of the opening statements by Waldheim, both in June and now, is the result of a coordinated attack by the two specific parties and certain other self-styled Makarios circles?

Answer: My only yardstick for accepting or rejecting any proposals connected with the Cyprus problem is whether these serve and promote the Cyprus cause and not the intensity of the attacks or the degree of pressure that can be exerted by any circle. Without declining to ask about and discuss the viewpoints of other people, I do not intend to yield to pressure or accept anything that may harm the Cyprus cause.

Question: Because there recently has been much talk about the Makarios line and an exploitation of his name, obviously to serve personal or party interests, can you tell us precisely what the Makarios line is?

Answer: Briefly, the Makarios line can be described as a line of struggle, a line that rejects the acceptance of the faits accomplis of the aggression, a line of constant struggle for survival. At the same time, the great leader was sufficiently realistic not to ignore facts and he did not hesitate to show flexibility, when circumstances demanded it, in order to hinder worse developments. However, he knew where concessions end and surrender begins. He knew where the point of safety lay beyond which any concession was unacceptable. This is the line the Cyprus Government follows faithfully and consistently.

KHARAVYI SCORES KIPRIANOU'S STATEMENT AT PRESS CONFERENCE

[Editorial: "The People Must Be Vigilant"]

[Text] No matter how much we may try, we are unable to understand the expedience of President Kiprianou's contradictory and untimely statements at last Saturday's press conference. Why did President Kiprianou choose the day of the resumption of the intercommunal talks to "brief" the people on the political issue? Why did he choose this day to answer Denktas' and Onan's provocative statements in a provocative and negative way? Why did he open a public debate on the positions that we will support at the intercommunal talks, while at the same time stating that such a thing should not take place? Why didn't he avoid pitfalls or contradictions in connection with thorny issues, such as the term "bizonal solution of the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem," the meaning of which is clear in the Waldheim statement since it is preceded by the phrase: "Both parties have reaffirmed their support for a federal solution" of the Cyprus problem?

Our amazement is justified because during his press conference Kiprianou himself adopted a sound position that, by seeking "a solution of biregional federation" on the basis of the two agreements, "we recommend that there should be no wrangling over terminologies during the negotiations but that efforts should be made to ascertain if a substantive agreement can be reached." Mr Kiprianou put forward a sound position which he himself immediately violated at the same press conference, showing his usual inconsistency in words and deeds.

Kiprianou's statement, which came only 2 hours after the resumption of the talks, and the responsible statement by the Greek Cypriot side's interlocutor dealt exclusively with the question of the intercommunal talks and stressed the differences between the two sides.

The inconsistent and contradictory nature of the statement served as a unique opportunity for both Denktas who is systematically intransigent and provocative and the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor to make an official protest to the UN representatives over Kiprianou's statement and, moreover, to give him a public lesson on the "sense of responsibility and understanding"! Denktas has rightly described Kiprianou's statement as "a good element" in his hands because he is really served by this statement.

We again point out to Mr Kiprianou and his government that in the question of intercommunal talks under the auspices of the UN secretary general, we must be careful and serious. Our attitude must always be constructive and positive and our positions must be substantive and well studied in order to achieve progress and some result. Because of the rejection of the Waldheim proposal last August, 1 year has been lost for no good reason. This immobility in the Cyprus problem not only preserves the faits accomplis of the invasion, thus serving Turkish chauvinism, but also creates very serious dangers for the future of the Cypriot people, Greeks and Turks alike. The decision of the national-ministerial councils to accept the Waldheim statement and resume the talks is so important that it can be a milestone not only for the resumption of the talks under the auspices of the UN secretary general, but also for a multifaceted and more general promotion of the Cyprus problem, a problem which the enemies of Cyprus are keeping deadlocked and immobilized in order to achieve their profane goals at the expense of the Cyprus Republic and its people.

It is the duty of all patriots that we prove ourselves worthy of the current decisive moments by safeguarding the irreplaceable procedure of the talks. The government's prime duty is, on the one hand, to seriously prepare itself for substantive intercommunal negotiations mainly in connection with the complicated constitutional issue, and on the other to do everything to create a good climate and a spirit of mutual understanding and cooperation between the two communities, which have been separated by the imperialist conspiracy. No one has the right to undermine the procedure of the talks--talks which are resumed after one year's delay--with unwise activities and statements because this would be tantamount to serving the plans of Cyprus' enemies and of preserving the faits accomplis of the invasion. No one has the right to play this role regardless of how high he may stand. The people must be vigilant.

STATE MINISTER ON INTERNATIONAL NUCLEAR CONTROL

DW150958 Baden-Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1700 GMT 13 Aug 80

[Correspondent Stephan interview with Minister of State in the Foreign Office Klaus von Dohnanyi in Geneva--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The Federal Republic has been criticized in the past by the United States, above all, because it transferred nuclear technology with which it is possible to build nuclear bombs. The case most widely known was that of Brazil, and at the moment we are making deliveries to Argentina. Do you think that this criticism will come up here at the Geneva conference, and will we change our attitude?

[Answer] This criticism is no longer upheld today. We succeeded in clearing up the misunderstandings that prevailed over this issue. The Federal Government advocates the view that complete, comprehensive control is necessary for installations with which nuclear explosives might be produced. But, on the other hand, it is our view that this will be possible only if the Third World, meaning the states not having any access to nuclear technology, are included. I believe that agreement exists today that the inclusion of the Third World alone will provide chance for attaining full control over potential dangers.

[Question] Is it possible at all to make a fine distinction in the nuclear field between the power plant technology for peaceful purposes and the arms technology?

[Answer] The Third World needs nuclear technology, in any case in a certain volume, so as to cope with its energy problems. This is obvious even now if we take a look at the oil bill of the Third World. The Third World will also need nuclear fuel, of course, and since the danger exists that nuclear fuels might be issued it is necessary to institute full control also for installations in the Third World. But for this purpose it is necessary first of all to cooperate with the Third World, as otherwise the danger exists that in other states which have not joined the nonproliferation treaty, for example, developments might take place which may ultimately allow access to nuclear fuels without any such joint control responsibility, an access which might be misused, especially because it is not always possible to differentiate clearly between nuclear energy and the possible misuse of nuclear energy. For this very reason we need the joint control responsibility, and this in turn is possible only if the have-nots of today are also included in the responsibility.

[Question] Some developing countries at this review converence, and before at the first of these conferences in 1975, voiced misgivings because they are not allowed to participate properly in the peaceful use of nuclear energy, something that the treaty provides. Peru, for example, announced yesterday that it might withdraw from the treaty. How is this to be judged in this context?

[Answer] The answer is the same again. If the Third World, that is those not having their own access to nuclear technology but who need nuclear energy, are not included in the technology, if their access to the utilization of nuclear energy is made difficult or even impossible for them, these countries in the long run will not participate in the great project of the nonproliferation treaty. This is why we said in the large-scale debate on the Brazilian project which took place a few years back that a course of inclusion in joint responsibility alone will allow comprehensive control in the long run. Besides, the Third World not only complains about this but also laments the fact that disarmament in the nuclear sector has not been adequate. This is something, by the way, which we fully endorse. It is our view, for example, that the SALT II treaty must be ratified in the United States, and we very much hope that in this manner the control process over nuclear weapons can be broadened and deepened between East and West as well.

CORRESPONDENT DESCRIBES NEW U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY

[Lothar Ruehl article: "Renunciation of the Old Deterrence"]

[Text] The directive for the nuclear strategy of the United States toward the Soviet Union in the eighties that has so far become known only in outlines is tantamount to the transition from pure deterrence by the threat against people to limited nuclear warfare with intercontinental weapons. What is planned is attacks on selected strategic targets with several consecutive, selective nuclear strikes. If strategic nuclear weapons were used, this would be more limited in terms of area and number of weapons, but would be more protracted temporally, i.e., over several days, possibly over several weeks, always under the proviso that the Russian adversary goes along with such a patient chess game with nuclear weapons.

If the decision in Washington concerning the threat to military targets and political-military leadership centers in the Soviet Union really would be turned into action planning, President Carter would also have to procure the necessary additional, and very costly, armament. Effective threat to small, hardened subterranean targets means pinpoint-accurate arms, great range, and concentrated effect on the target without any large-scale damage proliferation in the greater environment.

At the moment the U.S. nuclear armed forces do not have accurate arms for selective attacks on small targets in numbers adequate for putting into practice a military offensive strategy of limited nuclear warfare. The Poseidon missiles aboard the nuclear submarines have 8 to 10 nuclear warheads of 50 kilotons. The range of the missiles amounts to 2,500 nautical miles, with a target deviation several hundred meters. These missiles can be effectively used against smaller surface targets such as airports, telecommunications and radar installations, barracks, shipyards, railroad installations, bridges and landing strips, to be sure. Yet they can destroy bunkers, subterranean missile silos and depots as well as underwater installations only with a bull's-eye hit.

The 1,054 land-based intercontinental Minuteman and Titan missiles stationed in North America with a total of 2,154 warheads can be used for the same purpose with better effect on the target. But these very land-based missiles have been more and more threatened by disarming surprise attacks because of the many Soviet large MIRVed missiles.

This growing threat was decisive for two decisions of arms policy with which arms-shy President Carter had hesitated for a long time:

First, the procurement of at first 200 MX intercontinental missiles with limited mobility, armed with 2,000 relatively accurate nuclear warheads.

Second, the Trident submarine cruiser program. To begin with this includes missiles with 1,600 accurate nuclear warheads and a range of more than 4,000 nautical miles; in the second stage it will be even up to 4,800 nuclear warheads for attacks on various ground targets after 1985, with the Trident 2 which is not yet fully developed.

Carter's presidential directive "PD-59" can be realized only with MX missiles and more accurate submarine-based missiles, since the penetration capability of the U.S. intercontinental B-52 bombers with the air-to-ground cruise missiles remains doubtful in view of the strong Russian antiaircraft defense. In any event, a war strategy cannot rely either on these bombers or on the Poseidon submarine missiles if the destruction of specific targets is absolutely necessary.

But even if the United States in the next decade and a half has an adequate number of strategic arms for selective attacks on military targets, considerable problems remain to be solved before the U.S. nuclear forces will gain effective "flexible options" against the armed forces in the Soviet Union.

The main problem: How is a differentation possible between "limited" attacks against "military" or "political" targets, on the one hand, and against greater settlement areas and industrial installations, on the other? In the case of the Soviet Union such a differentiation between military and industrial-urban target areas is particularly hard to make west of the Urals. Moreover, the launching silos of the Russian intercontinental missiles on both sides of the Trans-Siberian railroad are distributed over most of the Soviet state territory.

It would be difficult for Moscow to make a difference between a nuclear attacks thus "limited to military priority targets" and a broader devised attack against the industrial and settlement structure of the Soviet Union. This applies particularly to the intercontinental missile positions in the western Soviet Union and in greater Moscow.

The U.S. strategic target planning against the Soviet Union on the whole envisages about 40,000 objects for selection for the roughly 9,500 targetable weapons. This target plan "SIOP-5" adopted in 1975 is divided up into four major groups: nuclear forces and their logistics organization; political-military command organizations with the command centers and the political leadership in their bunkers; industrial and infrastructure objects.

The critical targets for U.S. strategy primarily are the following:

1. The missile silos of the nearly 1,400 Soviet intercontinental missile launching systems. Three hundred of these missile silos are located in the protective area of the 64 interceptor missile systems around Moscow-Gorkiy, but they could by far not protect all 300 intercontinental missile silos and the rest of the key military objects in the Moscow region against concentrated missile attacks.

2. The submarine pens, naval ports, depots and shipyards of the Soviet Navy.

3. The airports, radar stations, workshops and depots of the Soviet Armed Forces.

4. The approximately 600 Soviet medium-range launching facilities.

5. The infrastructure of the army in the western part of the Soviet Union just about up to the Leningrad-Moscow-Odessa line with roughly 2,000 main targets; some of these targets are to be covered in the future by the approximately 700 medium-range weapons of NATO in Europe (572 missiles and 150 F-111 medium-range bombers).

6. The political-military leadership in its command bunkers and their entire technical leadership organization.

The 308 SS-18 missiles in the Soviet Union which are particularly critical for the survival of the U.S. intercontinental missiles in North America are located in six silo fields for about 64 launching systems each in southern central Asia. These targets cannot be reached either by the U.S. intercontinental bombers or by the Polaris and Poseidon missiles aboard the U.S. submarines. It remains to be seen whether the Trident-1 submarine missiles will manage to do that in the future from the envisaged sea stations and outside the range of the Soviet submarine defense. It is a fact that the U.S. threat against this central part of the Soviet offensive missiles so far has been solely based on the Minuteman missiles in North America which the former are threatening.

The installations of the political-military leadership in the command bunkers of the Soviet Union confront U.S. strategy with a special psychological problem: an attack on the bunker of the political leadership, on the bunkers of the military supreme command and other command organs would be regarded by the Soviet collective leadership as a total threat to the political vitals. It could hardly be equated to "limited" warfare by the United States in Moscow, therefore it could veritably provoke a massive retaliation strike--and not just on North America. The Soviet means of attack will be sufficient for such a general retaliation strike from the mid-eighties on.

The new U.S. strategy is supposed to threaten armed forces and political-military leadership centers rather than people, cities and industrial targets, so as to deter the Soviet Union from waging war. But the asymmetry of the settlement structures and the distribution of the armed forces in North America and in the Soviet Union constitute an immense obstacle to the strategy of limited nuclear warfare. Nevertheless, Carter has decided in favor of it in keeping with the demand of former U.S. Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger of 1974, who had advocated this strategy "lest the coat of world leadership slip from the shoulders of the president of the United States."

CONTINUED CANADIAN URANIUM DELIVERIES EXPECTED

LD141750 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 14 Aug 80

[Text] The Federal Government expects Canada to continue its deliveries of uranium beyond 1980. This was the reaction of spokesmen of the Foreign Ministry, the Federal Ministry of Economics and the Federal Ministry of Research and Technology today to reports that Canada is not planning to deliver any more natural uranium to the Federal Republic next year. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said the question of uranium supplies from Canada is in no way connected with the delivery of a nuclear powerplant to Argentina.

Suspicions that Canada was not willing to deliver any more uranium to the Federal Republic arose because the interim agreement between Canada and Euratom expires at the end of the year, making new negotiations necessary. Canada insists on more stringent stipulations on weapons-grade uranium not being passed on.

SOMALIA TO RECEIVE DM101.7 MILLION IN FINANCIAL AID

[Text] Bonn, 14 Aug--For the years 1980 and 1981 Bonn has promised to Somalia a total of DM101.7 million of financial aid and DM34.5 million for technological cooperation. The Federal Ministry of Economic Cooperation announced on Thursday that the funds are mainly for agricultural development, animal husbandry, improvements in the water supply and vocational training.

In the focus of the agreement is a German participation with DM80 million in the international financing of the Bardera dam on the upper reaches of the Juba in southern Somalia. It will enable the irrigation of 205,000 acres and in addition will produce electricity.

Somali State Planning Minister Ahmed Habib Ahmed briefed State Secretary Alwin Brueck from the Economic Cooperation Ministry on his country's situation. So far 1.5 million refugees from Ethiopia have entered Somalia. He thanked Bonn for the stepped-up development aid and for the Federal Republic's speedy refugee aid.

CARTER CRITICIZED FOR NEW NUCLEAR STRATEGY DIRECTIVE

[Max Leon article: "Carter's New Directives"]

[Text] It was not until 6 August--coinciding with the anniversary of Hiroshima!--that the U.S. press announced the White House chief's signature of new directives on strategy which were approved last week.

This "Presidential Directive 59" is based on the idea that to prevent a generalized conflict with the USSR the United States "should be provided with the means of waging a prolonged but limited nuclear war."

What a fine and good doctrine! It is no longer mankind's collective suicide which is being proposed for saving us from communism, but an expedient holocaust. Instead of using the 60,000 nuclear warheads accumulated in the arsenals in one strike, only a few hundred, or even a few tens of Hiroshimas would be used initially.

Presenting this strategy, which he describes as a "counterforce doctrine"--in contrast to the "countercity doctrine," as if nuclear war could be more acceptable if it began by wiping out garrison cities and major ports--to LE MONDE's readers, Michel Tatu is anxious to "justify" it: "Therefore it has been confirmed," he writes, "that, in reply to the threat which the new Soviet missiles posed to the ground-based forces, the United States is adopting programs which go far beyond merely countering the enemy threat and produce a new risk for the partner. This is how the arms race is progressing."

"The New Carter Doctrine"

This is how the trick is done. First: The Soviets pose a new threat; second: the United States responds; conclusion: the USSR alone is responsible for the arms race.

Mr Brzezinski, one of the instigators of the "new Carter doctrine," could not hope for a better cheerleader. Even in the United States his theories have far from unanimous support. The New York TIMES reports that "the concept that a nuclear threat aimed at military objectives rather than cities would be preferable is criticized by some experts who think that that would make a nuclear war more probable."

Indeed the theory of a "small-scale" nuclear war is not new. LE MONDE admits this by pointing out that this theory's instigators were already in the Pentagon under Mr Nixon's administration if not in Foster Dulles' days.

President Carter and his adviser have not introduced any new strategy aside from a new stratagem to push through their policy of speeding up the arms race and nuclear blackmail. "The new-style nuclear war" (LE MONDE) is merely a way of justifying a previous choice after the event--a deliberate intention by U.S. leaders to obtain or win back a supremacy which would enable them to impose their law on the whole world.

However, since strategic parity was established more than 10 years ago all their attempts have failed. It was this parity which led three U.S. presidents to conclude SALT agreements which confirm this parity and are based on it; Mr Nixon in Moscow, Mr Ford in Vladivostok and Mr Carter in Vienna.

Double Game

However the double game has never stopped in Washington. The current U.S. President signed the Vienna treaty with the same hand that signed the directives for the MX missile program ($34 billion for 2,000 warheads carried by 200 missiles), and the plan imposed on NATO for manufacturing and deploying 572 Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe for strategic purposes.

The "new" Carter doctrine has been published now in order to justify, after the event, a record defense budget and a revival of the arms race (Atlantic Council meetings in May 1978 and December 1979), and not to counter a "new Soviet threat."

Unfortunately "Presidential Directive 59" cannot be seen as a mere propaganda maneuver--a trap for naive voters and obliging allies. It is an attempt to break parity to the advantage of the U.S. and this involves a serious danger of confrontation, as the U.S. defense secretary himself admits. Mr Brown stated on 28 July in Oakland with a frankness which is probably explained by the election campaign:

"Some people have promised U.S. military superiority over the Soviet Union. The truth is that overall military superiority is militarily and economically impossible for either side if the other is determined to prevent it. We cannot return to the days of the U.S. nuclear monopoly. There can be no victor in a full-scale war." He added that seeking military superiority "is unrealistic, naive and dangerous."

Those in the Elysee and elsewhere who are seeking to tie France to a diplomacy and military strategy which vacillate between deterrence and "prolonged" nuclear war should consider these thoughts.

BRIEFS

NEW ENVOY TO PHILLIPPINES--Paris, Aug 11, (AFP)--Albert Treca, 62, was today named France's new ambassador to Phillippines. Since 1978 Mr Treca has been an adviser to French Defence Minister Yvon Bourges. Mr Treca is a former ambassador to Niger (1964-68), Ethiopia (1971-75) and Australia (1975-78). PARTIES DEMAND INQUIRY INTO CHARGES AGAINST SA CARNEIRO

LD132010 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1830 GMT 13 Aug 80

[Excerpts] The Socialist Party [PS] and the Communist Party [PCP] today submitted written requests asking the standing committee of the Assembly of the Republic to call a special session to examine allegations concerning Prime Minister Sa Carneiro. The republican and socialist front had already announced yesterday that it would call for a parliamentary inquiry into allegations of fraud and indebtedness to the banking sector on the part of Prime Minister Sa Carneiro. Today, the PS formally submitted to the standing committee a written request to that effect.

The PCP also submitted a similar written request today calling for a special parliamentary sitting to examine the whole affair. The Communist document states that the prime minister was publicly involved in a financial scandal and that up to now he has not produced any substantiated denial capable of challenging the evidence and documentation made public in this connection.

The written requests, submitted separately by the two parties, were analyzed by the speaker of the assembly of the republic, Leonardo Ribeiro de Almeida.

Sa Carneiro Rejects Charges

LD142336 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1902 GMT 14 Aug 80

[Prime Minister Sa Carneiro "statement on the present political situation"--live]

[Excerpt] The Socialists and Communists have already clearly made known what their objective is, namely, to succeed in getting the president of the republic to appoint another government more favorable to them before the coming 5 October elections, similar to what happened before the December 1979 elections. Not even the failure of last year's methods has taught them a lesson. They want to repeat them, and they do not hesitate to use any means.

First they tried, by stirring social unrest, to bring the economy and work to a halt. But it is in this battle that Portuguese workers have shown that they reject adventures.

Next they tried broad mobilizations to prove that the government was isolated. Again, they lost that battle because not only did such attempts fail, but many Portuguese have actively participated in demonstrations in support of the government.

Now they are resorting to their last weapon: personal attack and libel. The pretext is not a new one. It has been used by Communist sectors since 1976 in crude, contradictory and always slanderous versions. In question were--as are now again--alleged debts of the present prime minister to the nationalized banking system. In August 1979 the campaign waged against his honor and dignity intensified and became systematic until the 2 December elections.

The present prime minister then lodged a complaint on the grounds of abuse of the freedom of the press against the main culprit of the journalistic campaign then under way. In April this year, and in view of the continuation of the same campaign, yet further judicial proceedings on the grounds of libel and slander were again brought against the same (?Communist organ) responsible for it. The matter was referred to the courts, as befits a state of law. The courts were to have ruled on the case last July, but on the initiative of the Communist libeler itself--which was the defendant in the case--the ruling was postponed sine die.

The conditions were therefore ripe, with the courts closed and by taking advantage of the judicial recess, for the slanderous campaign which the Communist sectors were waging with clearly political motivations to proceed.

The prime minister repeatedly declared--and again declares--that he does not owe anything to the nationalized banking system and in particular to the bank which has been mentioned, which for its part has also declared this in writing. In the face of the prime minister's initiative to bring legal proceedings against those who were charging him with having nonexistent debts, his detractors tried to spread further slander in order to keep the campaign alive, by accusing him of alleged fraud [word indistinct]. For this yet further libel, those responsible for it will answer to the courts.

The prime minister has never carried out any illegitimate or illicit act, and his relations with the banking system have always been conducted within the strictest legality and correctness. One has only now to wait for the slanderers to be punished by the courts.

The simple fact, however, that the whole affair is, on the prime minister's initiative, in the hands of the courts, also shows the bad faith of those who claim to be surprised at the prime minister's alleged silence with regard to this regretable issue.

In the face of this situation, nobody with a minimum of dignity and good faith can have any doubts that the libel--like last year before the elections--will not succeed. And yet, it is again being stirred up, with total disregard for the courts.

BULGARIAN DAILY INTERVIEWS PCP LEADER CUNHAL

AU131048 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 10 Aug 80 pp 1,3

[RABOTNICHESKO DELO correspondent Kosta Andreev interview with PCP General Secretary Alvaro Cunhal during his vacation in Bulgaria--place and date of interview not given]

[Excerpt] Question: Comrade Cunhal, what are the most important facts characterizing the present political situation in Portugal? Can one say that the election campaign has already begun?

Answer: The election campaign has not yet officially started, but in practice it is being conducted by various parties. This results from the great importance of the elections for the Assembly of the Republic, scheduled for 5 October 1980. These elections, as I said, are of great importance for political life in Portugal. As you know, after the serious failure of the Socialist Party, the reactionary parties (namely the Social Democrats, the Social Democratic Center and their supporters) succeeded in obtaining an insignificant increase in the number of their deputies during the 1979 elections.

Relying upon their government and a majority in the Assembly of the Republic the reactionary parties worked out and immediately began to apply an illegal, subversive and anticonstitutional plan aimed at promptly bringing about the failure of the revolutionary achievements in Portugal and the very democratic structures of this country.

Thus, in further developing the negative trends in the policy of the former governments, reaction unleashed a brutal attack against agrarian reform, against nationalization and against the workers rights. The reactionary forces tried to pass a new election law that would have transformed the upcoming elections into a mere "farce," giving the opportunity to the reactionary forces to remain in power even if the overwhelming majority of the voters should vote against the parties of the government coalition. The reactionary forces succeeded in inflicting much damage to the Portuguese people's democratic achievements, and in particular against agrarian reform. However, reaction did not entirely succeed in its plans.

The workers class, the working people in the rural areas and the people's masses continue to pursue their heroic resistance against the reactionary attempts. The people's masses and working people are mobilizing their efforts, participating in strikes, demonstrations and meetings. As a matter of fact, the broadest strata of the population, who never had the opportunity to express their opinions in the past, are now actively participating in this movement. In many cases the government was forced to give in and suffered considerable failures.

In addition to this other top organs (such as the Revolutionary Council, as well as the presidency of the republic) having been attacked by the government, took advantage of their rights and declared unconstitutional certain laws approved by the government and by the reactionary majority in the Assembly of the Republic, for example, the case of the new bill against nationalization and of the recent election law. These laws did not pass, and this was a considerable failure for the subversive plans of the government parties.

The importance of the upcoming elections must be interpreted in this light.

Question: What do you think about Portugal's future if the democratic forces are victorious in the elections, and what will happen in case of their failure?

Answer: If the results of the elections should once again bring about a majority for the reactionary parties, the threat against democracy will become even greater.

In this case, of course, the struggle will be pursued. The Portuguese people will never give up their fight. They will overcome all obstacles, difficulties and dangers threatening the cause of democracy and the cause of the April revolution. Therefore the people's struggle will be victorious. Nevertheless, we realize that considerable sacrifices and hardships will be inevitable.

The struggle of the democratic forces, in which we firmly believe, will exert a great beneficial influence upon the consolidation of our revolutionary achievements.

This struggle will force the reactionary government to resign and will stop the counter-revolutionary offensive.

This struggle will also create a parliamentary basis for the establishment of a democratic government, regardless of the trends towards a rapprochement with the rightwing forces, which continue to persist within the Socialist Party.

This struggle will also revive the spirit of 25 April 1974 among the military circles.

The victory of the democratic forces will genuinely intensify the struggle of the people and of the masses, a struggle that continues to be a basic factor in the upsurge of political struggle. A victory of the democratic forces (Socialists and Communists) in the upcoming elections will mean that the Portuguese people have succeeded in overcoming a dangerous deviation along the difficult path of democratic revolution.

Question: Do you think that there is a change in the stand of the Socialist Party as regards the intensification of the reactionary forces? To what extent is this party ready to defend the people's democratic achievements and to develop them in the future?

Answer: Unity of action between the PCP and the Socialist Party is an extremely complicated problem, because the leadership of the Socialist Party and its secretary general, Mario Soares, in particular are firmly standing on anticommunist positions. As regards the trade union movement and public life, the Socialist Party is systematically seeking alliance with the reactionary parties by contributing, in this manner, to the reactionaries' attempts to split the workers movement.

Despite all this, the PCP is in favor of understanding and unity of action between Communists and Socialists; under the present circumstances a dialogue between the two parties is necessary. This dialogue is an important prerequisite for the implementation of a democratic alternative within the framework of the constitution.

The only possible majority in the upcoming assembly elections would be a majority of Socialist and Communist deputies. Nevertheless, a simple numerical majority is by no means identical to true political majority. In order to obtain a majority that would genuinely serve as a basis for the establishment of a democratic government, it is necessary for the PCP and the Portuguese Socialist Party to coordinate their activities. Taking into consideration the growing danger of a restoration of fascism, considering the lessons of life experience and the development of political events, as well as in view of the existing favorable opportunities for an alliance with the Communists--a fact which was noted by the Socialist Party itself--we can expect a change in the actions of its leadership.

We must note that as long as the Socialist Party is losing influence, as long as its importance in the elections is diminishing, as a result of its deviations to the right and its association with the rightwing forces, the PCP is steadily strengthening. The latest statistical data revealed that thanks to the recruitment of new cadres, the PCP has now reached 187,000 members.

Question: What can you tell us about the relations between the BCP [Bulgarian Communist Party] and the PCP and how can you describe these relations?

Answer: The relations between the PCP and the BCP are characterized by solidarity and fraternal friendship, as well as by cooperation. These are relations of long standing; they existed also at the times of the fascist dictatorship in Portugal.

We, the Portuguese Communists, are very grateful for the support that the BCP rendered to us for so many years--before and after the victory of the 25 April revolution.

Our two parties are adhering to Marxism-Leninism and are inspired by the principles of proletarian internationalism. They consider their national and international obligations as inseparable; they are defending the unity of the communist movement and the unity of all revolutionary and anti-imperialist forces.

We can thus say that a solid basis exists for the development of friendly and fraternal relations between the BCP and the PCP, relations which are setting a splendid example for the relations between the peoples of Portugal and Bulgaria.

GUINEA-BISSAU PRESIDENT CABRAL ARRIVES IN LISBON

LD112138 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 11 Aug 80

[Text] The president of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau, Luis Cabral, arrived in Lisbon this afternoon on a private 2-day visit at President Ramalho Eanes' invitation. Besides serving as further confirmation of the personal friendship between Luis Cabral and Ramalho Eanes, the Guinean president's private visit will enable him to acquaint himself with aspects of the Portuguese situation free of protocol limitations inherent in official visits.

DANISH PREMIER REITERATES STAND ON DEFENSE BUDGET

[Lisbeth Knudsen report: "Anker Jorgensen Will Not Negotiate on More Money for the Defense Forces"]

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen has now really excluded any possibility of negotiations on a new multiparty defense agreement. The Social Democrats are not prepared to negotiate on the framework for future defense spending--which will be a zero solution--but will negotiate on the distribution of funds within the overall framework.

After a ministerial meeting at Marienborg yesterday, when the problems surrounding future defense spending were discussed, the prime minister repeated his earlier statements that he has never committed himself in NATO to a 3-percent increase in defense spending.

This is questioned by both Liberal Party Chairman Henning Christophersen and Conservative Defense Chairman Palle Simonsen. The matter could now be cleared up by a question to the prime minister from Palle Simonsen. He will ask the prime minister if the government ought not to live up to decisions made at international level, in which it participated and to which it committed itself. Palle Simonsen then quotes the exact working of the NATO communique, which has been referred to in the Danish defense debate.

"Accordingly, the ministers bound themselves to maintaining and strengthening the alliance's military capability. They again confirmed how important it is that member nations achieve the goal to which state and government heads committed themselves of annual increases in defense spending of around 3 percent in real terms. They expressed their confidence that those countries that up to now have not been in a position to achieve this goal would make every possible effort to reach it," the official communique stated.

"It is simply not true that the Danish Government has committed itself to a 3-percent increase in defense spending. I expressed at the meeting in Washington the view that the Danish Government would have to express its reservations on a 3-percent increase in defense spending. I added that the Danish defense budget, unlike that of many other countries, is index linked. I also mentioned that we have a defense agreement that would make such an increase impossible during the present period," the prime minister said yesterday at a press conference at Marienborg after the ministerial meeting. He added: "The government's proposal on defense is still an unchanged budget framework. It is a proposal for negotiations, but it must be understood to mean that there are perhaps things within the 7 billion-kroner framework that can be discussed. We think that the framework itself is reasonable."

GREEK-TURKISH DIALOGUE TO BE RESUMED 15 SEPTEMBER

AT111639 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1600 GMT 11 Aug 80

[Text] According to press reports, the dialogue between Greece and Turkey will be resumed in Athens on 15 September at the level of secretaries general of the two countries' foreign ministeries. As is expected, the Greek side will be represented by Ambassador Theodhoropoulos, while Turkey will be represented by Mr Turkmen.

RALLIS DENIES POSSIBLE POSTELECTION COOPERATION WITH MINORITY

AT121523 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 12 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] "The issue of New Democracy's postelection cooperation [with other parties]--does not arise because the party is certain that it will win an absolute majority in the next elections." Prime Minister Rallis made this statement yesterday in reply to press reports. He added that the next elections will be held at the end of the 4-year term. Political observers noted the fact that even opposition press reports acknowledge that elections will be held around June 1981, a date that is not too far from the constitutional limits.

These reports are accompanied by the information that leading members of the government have discussed prospects for postelection cooperation by New Democracy because their forecasts indicate that its strength will drop.

Prime Minister Rallis' statement follows:

"I have been surprised by reports in certain newspapers that the government committee has held discussions in connection with postelection cooperation with other parties.

"These reports are inaccurate.

"No minister has raised the issue of cooperation with another party at the meeting of the government committee because New Democracy is certain that in the elections, which will be held at the end of the 4-year term, the party will win an absolute majority and will form an independent government."

The same observers added that there are essential policy differences among the various opposition parties, especially between the two largest ones, PASOK and the KKE.

Even with statements by its Secretary General Kharilaos Florakis the KKE has disputed the PASOK idea that "it alone can bring about change," claiming that PASOK will win a majority only in cooperation with the KKE.

On the other hand, the party of official opposition seems prepared to avoid the cultivation of similar ideas which it believes will create problems within its center wing. Thus all indications are that, in the future, disputes between the two parties will increase rather than decrease.

The general atmosphere of difference within the opposition, even among small parties, will do anything but help them win a majority in the next elections. On the contrary, political observers conclude that the differences favor the continued independence of the government party even after the next elections.

U.S. CRITICIZED FOR ATTEMPTING TO SEPARATE NATO, BASES ISSUES

[Editorial: "Of Insidious Origin...."]

[Text] The issue of Greece's position within the Atlantic Alliance or against it, in conjunction with the status of foreign bases in our country, has recently shown certain developments and variations worthy of special note and stress because they are indicative of the entire dynamics of things in our area and of the intentions of those powerful factors of the international arena which operate primarily in this area.

Specifically, according to reports that were published in I KATHIMERINI last Sunday, the United States is seeking to disengage the issue of Greece's return to the Atlantic Alliance's military wing from the issue of the foreign--that is, U.S.--bases in our country. That is, it is asking that the bases issue be settled first regardless of whether or not our country returns to the alliance's military wing and that it actually follows the terms that had been agreed upon in the plan of Greek-U.S. agreement which was initialed in 1977 but which was not signed and has remained in suspense.

This Washington goal is diametrically opposed to the Greek "position" according to which the extension of the existence and operation of foreign bases in Greece is organically linked with our country's return to the alliance's military wing (under Greek conditions and the status of a special relationship). That is, the Greek side has declared that if the return is foiled by not being in accordance with the above terms and within a specific deadline, the presence of foreign bases on our soil will be ended because the prerequisites and expediencies for such a presence will be eliminated.

To this official "position" we add the following: The bases are the principal negotiating "trump card" of our country for confronting and dealing with the vital national problems of greater Hellenism.

It is not difficult for one to discern the "dynamics" behind the U.S. goal. It is obvious that Turkey is persisting in its well-known and unacceptable demands which have thus far foiled Greece's return to the alliance's military wing and Washington does not want or cannot impose the elimination of these demands. For this reason it seeks to disengage this issue from that of the bases. If the Greek side were to accept the U.S. recommendations it is obvious what would happen: It would lose its principal negotiating "trump card," because Washington is principally interested in the bases, not in Greece's return to the military wing of NATO. Perhaps it would accept burdensome obligations which are related to the issue while, at the same time, remaining outside the alliance's military wing whose strong partners would not oppose Turkish demands which would endanger the vital interests and national security of our country. There could be no worse development.

An attempt is being made to lure Greece into accepting such a "solution" by giving economic aid that would be "in harmony" with that envisaged for Turkey by the well-known U.S.-Turkish defense agreement. Of course, however, only naive people would think that any Greek Government would consent--in exchange for economic returns--to "arrangements" that would constitute even a possible or "forcible" threat to the vital interests and security of the country and of greater Hellenism. And as we have already stressed, the bases, which are Greece's most basic and notable negotiating "trump card," cannot and should not be exhausted exclusively on the issue of return leaving us without negotiable supports on other vital national issues like the Cyprus problem.

Things are clear and there will certainly be no diversion from the course which the Greek Government has charted despite any "suggestions" or "enticements."

NSP LEADERS REITERATE CRITICISM OF TIES WITH ISRAEL

Erbakan on Severing Ties

TA141818 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 Aug 80

[Excerpt] The leaders of certain political parties made statements which were published today in BAYRAM newspaper expressing their views on issues concerning the country. In his statement published in the Ankara, Istanbul and Izmir BAYRAM newspapers, NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan said that world Zionism was behind the anarchy in Turkey. He described Israel's recent move on Jerusalem as part of a plan prepared by the Jews to dominate the world. He pointed out that this development was a new opportunity to sever diplomatic relations with Israel. Erbakan said that despite the determined efforts of the NSP on this issue, the government was insistent in its stand. He criticized the policy being pursued by the government in this matter.

Cumalioglu Statement

[Text] NSP deputy leader Fehmi Cumalioglu said that the Demirel government is an admirer of Israel; it is trying very hard to turn Turkey into a province of the Common Market; and it is turning its back on the Islamic countries' wishes for friendship.

In a written statement in Ankara, Cumalioglu stressed that the government had not even sent greetings to the Afghan crusaders who were waging a life-and-death struggle against the Soviet Army. He charged that the West's wishes were being considered as orders by the government and that Turkey's rights in the Aegean were not being protected.

NSP SUBMITS PROPOSAL FOR EARLY ELECTIONS TO ASSEMBLY

TA151028 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Aug 80

[Text] A proposal for early elections which was drawn up by the NSP National Assembly group has been submitted to the National Assembly chairman. The proposal says that the general elections scheduled to be held in June 1981 be held on 26 October 1980 instead. The proposal which was drawn up by the NSP leader and Deputy from Konya, Necmettin Erbakan, and his colleagues was announced by deputy leader Fehmi Cumalioglu in a press conference today.

The proposal says that the country is going through the most critical stage of its history in the hands of the present JP government. It says that a social structure lacking social and internal peace was created as a result of the JP government's policies. It adds that the country is thus being dragged toward disaster.

The proposal recalls that the JP government ignored the NSP proposal to establish a "national solution" and restoration government.

The proposal for early elections then says: The JP Government is remaining in power even though our nation does not want it. It mercilessly implements a program of devaluations, inflation, anarchy that has reached the dimensions of a civil war and blind loyalty to the West in foreign policy. This government is creating the impression that there are no alternatives outside it and spreading the propaganda that our nation needs that government.

The proposal for early elections is expected to be discussed by the National Assembly Constitutional Committee next week.

OIL REQUIREMENTS TO REACH 25 MILLION TONS IN 1981

TA141542 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 14 Aug 80

[Text] Turkey's crude oil requirements for 1981 will rise by 5 million tons to 25 million tons. The MEDITERRANEAN NEWS AGENCY reported that of the 25 million tons, 13 million tons will be bought from neighboring countries at OPEC prices. Accordingly, Iran and Iraq will supply Turkey with 5 million tons each, Libya with 2 million tons and the Soviet Union 1 million tons. Contacts are being made with these countries to sign deals on the rest of Turkey's oil requirements. Officials have said contacts will be made especially with Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and the Soviet Union.

OZAL CLAIMS MONTHLY RATE OF INFLATION LESS THAN 2 PERCENT

[Text] Prime Ministry Under Secretary of the State Planning Organization Turgut Ozal has said that the rate of inflation has been reduced. In a statement to the national news agency, Ozal said that the results of the economic measures create hopes for great success. He said: The monthly rate of inflation, which was about 8 percent, has now been reduced to less than 2 percent. The Istanbul cost-of-living index was 1.2 percent for July. Given the situation in Turkey a year ago, such percentages were unthinkable then. This means that the annual rate of inflation in Turkey is below 30 percent.

Noting that although world oil prices have doubled since last year, Turkey does not suffer from any oil shortages at the present, Ozal said that Turkey's oil reserves are over a million tons.

ST SOPHIA TO BE REOPENED FOR FRIDAY PRAYERS

TA090958 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 8 Aug 80

[Text] The Sultan's Quarter at St Sophia will be opened for prayers with the Friday religious services to be held today. The Culture Ministry has been restoring the Sultan's Quarter, which was built for the Sultans to pray in following the conquest of Istanbul, for some time. The quarter at the St Sophia museum consists of a hall, a place to perform ablutions, a resting room and the Sultan's chamber. Today 60 guests will pray at the Sultan's Quarter, which has been set aside for heads of state and government and the heads of state of Islamic countries for prayers.

BRIEFS

GASOLINE EXPORTS--Energy and Natural Resources Minister Esat Kiratlioglu said that Turkey is exporting 20,000 tons of gasoline every month and that the foreign currency income secured this way makes importing crude oil 20-25 percent cheaper. In a statement to the MEDITERRANEAN NEWS AGENCY, Kiratlioglu said that there will not be any shortage of petroleum in Turkey this year. Noting that all fuel storage tanks are completely full, he said that the import contracts have been made for sufficient crude oil to insure that the refineries produce at full capacity by the end of the year. GIEREK POSTPONES SCHEDULED VISIT TO FRG

[Excerpts] Bonn/Warsaw, 18 Aug (DPA)--Polish party chief Edward Gierek today asked for postponement to a later date of the planned meeting with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Hamburg on Tuesday and Wednesday. However, it is still intended to hold the meeting this year. A government spokesman in Bonn confirmed the Polish wish for a postponement and said that the Federal Government was in contact with the Polish side about a new date "later this year." No official reason has been given for the postponement of Gierek's visit. The Polish wish to postpone the visit first became known in Warsaw. The Bonn government spokesman confirmed today that the Polish side had notified the Federal Government via the FRG Embassy in Warsaw that it wished to postpone the working visit.

PREPARATIONS FOR SCHMIDT-HONECKER VISIT CONTINUING

[Text] Bonn, 15 Aug (DPA)--The preparations for the meeting between Chancellor Schmidt and SED leader Honecker were continued at a further talk between Minister of State Honecker of the Federal Chancellor's Office and the permanent GDR representative in Bonn, Moldt, in Bonn today. Government Spokesman Gruenewald told a news conference in Bonn that the discussions on the subjects to be discussed at the meeting had progressed "very far" but had not yet been concluded. Gruenewald affirmed the chancellor's intention to travel to his meeting with Honecker on Werbellinsee on 27-29 August by special train "direct" from Hamburg to the location. Replying to an interjection that the shortest rail route from Hamburg is by train via Berlin, Grueneward said that the direct route to Werbellinsee is not necessarily the shortest.

GENSCHER VIEWS RELATIONS WITH POLAND, GDR

DW180757 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 1600 GMT 16 Aug 80

[Excerpts from Paul-Heinz Middeldorf interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] No doubt the events in Poland are extremely significant. This also applies to the West at large, including the Federal Republic. Our reaction is reflected, for instance, by the credit of DM1.2 billion which a West German consortium of banks has just granted Poland, just as it is shown by our interest in the dialogue with Warsaw. How would you describe the role of the Federal Republic in the relationship with Poland today?

[Answer] We consider our policy toward our Eastern neighbors to be devised on a long-term basis, a policy in mutual interest. This is what guides us in the development of our relations with the People's Republic of Poland. Regardless of the topical developments, the credit you mentioned had been under discussion for quite some time. It is part of the cooperation between the Federal Republic of Germany and the People's Republic of Poland aimed at these mutual interests. I hope that the forthcoming visit by First Secretary Gierek will produce new prospects for deepening the cooperation with this important European country. We are sure that the People's Republic of Poland is extremely interested, just as we are, in seeing progress attained in the questions concerning arms control and disarmament in Europe. Surely this question of what contributions both states can make toward security in Europe will play a decisive role in the talks that will be held with Gierek.

We are aware that security in Europe is possible only on the basis of balance. And we wish this to be attained on as low a level of armaments as possible. This will then also create the chance for better solving other questions with the funds thus released. This is true for our commitments toward the Third World just as it is true for the solution of our own problems.

[Question] You are counting on this visit despite the events in Poland?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] The Poles are badly off; many other socialist states are in poor shape. Why don't we let the socialist states stew in their own juice to make them muster greater efforts for their civilian economy in the long run and not do so much for military armament?

[Answer] The criticism which the opposition in our country levels at the Ostpolitik of the Federal Government shows that the opposition exploits every suitable and unsuitable chance to wage once again the battles that had been fought over the treaty policy at the beginning of the seventies. The opposition still has not found the proper attitude toward the treaties. Finding the proper attitude includes concentrating now, with a view forward, on exploiting the chances offered by these treaties in our own national interest. And by its partially immoderate criticism of our policy the opposition blocks its own chances for making constructive contributions of its own.

It is absolutely clear that states having the structure of the communist states definitely will not begin saving in armaments when they do any saving. But I believe that economic cooperation can also constitute an important component of confidence building in Europe. No doubt our treaty policy and the policy of detente and harmonization of interests in Europe that has been made feasible only as a result of the treaty policy, has been an important contribution toward stability in Europe and will remain such a contribution in the future. To me it is interesting to note that in a period of international crises, which normally tend--and in the past did tend--to arouse the greatest concern, we talk about the further progress of cooperation in relations with the GDR but also in relations with the People's Republic of Poland and other states. Actually this is a hallmark of our policy.

It just could not have been in the treaties' content to bring about a fundmental change of Soviet policy in all parts of the world. But the basis of detente means that the principles of detente must be applied everywhere. We proceed from the principle of the indivisibility of detente. This is why we remind the Soviet Union time and again that is is necessary to accept the principles of detente in all parts of the world, too, lest this cause burdens to detente policy in Europe. This means that it is not necessary in an internationally critical situation to give up detente in Europe but rather to ensure that the attitude which has resulted for Europe as a consequence of detente--the respect for the mutual interests and for stability--be accepted in other parts of the world by the Soviet Union as well.

[Question] We have just ahead of us a meeting between Schmidt and Honecker. Now all sorts of people are saying that the meeting will primarily involve human alleviations. Can this topic form the crux of the meeting or is the spectrum of inter-German cooperation much greater?

[Answer] The variety is much greater, and it must be kept in mind, too, lest we renounce developing relations in all their aspects. Naturally we are interested in enhancing meetings between people, improving travel possibilities, and a great deal more. We are also interested in developing cultural relations. The development of economic relations creates new fields of common interest which has a positive effect on other spheres.

Both German states, moreover, can and must make decisive contributions toward security in Europe. It should, I believe, be the objective of the two German states to attain a maximum fulfillment of the Helsinki Final Act in all its parts. This might then be exemplary for East-West cooperation for other states and in other fields as well. We should develop our common ambition here. If this is true, then the Federal Republic of Germany and the GDR also are interested in a favorable development of CSCE policy at large.

This is in the common interest. It is in such a climate alone that cooperation between the two German states can be improved. We could muster contributions, for example also to the discussion on arms control and disarmament, the preparation of a European disarmament conference which in our view should follow the French proposal, and on other fields. I wish and hope that the opposition will realize that this GDR visit by the chancellor can be an important contribution to the stability in the development of cooperation in Europe. This visit must not be overburdened with demands. Nor must one deprive oneself of the attitude of pushing the development of relations wherever possible, by concentrating on just a few aspects. Our goal for this visit by the chancellor is to develop as many prospects for inter-German relations and cooperation as possible.

FRG MAKES REPRESENTATIONS TO USSR OVER ZAMYATIN REMARKS

[Text] Bonn, 15 Aug (DPA)--The sharp attack by top Soviet official Leonid Zamyatin on CDU politician Juergen Todenhoefer over his visit with Afghan resistance fighters has prompted the Foreign Ministry to make representations to the Foreign Ministry in Moscow. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said in reply to an inquiry on Friday that the Federal Government, based on satisfactory explanations from the Soviet side, regards the matter "as settled." The spokesman did not comment on Zamyatin's remarks.

The daily DIE WELT, in its Saturday edition, reports that Zamyatin had told German Minister (diplomatic rank) Herman Huber at a reception on 11 August concerning Todenhoefer's Afghanistan trip that it would be best is such a man were seized while involved in such a campaign "and handed over to the Afghans to be whipped." Zamyatin, head of the Information Department at the Soviet Central Committee, added that execution (?and) "shooting" were other alternatives.

According to DIE WELT, Huber told Zamyatin there and then that such remarks about Todenhoefer were totally unacceptable. The minister immediately informed the Foreign Ministry about the incident, which instructed the ambassador to make representations at the Soviet Foreign Ministry on 13 August to express his indignation about Zamyatin on behalf of the Federal Government, especially since his remarks had sounded exactly like a threat on Todenhoefer's life.

The head of the Third European Department of the Foreign Ministry, Bondarenko, according to DIE WELT, expressed regret over Zamyatin's remarks if made. They do not reflect the Soviet Government's opinion. No doubt they were remarks made half in jest, half while emotionally carried away.

According to the newspaper report Zamyatin made the remarks to the German minister during a reception given for a group of SPD and FDP deputies from Bonn which had arrived in Moscow to mark the 10th anniversary of the German-Soviet treaty.

Todenhoefer, in Bonn on 7 August after returning from his Afghanistan trip, accused the Soviet Union of practicing genocide. According to DIE WELT, Zamyatin expressed his view that Todenhoefer had been in Afghanistan illegally, had fraternized "with bandits" and subsequently disseminated "fairy tales" about alleged atrocities committed by the Soviets in Afghanistan.

Zamyatin Praises Moscow Treaty

LD152052 Hamburg DPA in German 2023 GMT 15 Aug 80

[Text] Bremen--The top Soviet official Leonid Zamyatin has called the Moscow treaty signed in 1970 between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union the basis of a "decade of detente". It has been a precondition for the "rehabilitation" and consolidation of the situation in Europe, Zamyatin said in Bremen tonight to the German-Soviet society. In the economic sector the agreements led to the Federal Republic being today the biggest nonsocialist trading partner of the Soviet Union. Zamyatin, chief of the International Information Department of the CPSU Central Committee, by launching sharp attacks on the CDU politician Todenhoefer for his visit to Afghan resistance fighters, had triggered off protests by Bonn to Moscow and a dissociating statement by the Soviet Government.

BONN SOURCES CONFIRM VIOLATION OF GDR AIRSPACE

LD141856 Hamburg DPA in German 1707 GMT 14 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 14 Aug (DPA)--The incident involving an F-104G Starfighter [as received] has been confirmed by well-informed sources in Bonn. DPA has learned that it is not yet certain whether the plane concerned was a German Starfighter or a plane belonging to another NATO partner. The case is being investigated. It was expressly noted that the penetration into the GDR's airspace, which may have lasted only seconds, was "inadvertent in any case." It happens "very much more often...the other way round."

COMMITMENT TO INCREASED NATO SPENDING REAFFIRMED

LD151352 Hamburg DPA in German 1300 GMT 15 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 15 Aug (DPA)--Government Spokesman Gruenewald has made it clear that the Federal Government stands by its commitment to raise its defense expediture by 3 percent in real terms. Speaking at a press conference in Bonn today, Gruenewald said that the government will keep to the target set by NATO. The Federal Government has enquired into reports that the Danish Government has dissociated itself from the NATO decision in 1978. Gruenewald declined to comment on Denmark's economic development and the attitude now adopted by that country. According to Gruenewald the new U.S. nuclear strategy contains for Bonn "no surprise as to its substance." Leopold, a spokesman of the Defense Ministry, disclosed that a letter from U.S. Defense Secretary Brown on this subject was received by the Federal Defense Ministry about 5 days ago. Leopold did not give any further details. Gruenewald emphasized that Bonn is watching the matter "attentively."

PAPERS COMMENT ON RENOMINATION OF CARTER

[Press review]

[Text] BREMER NACHRICHTEN writes: The United States is important enough that governments in the East and West must now start weighing the chances and adapting to a politically unstable period of time there with hopefully not too many bad surprises. The situation becomes complicated because neither the present incumbent nor his two rivals, the Republican Reagan and the Independent Anderson, are playing the role of outspoken favorites.

Carter, according to opinion polls, at present is the farthest away from enjoying an absolute majority. The relatively great popularity of Reagan has dwindled during the last several days. Anderson in the long run might be able to wrest away enough votes from the official candidates of the two big parties that none of the candidates will attain the absolute majority needed in the elections.

Next is a passage from the editorial of the KONSTANZ SUEDKURIER, which reads in part: Though Jimmy Carter has been renominated by his party friends there exists a hard core of Kennedy supporters who make just as little bones about their uncompromising support for the senator than they do about their dislike for Carter. And in addition there are those who are disappointed about Carter, because he has not lived up to their expectations, but who, on the other hand, do not accept liberal Kennedy either. Granted, they have helped to select a candidate in New York, but they have done this halfheartedly at best.

Now let us turn to FRANKFURTER RUNDSCAU which is of the following view: In defiance of all predictions and the competition of Edward Kennedy, who formerly was considered invincible, Carter has recovered his own renomination. This alone is quite a political accomplishment, a success which the President has scored through his tenacious and stubborn temporizing. Nevertheless it is not quite foreseeable as yet where Carter will find his battalions with whom he wants to defeat Ronald Reagan this fall. As reported, there is a drifting away from the camp of the traditionally Democratic electorate.

BERLIN, FEDERAL GOVERNMENT DISAGREE ON IRAQI DIPLOMATS

[Summary] Berlin-Bonn, 15 Aug (DPA)--A quarrel is developing between the Federal Government and the Berlin Senat concerning the two Iraqi diplomats who were arrested in West Berlin at the beginning of August for an alleged attempt to detonate a bomb at a meeting of Kurdish students. Informed sources today confirmed a report in BERLINER MORGENPOST that the Federal Government is urging the Senat "for reasons of foreign policy" to expel the two Iraqis without bringing them to trial. The Senat on the other hand takes the view that the state cannot in this instance drop its claim that prosecution is necessary.

The Federal Government's wish that the two should be expelled was also confirmed by a well-informed source in Bonn today. This must be seen against the background of Bonn's good contacts with Iraq in the fight against terrorism. However, it was stressed in Bonn that the decision rests with the competent Berlin authorities.

FRG EXPRESSES 'DISMAY' OVER ROK OPPOSITION TRIAL

ID151230 Hamburg DPA in German 1056 GMT 15 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 15 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government has expressed its dismay at events in South Korea, where the leader of the South Korean opposition Kim Tae-chung is facing a military court with 23 other defendants for an alleged attempt to overthrow the regime. The Bonn Foreign Minister announced today that the German ambassador in Seoul presented a letter from Foreign Minister Genscher to the South Korean foreign minister. In it Genscher, who had already asked the Korean ambassador in Bonn to convey the Federal Government's concern to his government, expresses fears for the safety of democratic politicians.

EANES SPEAKS ON ROLE OF MILITARY IN PLURALISTIC DEMOCRACY

LD150952 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 14 Aug 80

[Excerpt] In his capacity as chief of the armed forces general staff, General Ramalho Eanes this morning awarded the Torre Espada [power and sword] to the infantry training school.

In a fundamentally military speech, Ramalho Eanes said that there are no successful armies whenever they estrange themselves from the will of the peoples that they defend. Explaining the reasons the Council of the Revolution was included within the framework of the present political regime, General Eanes said that the military are aware that pluralistic democracy does not need, nor is it compatible with any praetorian or corporative tutelages.

On 25 April [1974] and 25 November [1975] Eanes added, the Portuguese military proved that they had nothing to do with interventionist blueprints restrictive of democratic sovereignty.

Reference should be made to his statement that today it can be noted that the political leaders believe that pluralistic democracy is already endowed with its own defense mechanisms. Such a statement, laying emphasis on the democratic and pluralistic consolidation of the present regime, was the starting point for a few reflections pertaining to the present situation:

[Begin Eanes recording] It is true that in particularly important moments in the consolidation of our democracy, as is the case of preelectoral periods, there are politicians whose actions continue to be geared toward a shifting of the weight of the military institution in favor of their own blueprints. It is legitimate for them [words indistinct] to submit them to the Portuguese people. However, it is not legitimate to try to use the armed forces to benefit their own bluebrints. [end recording]

One cannot separate the statements made in Mafra by Ramalho Eanes from his capacity of president of the republic. Perhaps for this very reason, greater significance should be attached to his statement that the actions of the Council of the Revolution may sometimes have been debatable, in the same way that some actions of other organs of sovereignty may also have been controversial. He added:

[Begin Eanes recording] Militaristic blueprints which may still be alive in the minds of some, either as a reflection of a longing for the past, or as the result of political impotence, no longer have a place in a society which has adopted a pluralistic democracy and in which the armed forces recognize their complete subordination to the decisions of the legitimate political power. There will be no room for any other body of political-military power after the revision of the constitution. For the same reasons, there will be no transfer of these political-military functions into any category of military power. With the termination of the Council of the Revolution, the military leaders will (?confine) their functions to the internal framework of the military institution and in no circumstances will their personal political opinions be allowed to be expressed on pain of immediately placing themselves outside democratic legality and responsibility and outside the military ethics which they have pledged to respect and enforce. [end recording]

Ramalho Eanes also stressed that the military institution can only remain cohesive and operational as long as each of its members respects the ethical norms and codes which protect the armed forces from manipulation.

DIPLOMAT EXPLAINS CLOSURE OF EMBASSY IN TEHRAN

LD171356 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1420 GMT 17 Aug 80

[Text] London, 17 Aug (PA)--The British Embassy in Tehran was closed today after a week of hostile demonstrations. Most of the UK-based staff have been withdrawn with the result that the visa department had to shut down, so no Iranian will be able to get a British visa in Tehran. The embassy closed because, said Second Secretary David Reddaway, "we were not sure how quickly the word would get round."

Speaking on BBC Radio from Tehran he said: "We already have a permanent sit-in in support of students in detention in London and we thought it more prudent with the combination of disgruntled customers and political demonstators to keep the doors shut," particularly since today we don't really have anything to say to either group." Mr Reddaway pointed out that although the embassy was effectively "shut" today a telephonist was on duty and people were able to phone in.

Seven British-based staff and four dependants have been withdrawn, arriving back in Britain yesterday. "We thought that at a time of tension it would be wise to have fewer people on the ground," said Mr Reddaway. He stressed that consular protection would be maintained for British subjects in Iran and that the embassy would continue to function. Referring to the three Britons being held by revolutionary guards in Iran Mr Reddaway said: "We are still pressing for consular access."

"The Iranian Government is being very helpful," he said. "I know it is not easy for them either but I am very happy with the fact that they are trying hard."

A Foreign Office spokesman said today "this is a temporary measure at a time of tension," but the embassy remains in business both to provide such consular protection as required and as the circumstances allow and to maintain contact with the Iranian authorities. Closure of the embassy today was only a very short term measure. There was no question of closing the embassy down completely, he said. The senior British officials remaining at the embassy are: Charge d'Affaires Mr Arthur Wyatt, First Secretary Mr Edmun Barratt, Second Secretary Mr David Reddaway and Communications Officer Mr Robert Mansfield.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE URGES UK TO TAKE LEAD IN EEC

LD151229 London THE DAILY TELEGRAM in English 15 Aug 80 p 6

[Nicholas Comfort report: "Britain Must Take Lead in Europe, Says Walker"]

[Text] Britain must take the lead in developing dynamic and positive policies for the Common Market to follow, Mr Walker, minister of agriculture, said last night. Fifteen months of Conservative government had "transformed" Britain's position in Europe, he told constituents in Worcester. He looked to Britain's presidency of the EEC in the second half of next year as an opportunity to give an "imaginative and positive lead."

The visionary tone of Mr Walker's speech contrasted with the highly complex negotiations on farms prices and fisheries which have been taking up much of the time.

In the past, Mr Walker has not always been an ardent supporter of the Common Market.

Ministers have recently been reminded by Mr Angus Maude, paymaster-general, of the scope for making positive statements about Europe. But it was being stressed last night that Mr Walker's speech was all his own work.

Mr Walker said that some aspects of the Common Market were far from satisfactory--notably the "scandal" of unwanted farm surpluses and the air travel cartels which made movement unnecessarily expensive.

But he insisted: "This is certainly no time for the fainthearted in Britain to talk about the failure of the Community or the importance of Britain pursuing an isolationist policy."

Britain's position in Europe had been transformed in the past 15 months through the successful negotiation of a two-thirds cut in its budget contribution, the removal from agriculture of the "handicap" of the green pound, and the governments's foreign policy initiatives using Europe as a "substantial base."

"The time has come to life the horizons of Europe beyond the quibbles on the Common Agricultural Policy, and beyond legal arguments."

There was a need to recognise that "in a modern world the application of vision and imagination to what has already been created in Europe can provide for the remainder of this century a dynamism and a lead for which the world in the next century will truly be grateful. This time next year it is Britain that will be conducting the presidency of the European Community. It is a unique opportunity. It will be at a moment in history when France, Germany and the United States will all have completed their elections. The three major powers of the European Community and the strongest ally of the European Community will all have governments with a substantial period of time prior to any further elections taking place."

It will be an ideal time for Britain to give an imaginative and positive lead to Europe--a lead which will enable Europe to obtain its proper place as the major economic and political grouping in the world. "We must indicate the areas in which Europe should collaborate. We must give a new momentum to the Community during the period of the presidency.

"We must positively create close relationships with the newly developing economies of the Third World. Europe has the background to achieve such a connection. Currently 40 per cent of the economic aid to Third World countries comes from the European Community, compared with only 25 percent from the United States and only one per cent from the Soviet Union. The Community takes a quarter of the exports of the newly emerging economices.

"On our present performance we can create arrangements in which Europe becomes the main supplier of plant, machinery, management expertise and technology to the expanding countries."

Mr Walker also urged that Europe, as the greatest devourer of raw materials of any economic grouping in the world, should both develop long term relationships with its suppliers and invest heavily in recycling.

Instead of the present unwanted food surpluses, Europe should also develop a policy enabling it to feed not only the needs of the Common Market but of peoples suffering from malnutrition.

ROLANDHIS, GROMYKO EXCHANGE CABLES ON DIPLOMATIC ANNIVERSARY

NC161258 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 16 Aug 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis and his Soviet counterpart Gromyko have exchanged cables on the 20th anniversary of the establishment of Cypriot-Soviet diplomatic relations. In his cable, Gromyko says that the Soviet people wish the Cypriot people prosperity and success in their efforts to strengthen the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Cypriot Republic. He also expresses his conviction that friendly relations and cooperation between both countries will further develop in the interest of international peace and security.

In his cable, Rolandhis expresses gratitude for the USSR's support of and solidarity with Cyprus and its people's struggle for a just and lasting solution to the island's problem. The cable concludes: We note with deep satisfaction the development of friendly relations and cooperation between both countries and peoples in all fields.

FOREIGN MINISTRY PROTESTS UN OFFICERS' 'PRO-TURKISH' REMARKS

NC161545 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 16 Aug 80

AKEL DENOUNCES KIPRIANOU, ANNOUNCES OWN ELECTION PLANS

["Text" of 16 August statement by AKEL Central Committee]

[Excerpts] The intercommunal talks are expected to resume on 16 September following intensive efforts by the UN secretary general, the loss of an entire year and the 9 August opening meeting.

Although both sides should confine themselves to positive statements and preparations for really substantive talks, we have first had provocative statements by Denktas and then President Kiprianou's statements, which deviated from the planned course and were conducive to Denktas' intransigence.

After he wasted an entire year discussing virtually identical formulas, President Kiprianou accepted one of them. However, his statements before leaving for Greece the next day and his interview with the Athens paper TO VIMA proved that he actually accepts neither the four guidelines of the Makarios-Denktas agreement nor biregional federation.

Kiprianou tried, as always, to cover up his deviation from the Makarios line with slanders against AKEL, which for 3 whole years has struggled to keep him on the correct line by giving him its unselfish support.

Both by identifying himself fully with the EDEK leadership--which has never agreed to anything in the national council--and by his mudslinging efforts against AKEL he has attempted to identify AKEL with the extreme right, pro-NATO faction of DISI [Democratic Rally Party].

Instead of applying himself with seriousness and a spirit of self-criticism of the policy he has been following thus far--not only in the Cypriot issue but also in other serious problems of the country--Kiprianou has reached the point of accusing AKEL of splitting unity! However, the gravedigger of unity and cooperation, which became possible through AKEL's many sacrifices, is Kiprianou himself, who has violated the Makarios line and identified himself with the line that leads to Cyprus' complete destruction and enslavement.

This irresponsible way of handling the Cypriot issue has resulted in rumors about the failure of the talks before they even resume.

AKEL believes that we must go to the talks fully prepared, with the four guidelines of the Makarios-Denktas agreement worked out and even armed with a draft constitution based on a biregional federation that must be used at the appropriate time.

AKEL believes that the Greek Cypriot side has a great deal to gain from a serious, prudent and consistent stand and from a constructive attitude at the negotiating table.

AKEL believes that, irrespective of Denktas' provocation and unsubstantiated allegations, the Greek Cypriot side, the Cypriot Government, and Cyprus can only suffer losses as a result of the way in which President Kiprianou spoke last Saturday [in his 9 August press conference] and in his interview with TO VIMA.

This is not because we have any illusions about Denktas or the chauvinistic, reactionary imperialist forces behind him, but because an absolutely positive approach to the issue and a consistency based on the line adopted by the National Council under Makarios' chairmanship are in the interest of the Greek Cypriot side, of the Turkish Cypriots and of Cyprus.

Therefore, irrespective of any negative stand by Denktas--who has every interest in torpedoing the talks because in this way he would serve the chauvinistic, imperialist plans of partition or even Turkey's complete occupation of Cyprus--the Greek Cypriot side must attend the talks fully prepared for a constructive dialogue on the basis of the agreements reached and the UN resolutions.

In this manner we will also strengthen the progressive Turkish Cypriot forces and exert the best possible pressure on the other side's leadership to make a positive response for a viable Cypriot solution that would secure Cyprus' independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, federation, nonalignment and demilitarization.

This year, as has been the case every year, the AKEL Central Committee proclaims a fund-raising drive to strengthen its financial status and calls upon party cadres and members, its friends and supporters to contribute generously to the party's treasury. We deem it our duty to remind that, in accordance with the constitution, the parliamentary elections will be held in the first half of 1981 based on the new electoral law on the proportional representation system, the enactment of which AKEL contributed to decisively. AKEL will contest these elections with its own forces.

The AKEL Central Committee is fully confident and convinced that AKEL members, friends and supporters of the working people's party, appreciating the very serious duties it has to carry out, will enthusiastically respond to the appeal for the party's financial strengthening.

On its party, AKEL's response will be worthy of the expectations of the workers and the people.

[Signed] The AKEL Central Committee.

OFFICIAL STATES TURKISH SIDE WILL ATTEND REOPENING OF TALKS

TA151105 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 15 Aug 80

[Text] The Council of Ministers held an extraordinary meeting today under the chairmanship of Irsen Kucuk, the acting prime minister and minister of agriculture, natural resources and energy. During the meeting, the Council of Ministers discussed Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou's negative statement which was made with a view to undermining the intercommunal talks.

The TURKISH NEWS AGENCY in Cyprus [TAK] reports that the results of the meeting were conveyed to President Denktas by Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Kenan Atakol.

After the 3-hour Council of Ministers meeting, Atakol was asked by TAK whether there was a possibility that the intercommunal talks might not resume. The minister replied: As far as we are concerned there is no such danger. We will not be taken in by provocations despite this display of ill will. We will go to the intercommunal talks on 16 September to continue to defend the rights of our community.

DENKTAS REITERATES DEMAND FOR TURKISH GUARANTEE IN CYPRUS

[Text] Turkish Federated State of Cyprus President Rauf Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriot side will not accept any agreement which does not include Turkey's guarantee.

Denktas made this statement during a ceremony in Gazimagosa [Famagusta] marking the sixth anniversary of the second peace operation by the Turkish Armed Forces in Cyprus. The liberation anniversaries in the federated state on the occasion of the sixth anniversary of the second peace operation were continued at the martyrs monument in Gazimagosa this morning. Later a ceremony was held at the Ataturk monument and wreaths were laid at the monument. The last ceremony in Gazimagosa was held on Polatpasa Boulevard at 1800. The significance of the day was noted during the ceremony, which ended with a military parade.

In a speech during the ceremony, Denktas explained the attitude of the Greek Cypriots toward the Turkish Cypriot community until now and said that, despite everything, the Turkish Cypriot side is making great sacrifices for the establishment of a bizonal system. Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriots want to make peace with the Greek Cypriots under equal terms and that a republic to be established without the guarantee of Turkey would resemble a republic made out of sand.

MITSOTAKIS DENIES SIGNING AIDE-MEMOIRE WITH TURKEY, U.S.

NC151227 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 15 Aug 80 p 1

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis has denied press reports that an aide mémoire was signed in Ankara by the foreign ministers of Greece, Turkey and the United States and that all sides, mainly Turkey, have undertaken an obligation to speed up Greece's reentry into the Atlantic alliance's military wing.

"The report on a protocol of any kind between myself and Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen in Ankara is totally inaccurate. The only thing on which agreement was reached was the joint communique. We have not concluded any other agreement."

FOREIGN MINISTER TO ATTEND UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY, EEC COUNCIL

[Text] According to agency reports, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis will visit New York between 25 September and 5 October to follow the UN General Assembly session. Mr Mitsotakis will meet his Turkish counterpart, Mr Erkmen, in the course of the Assembly's work and will also have meetings with other foreign ministers. From New York Mr Mitsotakis will go straight to Brussels where the Council of EEC Foreign Ministers will meet on 7 and 8 October. This is the first time a Greek minister will participate in this council.

PAPANDREOU DISAGREES WITH NATIONAL OIL EXPLORATION POLICY

AT171441 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 15 Aug 80 p 1

[Excerpt] PASOK will not accept as a fait accompli the undisguised sellout of our energy resources to the foreign oil cartel because these New Democracy choices not only downgrade independent economic development but also undermine our own national independence. PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou made this clear warning in tough language in reply to the government statement that it will proceed into agreements with foreign multinational companies for exploration in Greece.

As is well known, in its relevant statement the government mentioned that exploration programs should be completed in 10 years, noted the weaknesses of the public oil corporation and stressed that, after bids have been submitted, multinational companies will be entrusted with 90 percent of exploration, in exchange for which they will exploit the oilfields that will be discovered.

This government decision caused a "verticle" reaction by PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou, who stated:

"The recent government statement on entrusting oil 'exploration' to others constitutes one more sample of the policy of dependence of the New Democracy government.

"We thus find ourselves before an undisguised sellout of our energy resources to the foreign oil and energy cartels.

"Under the pretext of this referent exploration and the well-known unacceptable arrangements of the notorious law concerning hydrocarbons, the foreign trusts will undertake to exploit any deposits which, in their opinion, can be utilized in 90 percent of our potential petroleum deposits. Actually, they will undertake the exploitation through agreements that will be concluded by presidential decrees, without any control by the Greek chamber, just as the government majority skillfully arranged through the passing of law 468/76.

"Furthermore, in recognizing the bankruptcy of its policy the government has restricted the sector of activities of the public oil corporation to exploration of 10 percent of the potential deposits, while for the remaining 90 percent it has stated that 'the possibility of participation in exploitation will be sought.'

"It is truly surprising for the New Democracy government to refer to a 'mere seeking' when the designation of a strict framework of participation constitutes a basic concern of any, even a dependent country.

"In a number of countries with a greater or lesser degree of development, exploration and exploitation are mainly made by (?multinational) agents either by using their own equipment, by subcontracting with national supervision, or by international agreements.

"After the unacceptable delay in the development of national technology, Greek initiatives should have been aimed toward the last goal and especially toward friendly countries with national state agents for exploration (for instance, Italy, Romania, etc.)

"The absence of the entire Aegean from the areas to be explored appears even more serious since it confirms PASOK charges regarding the existence of secret agreements which were made without the people's knowledge.

"A gap certainly separates our viewpoints from government policy in both the choice of strategy and tactics.

"However, in the sectors of energy and mineral wealth, which are of strategic significance, the current choices undermine the country's future prospects. For this reason we now declare that PASOK will not accept as faits accomplis any choices which undermine not only independent economic development but also our own national independence."

In replying to the PASOK chairman, the government, although reiterating the difficulties the public oil corporation faces in undertaking the responsibility for all explorations, avoids replying to the question of who is responsible for this inadequacy and to the specific proposals which the PASOK chairman has made for grappling with this gap (subcontracting with national supervision, interstate agreements).

In response to the government the PASOK chairman stressed that "since the New Democracy government persists in its viewpoint and considers the course it has selected to be nationally beneficial, we challenge it to bring the relevant agreements to the chamber and not to possibly use other arrangements (presidential decrees) granted to it by law 468/76 which it has passed."

MINISTERS APPROVE MARTIAL LAW EXTENSION AFTER DISCUSSION

National Security Council Recommendation

TA171555 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 17 Aug 80

[Text] The National Security Council has decided to recommend to the government a 2-month extension of the martial law in effect in 20 provinces. The recommendation is being discussed at the Council of Ministers session which is now in progress.

The National Security Council met at the Cankaya Mansion under the chairmanship of Acting President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil at 0930. The meeting lasted 6 hours. It was attended by Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, Chief of the General Staff Gen Kenan Evren, ministers who are members of the council, the ground, naval and air force commanders as well as the National Security Council secretary general.

A statement issued after the meeting says that the council reviewed domestic and foreign developments, the public order situation and the work being conducted in the martial law areas. The statement says that the state security forces are waging a merciless and successful struggle against anarchy, terrorism, divisiveness and destructiveness within the framework of the existing law and within the limits of their authority. The statement adds: However, the nature of the incidents, the identity of the organizations and their intentions of destroying the state as well as the increasing boldness of hostile foreign circles is making it essential to conduct a comprehensive, rapid and organized struggle with all the state bodies--that is, the legislative, executive and judiciary--participating.

The National Security Council Secretariat General statement says that it has become a national necessity not only to protect the essence of the basic rights and freedoms envisaged by the constitution but also to insure that the unity of the country and the nation is not endangered.

The statement then says: Our citizens must be confident that, no matter how regrettable the incidents are, terrorism, divisiveness, destructiveness and efforts to spread them will be ended by the full coordination of the state's forces and forces within the constitutional order. The culprits will receive the punishments they deserve within the framework of the rules of a law-abiding state.

The statement points out that existing shortcomings must be rectified as soon as possible for strengthening the state's democratic authority and for the laws to gain the necessary efficiency.

It adds: The National Security Council considers it necessary for all the institutions that owe their existence to the Turkish Constitution--the legislative, executive and judicial--to function harmoniously and effectively and to carry out their duties in order to neutralize the threat facing the country. The council considers it necessary for measures to be taken so that justice is carried out rapidly and for all efforts to be aimed at the achievements of national unity and solidarity.

The statement then says that the National Security Council believes that the struggle being waged by the state must be continued with persistance and determination and therefore has decided to recommend to the government the extension of the martial law in force in 20 provinces by another 2 months.

The Council of Ministers convened at 1600 to discuss the National Security Council recommendation. The meeting is still in progress.

Council of Ministers Approval

TA171700 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 17 Aug 80

[Excerpt] The Council of Ministers convened at 1600 to discuss the National Security Council recommendation to extend by 2 months the martial law in effect in 20 provinces. The meeting lasted about 3 hours. A written statement issued at the end of the meeting says that the participants reviewed the struggle being waged against anarchy, terrorism, divisiveness and destructiveness and decided to submit to the Grand National Assemnly the prime ministry memorandum based on the National Security Council recommendation and which envisages the extension of martial law--approved by the Turkish Grand National Assembly on 18 June--by 2 months, as of 20 August, in the provinces of Adana, Adiyaman, Agri, Ankara, Bingol, Diyarbakir, Elazig, Erzurum, Gaziantep, Hakkari, Hatay, Istanbul, Izmir, Kahramanmaras, Kars, Malatya, Mardin, Siirt, Tunceli and Urfa. The Council of Ministers' decision on the issue will be debated in the Turkish Grand National Assembly tomorrow.

The Council of Ministers statement also says that the necessary measures to pay government debts to farmers as soon as possible were determined and that developments concerning Cyprus and Jerusalem were discussed. The Council of Ministers also discussed work being conducted in the areas hit by natural disasters and droughts as well as measures to be taken to prevent coal shortages this winter.

NSP LEADER ERBAKAN DISCUSSES EARLY ELECTIONS PROPOSAL

[Text] NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan has said that the JP is not sincere about the issue of early elections and that it is using the issue in order to deceive the nation.

At a news conference in parliament, Erbakan said that if the JP is sincere in its remarks about early elections then it ought to be present in parliament with all its members on the day the early elections proposal is to be debated. He said: If the JP fails to come to the assembly and support our proposal on 19 August it will be clear once again that it is insincere in its approach to this issue as in the case with all other issues. Our nation will closely follow the JP in the next 2 days.

Erbakan said that his party was not in favor of holding early elections in October or December because during those months weather conditions, especially in eastern Turkey, were not conducive to going to the polls.

Erbakan charged that if early elections were held the JP would lose by a wide margin. He said: The JP followed in the footsteps of the RPP. It has not caused anything but anarchy, inflation and the high cost of living. Despite all its efforts to deceive the nation, our citizens will certainly not be deceived an eighth time. It is obvious that this is the last time the JP will try its hand at governing the country. Our nation will put an end to its loyalty and admiration for the West--traits of the JP mentality.

Erbakan said that the national view and pro-Western view would compete in the elections. He added: Our nation will decide whether Turkey is on the side of Israel or on the side of the Islamic world. Erbakan said the legislature should continue to work, even after deciding on early elections, and ratify the social bills. Replying to a question, Erbakan said that for the early elections to be held under proper conditions the ministers of justice, interior, transportation, national education, forestry, rural affairs and public works must be changed. To another question, the NSP leader replied that his party is determined to topple the government after the assembly decides to hold early elections.

PAPERS COMMENT ON SITUATION IN POLAND

[Press review]

[Text] Again today the predominant topic of editorial discussion is the situation in Poland. In this context the commentators also view the forthcoming visit of Polish party chief Gierek with Chancellor Schmidt in Hamburg. The Essen WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: The world is holding its breath watching what is currently happening in Poland, for things are taking place there which actually are inconceivable in a socialist country. Strikes which actually could not and should not occur are given the status of semilegality by the considerable fulfillment of the demands raised. The head of government via the television screen faces the nation to concede the mistakes made by the allegedly omniscient party. And finally the government even appoints a commission for examining in all forms what the demands of the protesting working people are all about. As profound as the loss for answers may be into which the revolting shipyard workers and their colleagues elsewhere have plunged the rulers, one thing seems to be clear since yesterday: The Warsaw leadership obviously is prepared to embark on an extremely difficult road of which nobody as yet knows exactly when and where it will run up against the limit of what is possible.

STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG states: What remains most amazing about the current events in Poland, which by far have not concluded and which might end up in general chaos if such misfortune occurs, is the calm with which the government and those it governs are dealing with each other. If the 35 million Poles develop some skill, patience, and above all intelligence, however, they may face the prospect of interesting domestic policy beginnings which are new for the communist world. The most important ability required for this seems to have been acquired already by all three power centers participating in the present debates--workers, security apparatus, and the party--the ability to compromise.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG observes: The anxious question arises, however, of how long the reserve of patience and circumspection will last. Nothing decisive has so far been done toward the solution of the conflict. Since strikes actually are not allowed in a communist state there are no binding rules for the search for a compromise. In Western democracies a strike is a legitimate instrument for enforcing trade union demands. The Polish trade unions, however, are a state power instrument for disciplining the working people. It is this tutelage, above all, against which the struggle of the outraged workers is directed.

What concerns Duesseldorf's WESTDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG is this: The turbulent developments in Poland make the bankruptcy of the existing socialism particularly evident, and to this extent malicious joy as the first Western reaction would be understandable. But we must hope, and not just for the sake of the suffering Poles, that their understandable ire will not provoke anything worse. An intervention by the Red Army in which the West would have to remain an impotent onlooker would not only bury all the Polish people's hopes but would also bring a new glacial age to all of Europe. A popular uprising against the Warsaw regime can, as matters stand, only end tragically. Hence one must hope that both sides, the workers as well as the government and party organs, continue to endeavor for conflict management without violence, as extremely difficult as this is.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE asks: What would become of the illusion of a divisible detente which Moscow has offered the West with some success since Afghanistan if a fire flares up in Poland and is extinguished by force? The dream of detente in the West would dissolve and for the time being could no longer be used by Moscow for ensuring and enhancing Soviet power in the world.

The West would find itself reminded, in profound embarrassment, of the trauma of its inactivity toward the East Germans, Hungarians, and Czechs, in the mesmerizing awareness of being forced ultimately to come to an arrangement with the victors just as at the other times.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU maintains: One can easily guess that due to the international tensions an Edward Gierek fall this time would not have as slight consequences as the removal of Wladyslaw Gomulka 10 years ago. If the Polish workers were to prevail against their elite in power, their colleagues in neighboring states could also get the idea of speaking Polish with their leading comrades. The reasons for the problems are the same. Despite the surprising buildup in the 3 1/2 decades since the war, the progressive industrial states of the East European and North Asiatic economic system have given considerable subsidies to the Soviet Union. Prices set by the central Moscow authorities, the adaptation of national economies to a central plan enforced by CEMA, a plan following Soviet needs--these are economic levers transporting Soviet difficulties to their neighbors.

The daily DIE WELT writes: If there is a chance to avoid the catastrophe, it ought to be taken. One thing is clear, however: The West cannot safeguard the future of the Polish nation by strengthening a leadership that has failed, but by demanding reform, autonomy and the right of self-determination for the Polish people. The Federal Government has a special responsibility in this respect. Giscard and Schmidt have stated in a common communique after the occupation of Afghanistan that detente would not stand one more such strike. Schmidt ought to point this out on this occasion in time, namely beforehand--and not merely vis-a-vis Gierek, but also publicly vis-a-vis the Kremlin.

AUGSBURGER ALLGEMEINE stresses: The fact that Moscow did not do anything so far, that Gierek's visit to the West will take place--according to information available until Sunday--despite the domestic political eruptions, all this stresses the significance attributed by the Soviet capital to the Western contacts of the Poles.e The Communist Party chief of the Vistula did not merely want to ask for small gifts for the empty Warsaw cashboxes when he went to the Elbe. Regardless of how important Western financial injections may be for the Polish economy and thus for the present leadership, it is Gierek's main aim as before to get the East-West dialogue going that has been frozen since the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan, get it going at least below the Washington-Moscow level.

RHEINPFALZ of Ludwigshafen notes: Premier Babiuch said in his speech that Poland has reliable allies who are concerned by the difficulties of the country. But it does not look at all as if Moscow's concern was going so far as to help the Poles with credits. The "reliability" of the great ally much rather consists in the exertion of pressure. Edward Gierek will come tomorrow as a battered party chief to the Federal Republic where a credit running into the billions is waiting for him. The Federal Government is facing the difficult problem of how to help the Polish people and not Gierek. When it comes to money, one ought to know to whom and for what it will be given. Europen security may have its price, but not at the expense of people who are shaking the pillars of their communist subjugation.

DARMSTAEDTER ECHO maintains with regard to domestic political reactions to the Polish crisis and Gierek's visit: The statements of the Federal German opposition on this issue were a tragedy this weekend. Helmut Kohl pointed out the election campaign effect of the Schmidt-Gierek meeting. Franz Josef Strauss pointed out over the radio what the attempt would cost the German taxpayer to stabilize the Polish regime with the help of foreign currency. Such statements demonstrate the old inability of the Union to maintain a farsighted policy of safeguarding peace with the Eastern neighbor countries, or just to understand such a policy. Only if the policy of detente is maintained over decades, can it be successful. But if Bonn or some other Western power tried to promote just indirectly a public revolt in the East, which would be doomed to failure anyway, it could only have negative consequences for all European states.

FINANCE MINISTER CRITICIZES EC AGRICULTURAL POLICY

[Excerpt] Frankfurt, 16 Aug (DPA)--Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer (SPD) has sharply criticized the EC's agricultural policy. Addressing the national conference of the SPD Working Group for Labor (AFA), Matthoefer said in Frankfurt on Saturday that a gigantic argument will break out in this sector no later than June of next year, once the new EC budget is under discussion.

Matthoefer said that Europe would have to be developed financially to ensure worldwide peace, but he thought a European agricultural policy which swallowed 70 percent of the Community budget and which was spent largely on the financing of surplus production would be totally unacceptable. "This mismanagement must stop," especially since the federal budget "could not be the lady bountiful for Europe for years ahead," the minister said.

SPD DEFENSE EXPERT COMMENTS ON U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY

[Text] Bonn, 18 Aug (DPA)--SPD defense expert Erwin Horn believes that the new U.S. nuclear strategy does not stand in the way of arms control talks and actually makes them necessary. In a DPA interview in Bonn today, Horn stressed that President Carter's new directive could increase the credibility of the deterrent, but it must be "complemented politically, because otherwise dangerous developments could be set in motion as a result of the intrusion of misunderstandings."

The new directive replaces the massive retaliatory nuclear strike against population centers with selective nuclear attacks against important military targets. According to Horn, this "strategic targeting" undoubtedly means "a refining of the nuclear strategy," but now there is also a danger of "lowering the risk threshold."

Horn, who is a member of the Bundestag Defense Committee, stressed that greater credibility of the deterrent also included a greater readiness to use it in case of emergency. "Logically this means a transition in nuclear strategy from the political weapon of deterrence to a military operational weapon."

Horn left no room for doubt that especially in case of conflict the Federal Republic had to be able to trust in the reliability of the United States. For this reason it would be wrong to cause the Americans "unreasonable difficulties in the attempt to limit the risk which, as a nuclear world power, they must bear in a special way." At the same time, however, the cohesion of the alliance must be strengthened. A large part of the criticism of the new U.S. strategy from European NATO states is understandable, "because the necessary political communication in the alliance is often lacking." This leads to unneccessary frictions which could put a strain on the alliance and weaken it. Horn said that security policy must be seen from the standpoint of the entire defense spectrum. Conventional defense capabilities in Europe determined the height of the nuclear threshold. The European NATO partners will best serve their own interests concerning the lowering of the nuclear threshold by making an appropriate conventional defense contribution.

Horn strongly supported the viewpoint that the ratification of SALT II is in everyone's interest. The implementation of this process following the U.S. presidential elections and new, comprehensive talks with the Soviets on arms control are in accordance with NATO's dual decision of last December.

EXPERT VIEWS FOREIGN POLICY IMPLICATIONS OF ENERGY ISSUES

DW150914 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 14 Aug 80 pp 14,15

[Text] The Problem

If we try to survey the abundance of scientific publications on foreign policy we can easily find that, barring a few exceptions, the scientific treatment of foreign policy so far has defined this policy predominantly as the relationship between states and as the defense and alliance policies. The actual political development, however, has long gone past this sort of foreign policy with the task of foreign policy becoming more and more the coordination of internal developments and the strategies of solutions to problems within blocs of states and the settlement of the economic relations between blocs of states. Apart from energy policy which is to be discussed here other key issues are economic development and growth policy, environmental protection, raw materials policy, and finally international division of labor at large. In each field international agreements, formal and informal, have considerable domestic repercussions which tangibly curtail the capability of action at least of democratically elected governments (and constitute a cause of the diminishing importance of the parliaments).

The decision-making and compromise-forming mechanisms as well as the problems of domestic implementation in this connection have hardly been surveyed or formed the subject of a systematic and broader public discussion. Particularly in the Federal Republic a rational debate is being impaired by the alternative radicalism of an ordoliberal [socioliberal form of neoliberalism] market economy ideology which is still influential (particularly in the Federal Ministry of Economics). Meanwhile the realistic alternatives are not in the Platonistic model of the confrontation of "free market economy" versus "central planned economy" but lie in the question as to what extent conflict-aggravating confrontation, unilateral dependence, and conflicts of interests can be mitigated through stabilizing cooperation, interdependence and balance of interests. This applies, at any rate, when warlike conflicts are to be avoided and if one advocates the view that these often are caused by undigested economic and social conflicts.

The following treatise, therefore, seeks to analyze the international implications and shifts in foreign policy priorities which emerge as a result of the energy situation which has been dramatically changed compared with the sixties. This treatise seeks to show how it was attempted to absorb conflicts or crisis developments resultant therefrom, and to manage these conflicts and critical situations. The problem of oil supply, nonproliferation of nuclear weapons, and energy technology will serve as an example to illustrate this.

Foreign Policy Fields of Conflict of Energy Policy

Oil Supply

The shock of the "oil crisis" of the fall of 1973 entailed foreign policy reactions in three respects: in a shift of priorities toward economic security; in a change in the European-Israeli relationship; and--only partially independent of that--in a burdening of the European-U.S. relationship.

Concerning the first: Aside from the collapse of the world currency system of Bretton Woods the impairment of the oil supply in the fall of 1973, which was felt to be acute, constituted the second convulsion which shook the basic pattern of the "harmonious world order" of the fifties and sixties At the time the Western industrial states found themselves in mutual interdependence, to be sure, but in an economic and social development in the same upward direction indeed, a development in which the developing countries that had become independent took over the role of raw material suppliers.

Everybody seemed to profit from this interdependence and division of labor, and even the--nearly autarkic--East Bloc could hardly disturb the world economic crisis. After 1969 the oil crisis suddenly produced an acute requirement by the individual states for economic security--and the way in which France and in part Great Britain also sought to attain this in an erupting nationalism probably is one of the darkest chapters of European unification efforts of postwar history.

In any event, it was clear that "security" had to be newly defined politically since many people (subjectively) felt that there was not only a military threat from the Soviet sphere but also an economic threat by the raw material and energy producers. The "finger on the oil faucet" could be just as devastating for the existence of the Western industrial states (this was the general feeling) as the finger on the missile-triggering button--and its action was felt to be more probable. And the alliance as it was did not offer any protection against that.

Concerning the second reaction: It was not only the use of the "oil weapon" but also the outcome of the Yom Kippur war which made it plain that a durable peace settlement was imperative in the Middle East unless the world wished to live with an unbearably great risk of further warlike conflicts in this region which would not remain localized in their effects. Thus the attitude of the EC as well as of the United States, which so far had been absolutely pro-Israeli, turned into one of mediation. Meanwhile, the guarantee of Israel's existence has always been uncontested (in the borders of 1967), yet the close U.S.-Saudi Arabian "special relationship," the direct U.S. interventions in the Israeli-Egyptian peace efforts, the Euro-Arab dialogue, and so forth caused the feelings to emerge in Israel that it was "sold out" for oil, and it did not react flexibly to the new state of affairs.

Since, besides, the dogmatically religiously motivated (settlement) policy of the Begin government led to a constantly stronger criticism even of governments friendly toward Israel (such as the Federal Republic), the European-Israeli (probably just as the U.S.-Israeli) relationship dropped to an absolute low. The mistaken Israeli interpretation that the Israeli-Egyptian agreements would be a substitute for a solution of the Palestinian problem, as well as the endeavors of the European states (and the United States) to attain economic security form here a complex of causes which can hardly be unraveled.

Concerning the third reaction: Even though at the moment the Israel policy of the European Community and of the United States are in harmony indeed, this process did not proceed free of friction. Especially after the oil crisis the United States felt more duped than supported by various European (especially French) initiatives. The specter that the Western alliance might be fundamentally shaken by a policy of "everybody for himself" in the distribution struggle over oil was born at the time (and has not died to this day). At first the development led to an aggravation of the imbalance in the alliance--the United States was and is the only power which can act with some weight in the Middle East politically (and in the event of a Soviet intervention, also militarily), while in effect there is no such thing as a European "Mediterranean policy" and the NATO-affiliated states bordering on the Mediterranean are involved in domestic and foreign policy conflicts (for example, the Cyprus problem).

On the other hand, U.S. dependence on Middle East oil has dramatically increased since 1973; since then U.S. oil imports have tripled, and practically everything left from the decrease in European OPEC oil imports resulting from their--albeit modest--energy policy efforts is being absorbed by the United States. Small wonder that U.S. energy policy increasingly is becoming the target of European criticism. It is probably not unjustified that the view prevails in Europe that the events in Iran would not have entailed the renewed aggravation on the oil market and the subsequent price explosion had the United States throttled its imports at least comparably to the European figures.

In what way, then, was a foreign policy attempt made to react to these developments and challenges? The International Energy Agency (IEA) was founded in Paris which came into being essentially upon U.S. promotion but also as a result of the realization that a European or even national strategy toward OPEC would be bound to remain ineffective unless the other Western big oil consumers, above all the United States, would be included as well.

In the beginning the IEA indeed had been intended by some parties involved--above all by the United States which at the time still was independent of imports--as a sort of "consumer cartel" vis-a-vis OPEC. But soon a more realistic strategy prevailed which restricted the IEA to three tasks: setup of an information system for obtaining reliable data on deliveries, reserves, consumption development, and so forth; joint crisis management (including joint rationing of the reserves and/or production of the IEA states) if a delivery cut of more than 7 percent is ascertained in a country (the IEA thus is the first "alliance" in history on a statistical basis!), and finally the attempt to coordinate the energy policy of the member countries.

It is rather hard to judge the effectiveness of the IEA's activities. The information system has turned out to be rather useful--especially since the temporary loss of Iranian production--and the coordination work--especially the austerity--probably had positive albeit unlimited [as printed] effects. The impact on public attention, however, has been relatively small, and each country continues to make an energy policy of its own (just muddling through), so that the IEA is more registering than coordinating.

This is not surprising for an accelerated enlargement program for nuclear energy, such as in France, would be inconceivable in the Federal Republic, for example, under the present domestic considerations. And the U.S. Congress which has more or less blocked the energy legislation of as many as three presidents by now will not be persuaded to adopt a different stance even by mild IEA chiding.

The crisis management, finally, thus far has not been tested, above all because in the spring of 1979, too, the equalizing distribution system of the multinational oil trusts was still working. It is only a matter of speculation whether the solidarity will prevail "in case of emergency." The telling absence of France from the IEA as well as numerous efforts for bilateral agreements with one OPEC state or another are negative factors. On the other hand, it is doubtful whether a (predominantly psychological) shock such as that of 1973 can be triggered again at all. The reaction to the Iranian delivery losses led to absolutely similarly high price leaps as in 1973/74, to be sure, yet on the whole the reaction was calmer, at least in Europe.

And justly so, for if we hypothesize a 25-percent cut of the oil deliveries by OPEC as the technical, economic, and political ceiling, the EC could survive this "embargo" for 2 years with a consumption cut of only 10 percent, through its own reserves and oil production. The situation in the United States is different, where a nation which never--not even in two world wars--was forced to cut consumption and exercise austerity is facing a crisis of principles of creed and living habits which jeopardize its identity.

Apart from the IEA, which initially was very confrontational, there was also the attempt to achieve economic security through negotiations and conferences. What is worth mentioning here is the Conference on International Economic Cooperation (KIWZ) and the European-Arab dialogue. It was upon Algerian urging especially that OPEC had proposed the KIWZ to the hesitant Europeans and the initially disinclined Americans as early as 1973. The conference started working in 1975, and then "died" after 1977.

The reason why this happened was that the main intention (especially on the part of Algeria) to create a linkage between oil prices and development assistance (and thus to keep the developing countries, particularly suffering from the oil price increase and being poor in raw materials, on OPEC's side politically) failed because the erupting quarrels within OPEC as well as the market situation with demand decreases owing to recession and prices prevented the enforcement of this linkage and because the realization gained ground that specialized UN institutions (above all the UNCTAD) would be more suited for the discussion of other questions concerning development and raw materials policy. The industrial countries were not prepared (nor could they be forced) to make concessions in these issues at two conferences--presumably in the justified concern that these then would be greater on the whole.

The dialogue which the European Community opened after the oil crisis with the 21 countries of the Arab League turned out to be more tenacious. Probably this was attributable to the fact that it less ambitiously rather served the "improvement in climate" and the exchange of information--it is hardly possible to attribute any other characterization to the meetings of experts and contacts of ambassadors held in the meantime. Still, this European-Arab dialogue may have contributed to the good development of the trade and finance relations between Europe and the OPEC states which now have grown to be more solvent. And the exploitation of the enhanced importing capability as well as the relatively smooth integration of the "petrodollars" were important factors for Europe in weathering the oil crisis so relatively well for the time being.

The developing countries poor in raw materials, however, did not cope so well with the balance of payments problems caused by the oil price explosion, and the latest price hike will even drastically aggravate this problem. The moderately increased development assistance by the industrial countries as well as the commencing development aid by some OPEC states (especially Saudi Arabia) did not suffice to balance the worsening of the terms of trade for this group of poor countries.

If the OPEC countries wish to ensure for themselves the lasting support by the Third World, the petrodollar flows in the future must seek other channels. It will not suffice to only "build them in" again into the financial and trade relations with the Western industrial states, but they must increasingly be available for development aid. However this may be organized in financial-technical detail, the world probably will be confronted with entirely new distribution conflicts in the future unless part of the increased real transfer from the oil price increases received by the rich "low absorbers" from the industrial states is conveyed to those developing countries poor in raw materials.

Even if the review to this point shows considerable foreign policy efforts (as well as changes) for the sake of ensuring the oil supply--and thus of attaining the goal of economic stability--the future role of foreign policy in this field will not decrease. Nobody deems probable a return to the times when the oil supply of the industrial states had largely been guaranteed by the "market forces"--not even those who otherwise let no chance go unused to praise the blessing of market economy for energy policy as well (as shown, for example, by the numerous trips to the Middle East by the federal foreign minister). For the oil trusts no longer control the production, processing, and distribution process "from the drill hole to the gas station" but are increasingly elbowed into the role of service enterprises.

This is the reason for their efforts toward horizontal diversification to other energy sources, their development into energy trusts. Rather, oil production today is exclusively adapted to the state objectives of the OPEC members, and these not only include oil as a "political weapon" and means of influence but also and above all aim at "getting the maximum" from the limited reserves--a motive which probably will keep the very heterogeneous OPEC group together also in the future.

The objectives of OPEC include not only the constant attempt of a considerable group within OPEC (the price pushers and the high absorbers) to enforce disproportional price increases but also, as the next step, the intention to move "downstream" and to set up a crude oil processing capacity of its own. There are good reasons for all OPEC states to try to stretch their reserves, and it was an illusion to believe that OPEC--and also Saudi Arabia--would altruistically satisfy any increasing oil demand of the industrial states, then sooner or later relapse into the conditions of an irrelevant desert state. Contrary to the hopes concerning a Saudi-U.S. "special relationship" this also applies to Saudi Arabia because its price-moderating influence is based on the very fact that it can mobilize unused capacities on short notice so as to stabilize prices via a stepped-up output. Yet the price explosion since the winter of 1978/79 has plainly shown how limited this option is also for Saudi Arabia.

The outline of the policy to date and its future prospects in conclusion raises the question of how its success should be judged. The answer to this question cannot be unequivocal. On the one hand Western foreign policy surely contributed toward preventing renewed warlike or critical developments in the Middle East and thus the use of the oil as a political weapon. Since a durable peace solution (including the solution to the Palestinian problem) will probably not be found in the foreseeable future, and since neither the United States nor the EC can force a solution, the oil supply remains dependent on one of the world's most instable regions.

Besides, it has turned out that a Western strategy aimed at cooperation and stabilization (with a likewise reserved Soviet policy) cannot prevent the domestic instability as well as the eruption of new fields of conflict. And if the oil demand obviously exceeds the supply--for whatever reason--another price explosion will not be prevented by any foreign policy action or agreement (this became possible only in 1976 because of an excess supply).

Thus, the key to the achievement of economic security in the oil supply is to be found in the industrial states themselves--whether it will be possible in the next few years to save enough oil and/or to substitute oil with other energy resources. What will be decisive in this connection is U.S. energy policy since this country alone consumed about 50 percent of the energy input in the IEA countries. Success or failure will not exist without foreign policy repercussions--for the prestige of and confidence in the United States as a world power are largely based, at least in Europe, on whether and how the energy problems are solved.

Peaceful Utilization of Nuclear Energy

What formed the starting point of the foreign policy conflicts over nuclear energy from 1976 on was, on the surface, the quarrel between the new Carter administration and the Federal Government over the so-called "Brazil business," the delivery of eight light water reactors and--the bone of contention--one prototype each of a reprocessing and uranium-enrichment installation. With that Brazil would have had control of the whole cycle and this constituted too much of a proliferation risk, at least to the Carter administration (unlike the preceding Ford administration).

Unlike France in the case of Pakistan, the Federal Government, however, did not see itself in a position to change its attitude (and to torpedo the transaction, for instance, via the foreign-trade approval reservations). They feared a precedent and saw the good reputation as a reliable contract partner in jeopardy. Besides, they believed that they had created ample contractual safeguards which would prevent a misuse of the technology for arms production, even though Brazil (like many other Latin American states) did not sign the treaty on the nonproliferation of nuclear weapons (NV treaty) nor has ratified the Latin American counterpart--the Treaty of Tlaltelolco.

What was more important to the foreign policy than the arguments which were advanced in this topical case--and the delivery stops and delays for political reasons which bolster these arguments--was the fact that two basically different concepts clashed here on how a misuse of the commercial nuclear power technology for arms purposes could be eliminated. Hence it was--and is--probable that the conflict with the United States, parts of which were waged vehemently and in public, could recur in any other case--with all negative consequences to the alliance. For the Nonproliferation Act (NPA) adopted nearly unanimously by congress in the spring of 1978 contains practically every far-reaching rule and authorization beyond the arrangements and controls of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) with which the president is to prevent a recurrence of the Indian "fall of man." What is more important than a description of the numerous, partially extremely complicated provisions is a glance at the "philosophy" of the American nonproliferation policy. The nonproliferation treaty of 1968 still proceeded from the fundamental equality of all signatory states in the peaceful use of nuclear energy. In the London agreements of the supplier countries of nuclear technology (supplier's club), the delivery terms have also been diversified "functionally": There are items whose delivery trigger controls under the IAEA regime (for instance, reactor components), and materials classified as sensitive which are subject to a delivery restriction in principle because they make possible a direct access to the unlawful production of arms-grade material (for example, reprocessing installations).

In contrast, it is the decisive basic feature of the NPA that dependencies in uranium supply or in the technologies are exploited for enforcing the provisions of U.S. legislation (if necessary even under amendments of current agreements) against the other country so as to live up to the role of the United States as the world power insuring peace and the status quo in this field and to prevent an undesired enlargement of the club of the nuclear powers.

The enforcement rights and approval reservations for the further utilization of U.S.-supplied uranium--probably the best known example--are intended to insure that the United States can control the proliferation of breeders and reprocessing installations this way and prevent a "too premature" construction.

In a similar way this applies to the delivery of technology: Under the provisions of the London supplier's club the delivery of a heavy-water installation (to cite a topical example) only triggers IAEA control measures while under the NPA provisions this involves sensitive material because only very few countries (especially not the threshold countries "suspected" of proliferation such as Argentina) today command this technology. Hence this is considered to be a lever for enforcing effective nonproliferation measures.

Apart from the untenable suspicion that the U.S. nonproliferation legislation serves the elimination of the European nuclear industry as a competitor especially in the case of exports (U.S. industry, too, is subject to very strict limitations), the main argument of the European side against the NPA was that the refusal of technology and the exploitation of dependencies for the purpose of enforcing impositions is, especially under the proliferation aspect, an inexpedient strategy because it urges the "impaired" countries of the Third World on the uncontrolled course of a national solo (today Pakistan could be cited as an example of that). [paragraph continues]

Finally--so it was argued--the access to arms production via a commercial nuclear program is but one of several, a costly and time-consuming one to boot, especially if one keeps in mind the small quantities of arms grade material required for a nuclear bomb.

It was above all the Federal Government which did not advocate as an alternative concept to the U.S. policy a strategy which might be termed "commitment through cooperation," to use a catchphrase. Proceeding from the favorable experience gained with the Euratom treaty (an argument which has lost convincing force in view of the latest French demands for revision) the argument was that the nuclear export to the Third World, too, does not promote the proliferation of nuclear weapons if the cooperation with the industrial states is made so attractive to the nuclear "have-nots" by close cooperation and constant technology transfer that the incentive for a misuse of the supplied technology for arms production would hardly exist or the potential advantages of an A-weapon potential of their own would appear small compared with the negative consequences of a severance of cooperation. Besides, in a climate of cooperation it would be easier to enforce such controls contractually that would also be accepted by the industrial countries themselves.

Both concepts have their decisive weak points. It is doubtful indeed whether, considering the present state of dissemination of knowledge, a refusal of technology and political sanctions can prevent the construction of nuclear weapons--the further development in Pakistan will provide some enlightenment in this respect. On the other hand, the European countries from their own angle probably underrate the proliferation risk--a country which masters the complete fuel cycle also is very close to nuclear weapon production capability. Besides, they also were too optimistic, probably, with respect to the actual benefit of nuclear technology for most developing countries. But above all they probably failed to see that the incentive of producing a primitive nuclear weapon is drifting toward point zero under West European conditions but that this is different in the countries of the Third World and presumably will remain so for decades to come.

However the consequences were judged in detail, it was clear that the Federal Government could not endure and would not endure a continuous foreign policy conflict with the United States in this sensitive issue of nonproliferation policy. For one, the Federal Republic's dependence with regard to policy (on Germany) on the United States is too great, and recurring controversies surely would have had negative foreign policy effects in view of the high priority rating of this issue and in view of the great consensus of Congress and the administration.

On the other hand, the nonproliferation problem (and especially the controversial Brazil business) jeopardized the instable domestic consensus on the peaceful use of nuclear energy in the Federal Republic. Hence the Federal Government immediately took up President Carter's initiative of the spring of 1977 to convoke an international conference for the evaluation of alternative fuel cycles (international fuel cycle evaluation--INFCE) which then took up work in the fall of the same year with more than 50 participating states.

Even if, contrary to the original promises, the passage of the NPA initially burdened the work after the opening of the conference, and even if this formally involves a technical conference, the mutual learning processes nevertheless are obvious. Even if the final conclusive reports of the eight working groups will be all prepared only by the end of this year it may be said even now that neither the Americans nor the Europeans stick to their original concept without restrictions.

The former have acquired much more knowledge of and understanding for the European situation (especially the Euratom treaty) and probably also realized that a purely technical solution for avoiding proliferation hazards does not exist in any fuel cycle.
[paragraph continues]

The Europeans, in turn, have been made "sensitive" to the dangers of further proliferation from large-scale technical utilization of nuclear energy and probably no longer assess the fuel cycle under technical and economic aspects exclusively. Agreement rather prevails that only technical and institutional measures together can enhance the proliferation resistance of fuel cycles. Surely the inclusion of the developing countries in this connection has also avoided too much of a one-sided European-American polarization of interests, and surely the joint preparation of the uranium reserves situation will provide hints on how urgent the development of the breeder and thus of reprocessing (which remains necessary, however, for reasons of safety and waste disposal) really is or whether international agreements ("fuel bank") cannot prevent a distribution struggle like in the case of the oil.

This gives reason to hope that INFCE soon after conclusion will be transferred to international negotiations which will assess and implement the technical results politically as well. In this connection it will not be possible at the first try, surely, to set up a perfect world nuclear order. It would already be a remarkable success for international conflict management if the proliferation hazard could remain constant or even be reduced compared with the present state of affairs, despite the further proliferation and growing utilization of nuclear energy. Positive interim results of INFCE already could accelerate further international agreements in the field of nuclear technology--what is upcoming at the moment after the Harrisburg mishap is the harmonization and upgrading of the safety standards, for which the initial preparations have just begun.

Another result of these foreign policy implications for the Federal Government is a certain restraint in nuclear energy policy, especially in the sensitive question concerning the breeders and the reprocessing of spent fuel. The institutional, technical, and energy-political demands and necessary modifications resulting from the international agreements must be flexibly incorporated and the Federal Republic must avoid preventing itself from of acting in the foreign policy field by rashly creating "objective compulsions" in energy policy. Under the present internal political conditions and the realistic schedules this danger probably does not exist in the case of the breeder (decision on commercial utilization hardly before 1985) as well as in the case of the reprocessing installation (start of construction hardly before 1990).

Energy Technology and Exports

The international guidelines for the utilization of nuclear energy and especially the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons have determined the foreign-political energy discussion during the past 3 years, to be sure, and they will continue to play a great role. Yet they are increasingly joined by a discussion which generally raises the question of how the world at large is supposed to cover its growing energy requirement and how a worldwide distribution struggle for the scarce energy resources, which no doubt would jeopardize stability and peace, can be avoided. While in the Western world there is a sort of beginning of coordination mechanisms through the International Energy Agency, this is not true for either the Eastern European states or the developing countries. There is not even a conclusive foreign policy strategy in this issue, especially not vis-a-vis Eastern Europe.

Ever since the United States last year refused deep-drilling pipe for the opening of gas deposits in the Arctic part of Siberia because this allegedly involved strategic material, whereupon the French provided the substitutes, the old quarrel has flared up again on whether such a far-reaching strengthening of the Soviet economic potential might not multiply the military superiority of the Eastern bloc and lead to a political superiority.

Such a discussion overlooks the fact, however, that the energy supply of the Eastern European (CEMA) states may well become precarious on a medium-term basis. For unlike the Western industrial states, where a disconnection between economic growth and energy consumption is taking shape (that is to say, the flexibility coefficient of the growth rate of energy consumption in relation to the growth rate of the gross national product increasingly drops down below 1) the opposite development can be observed in the CEMA states. In these states the energy consumption still increases to an overproportionate degree with the increase in energy consumption per percentage point in economic growth between 1.2 and 1.5 percent. This is attributable to the continued extensive growth, the overproportionate development of heavy industry, as well as a lack of incentives for the installation of system with a better energy utilization.

If the Soviet Union and its allies wish to maintain the growth process--and in these countries the growth target seems to be even more dominant than in our country--it will be necessary to open additional energy sources (apart from the strongly stepped-up nuclear energy). If this is not done the USSR will revert to imports, especially of Middle East oil, and thus increase the risk of further price explosions as a consequence of unsatisfied demand. Probably their inclination to become active in the Middle East with a destabilizing effect and increase its zone of influence there, thus scoring political advantages in the competition struggle with the Western industrial states, will also increase.

Viewed from this angle it ought to be in the interest of the West to indeed cooperate closely with the Eastern European states in the field of mobilizing energy resources and above all to extend purposive assistance through a technology transfer. For no doubt the Western countries in this respect have a technical lead which--if properly applied politically--can put peace and detente policy on a broad basis. A "pan-European energy conference" as one of the CSCE followup conferences would offer itself as an institutional platform to this end. One may be skeptical toward such inevitably sluggish diplomatic mammoth conferences, yet to this day no other form has been found which would offer an all-round coordination and harmonization of interests and a multitude of starting points and "confidence-building measures."

Such a strategy of cooperation and mobilization of energy resources is probably also necessary vis-a-vis the developing countries, with emphasis being placed more heavily on the technology transfer. Above all it may be reckoned only to a very limited degree that part of the payment for the exports could be made in the form of energy deliveries. But then greatest problem probably lies in the fact that the energy technologies of the Western industrial states--unlike those of the Eastern European states--are seldom suited for the developing countries. If failures such as those of the experiment with the "adapted technologies" are to be avoided, then the industrial countries cannot deliver any finished solutions but must "fit them in" with their know-how in close cooperation with the developing countries, in keeping with the requirements of the latter and in accordance with the social and economic structures pursued.

The mechanisms and foreign policy coordinations which are necessary for accomplishing this, in part, are the subject of discussions at the UN Conference on "Science and Technology for Development" held in Vienna in August 1979. Surely the UNCTAD will also deal with these problems in the future because the high oil prices acutely threaten particularly the developing countries poor in raw materials and might cause all efforts to date to be futile. Above all the wasteful exploitation (for example, deforestation) of energy resources with ecological balancing missions stepped up as a result might lead to serious changes in climate and landscape.

The Conclusion

The analysis, which by virtue of the complexity of the topic inevitably had to be in rough outlines, has shown that in the past several years the interlocking of foreign and energy policies has increased and that the tendency continues upward. [paragraph continues]

Due to the manifold economic and political commitments of the Federal Republic there is, therefore, no room in energy policy for any rigid market economy ideology motivated by system-political considerations [ordnungspolitisch motiviert]--quite apart from the fact that the energy economy has never been guided purely by market economy principles because of supply safety, the technically necessary monopolies, the environmental burdens, and because of the character of its infrastructure.

One might even say, conversely, that a tense relationship exists between market economy and foreign policy balances. An uninhibited price increase on the energy markets--such as would be inevitable as a result of a policy putting its stakes solely on steering through the price--surely could best be digested by the Federal Republic. In view of the present situation in the United States, however, this would presumably lead to a considerable burden on the world economic and world currency systems (further dollar devaluation, increasing inflation rates, and so forth). The European partner countries in general, and probably France and Italy in particular, would be plunged into partially considerable difficulties which would boomerang on the Federal Republic. In any event it is a politically highly short-sighted strategy to believe that our neighbor countries would look on idly while the Federal Republic would try at their expense to insure its own supply with maximum prices in the distribution struggle for the oil.

Contrary to what some people try to make us believe the alternative is not to be found in an ineffective dirigisme but in a framework which fits itself into international interrelations and is committed to international cooperation. In this connection it is the role of foreign policy to introduce this energy strategy in the international relations and to achieve a "feed-back" of its external effect. As the foregoing discussion has shown, one must not, however, harbor any illusions about the narrow margin of foreign policy action which the Federal Republic has. On the other hand this leeway should be fully exploited because the domestic reserves for the management of the second energy crisis are small. Most Western industrial states have fully exploited their economic policy instruments, especially their credit margin. Wage restraint and postponement of social reforms are bought with the promises and expectations of economic growth which will soon be flourishing again.

It looks as though these hopes must once again be disappointed in most countries. In this situation additional foreign policy convulsions, especially a struggle for the distribution of oil which would shake the foundations of the Western alliance, might threaten the stability of the Western democracies. This is where the actual internal and external challenges of politics are to be found.

U.S. ALLEGED TO BE BEHIND SHIFT IN EL SALVADOR POLICY

DW181102 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 18 Aug 80 p 16

[Text] Obviously under U.S. pressure the Foreign Ministry quietly has initiated a change in its policy toward Central America.

By as late as May Bonn had not given the rightist military junta in El Salvador--which only remained in power thanks to massive U.S. help--any chance of survival and resisted Washington's wishes for German funds for the regime on several occasions. Now Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher does not see "any credible democratic alternative" to the military regime anymore.

In a confidential letter Genscher asked Development Aid Minister Rainer Offergeld on 30 June to resume the suspended German development assistance to El Salvador despite the continuing civil war. Otherwise the "moderate government junta" threatens to be victimized by the forces "which prefer a revolutionary development." This is why Bonn must examine ways of supporting the rural population with measures which "cannot be seriously attacked even by the leftist opposition." DM21.5 million is available.

SPD man Offergeld, who considers the dispatch of German experts into the crisis area unjustifiable, has so far left the Genscher epistle unanswered, and for good reason. His party and the Socialist International with its president, Willy Brandt, are supporting the opposition in El Salvador united in the Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR). For this reason SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski in early July had to hear bitter complaints in the U.S. State Department.

The cause of the tacit change of mind in Genscher's Foreign Ministry: The Americans have let Bonn know that they intend to keep the junta in El Salvador in power, if necessary with the help of an intervention corps, to avoid another Nicaragua. Being NATO allies the Germans then could hardly put their stakes on the leftist resistance groups.

The opposition in Bonn has long known that it is on the right track: From 15 to 19 July a delegation of the junta visited West Berlin in response to an invitation by the Konrad Adenauer Foundation. The visitors obtained information about German experience with terrorism.

PUBLIC POLLED ON FOREIGN POLICY, CAMPAIGN ISSUES

[Heinz Vielein article: "Emnid: 43 percent for Bonn's Neutrality Course"]

[Text] Bonn--Most FRG citizens--52 percent--continue to demand of Bonn close political ties with the United States. In the meantime, however, 43 percent recommend a neutrality policy between the Americans and the Soviets. Four percent of the FRG citizens wish an orientation toward the Russians. This is what pollers of the Emnid public opinion polling institute have found out.

In a report submitted to the government and the parties in Bonn and containing the results of the survey it is stated that it became clear on the occasion of the chancellor's trip to Moscow that considerable differences of opinion exist between the SPD/FDP coalition and the CDU/CSU opposition over the qeustion concerning the direction in which German policy should develop in the future: loyally and firmly with the alliance, loosely with the alliance, or even averted from the alliance?

In summing up the pollers state as a result of the survey: "The representative cross section of the FRG citizens is split into two nearly equal camps. Even though those advocating good relations with the Americans are still greater (52 percent of all persons interviewed), as many as 43 percent nevertheless advocate the view that one should stay neutral between the two world powers, Russia and America.

According to Emnid, there is already a slight majority among the SPD followers, with 49 percent which favors a policy of neutrality, whereas 47 percent of the SPD sympathizers want the Federal Government to stick to the close ties with the United States. Four percent desire particularly close contacts with the Russians. Among the CDU/CSU voters the pro-Westerners camp amounts to 61 percent. But in their case, too, already 34 out of 100 advocate a policy of neutrality between the great powers. Four percent desire a close relationship with the Soviets.

Particularly widespread is the desire for close contacts with the Soviet Union in the FDP, captained by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. The advocates of these contacts come to 11 percent, while 38 percent want the Federal Government to stay neutral between the Americans and Russians. But among the FDP followers, too, there is a majority desiring close ties with the United States: 51 out of 100 FDP followers. The interest in a policy of neutrality between the great powers is particularly strong in North Rhineland-Westphalia (51 percent). The respective percentage for Hamburg, Bremen, and Berlin is 47 each. But in Bavaria, too, 40 percent recommend a policy of neutrality, in Hesse (35 percent). [sentence as published]

The report submitted by Emnid on the results of the survey says in conclusion: "Thus among the voters of the parties represented in the Bonn parliament there are large groups which come out for a neutral attitude between the West and East blocs. The question only is which view constitutes the consistent attitude. What is meant is that with a view to the forthcoming Bundestag elections the policy which will be most successful is that which is supported by the majority on this very issue. At the moment this majority is still formed by those advocating an unequivocally pro-Western policy. It remains to be seen how long this will last."

Split Ballot Seen Possible

DW181005 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 18 Aug 80 pp 32, 33

[Report on public opinion poll carried out by the Emnid Institute on the election chances of the parties in October]

[Text] Every seventh FRG citizen is contemplating, or even is determined, to cast his first [for the individual] vote in the Bundestag elections on 5 October for a candidate of a party different from that for which he votes with his second [the party] ballot: Three percent will do so "in any event," 12 percent "perhaps."

Only 50 percent plus of the voters know the difference between the two votes which they have for casting on 5 October, and even only every fourth FRG citizen is aware that the second vote is more important than the first one. This was shown last week by a poll carried out by the Emnid Institute. On behalf of DER SPIEGEL the pollers of the Bielefeld institute interviewed 1,000 men and women representative of all FRG citizens of age 18 and above.

This is the first time that the results of a poll on this question are being made public. Granted, the public opinion polling institutes inquire every election year what the Germans know about their votes and how they propose to use them, but the strategists on both sides always believe that they can develop concepts for the election campaign promising success from such figures only when the opposite side and the public do not know them.

Meanwhile, 4 years ago Infratest (Munich on behalf of the government and Allensbach for the opposition) came up with nearly the same figures. According to Infratest 7 percent (6 percent according to Allenbach) of the voters were determined to split their votes shortly before the elections. The figures were realistic. On election day--the federal office of statistics determined--6 percent of the voters did in fact vote for different parties with their first and second votes.

The 1980 SPIEGEL survey goes further than the 1976 internal studies of the coalition and the opposition. It was additionally ascertained what the Germans expect for 5 October and of what they are afraid, for it will depend on their motives as to what degree the first and second votes will be applied differently.

Franz Josef Strauss as federal chancellor, a Bundestag without the FDP, an absolute majority of the SPD--these potential consequences of the October elections are what most recently vitalized the discussion on the first and second votes. The Emnid survey shows that most Germans desire one of these election results. Only 39 of 100 FRG citizens, in the case of the direct election of the chancellor would decide in favor of Strauss, whereas 60 out of 100 would elect Helmut Schmidt.

A mere 23 out of 100 Germans would desire the FDP's absence from parliament, and just 33 out of 100 voters want a lone rule by the SPD. Conversely, 52 out of 100 would regret it "if the SPD receives the absolute majority."

The replies to another Emnid question revealed the reason why many Germans think this way. Two answers were possible in explaining "what it would mean for Helmut Schmidt as chancellor" if his party had more seats in parliament than the other parties lumped together. The result: only 38 out of 100 interviewed said that for Schmidt this would be "good because he no longer would need to have any regard for the FDP as a coalition partner." In contrast, 60 out of 100 people interviewed declared that for Schmidt this would "not be so good because then the leftwingers in the SPD would give him more trouble than they do now."

As many as 40 out of 100 voters even advocate the view that the chancellor could govern more easily with the liberals as coalition partners than he could with only his own comrades.

In the election year 1980 there are three major groups of FRG citizens having contradictory wishes for election day.

The voters of the first group are for the CDU/CSU but against Strauss. Of 100 followers of the Union parties 14 would prefer to see Schmidt, the top man of the opposition, in the chancellor's office than the candidate of their Union parties.

The second group votes for the SPD, to be sure, but does not wish it too great a victory. Of 100 SPD followers 17 would regret seeing the party of their choice gaining the absolute majority. To another 13 percent it makes no difference whether the SPD can form the government all by itself or only in concert with the FDP.

The third group hopes for the survival of the FDP but votes for other parties. This is true for 47 out of 100 SDP followers and for 37 out of 100 CDU/CSU voters.

The electoral law offers all of them the chance to express their contradictory wishes on the ballot. If they grant one vote to the electoral district candidate of their party, they can cast the other to the FDP.

It turned out that several voters were considering such ideas when Emnid asked the decided and potential splitting voters about their motives: 37 percent of them said: "I want to avoid having Strauss as federal chancellor;" 26 percent said: "I will give my first vote to the election precinct candidate whom I like best, but I do not want to give my second vote to his party;" 17 percent said: "The FDP should enter the Bundestag in any case;" and 11 percent said: "I want to avoid an absolute SPD majority."

Several other figures also indicate that many voters will use the splitting of their votes as a weapon against Strauss. In direct elections 60 percent would vote for Schmidt and 39 percent for Strauss, of the splitting voters far more are for Schmidt (83 percent) and far less for Strauss (15 percent).

The results of the Emnid opinion poll some 8 weeks prior to the elections do not permit any definite conclusions whether the voters will act on 5 October as they have acted 8 or 4 years ago.

In 1972 the FDP achieved many so-called loan votes from the SPD voters. Of the federal citizens giving their second vote to the FDP, more than 50 percent (53 of 100) have voted for SPD candidates. In 1976, however, of 100 FDP second voice voters just 30 have decided in favor of an SPD candidate.

The voter's knowledge of their double crosses has remained as underdeveloped in 1980 as in the past election years in 1972 and 1976. The result of the SPIEGEL poll last week showed that 71 of 100 federal citizens know that one can vote for a "candidate as well as a party" but 22 percent believe that only the parties are involved, while 6 percent believe that only candidates will be elected.

Almost every second voter did not know the right answer when he was asked "what is the first vote for?" 59 percent picked the right answer (election of a candidate), 21 percent believed that the first vote is for electing a party; and 20 percent admitted their ignorance. Only every fourth person questioned (25 percent) knew that the second vote is "decisive for the distribution of parliamentary seats." This was found out when repeated an Infratest question from 1976. 14 percent gave the proper significance to the first vote, while 49 percent stated that "both votes are equally important and 11 percent did not know.

Even if the Germans knew their election rights better, more split votes are unlikely to take place this year. Most federal citizens believe that on 5 October no danger exists that ought to be avoided in such a way.

A respective 3/4 majority is convinced that Helmut Schmidt will remain federal chancellor (73 percent); that the FDP will enter the Bundestag again (78 percent); that the SPD will not achieve an absolute majority (73 percent).

When Emnid asked how those questioned would decide at present ("on next Sunday") in an election, the result was in accordance with these expectations. The SPD would again win 43 percent and the CDU/CSU 45. The SPD and the CDU/CSU are lacking such great percentages that they could only score an absolute majority in a landslide in the few weeks prior to the elections. So regardless how many votes will split their votes on 5 October, neither a chancellor named Strauss nor an absolute rule of the SPD is to be expected.

Even if the FDP complains a lot about its worries in fishing for second votes, those who know the figures know better.

Eight percent of the federal citizens would vote at the present for the FDP. Even if every third voter should change his mind, enough votes would remain for entering parliament again.

LE MONDE: CARTER HAS NOT FULFILLED HOPES AROUSED IN 1976

LD151023 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Aug 80 p 3

[Dominique Dhombres article: "The Metamorphosis"]

Mr Carter cannot now, as he did in 1976, set out to war against Washington on behalf of the provinces. He is obliged to present his record. This record is disappointing in many respects. Inflation which was running at 6 percent when he entered the White House has reached 12 percent. Unemployment, which was 8 percent, a rate considered to be very high and on which Mr Carter had repeatedly attacked the Ford administration, is still at around that level and could even reach 9 percent next year.

Mr Carter promised to gradually obtain a balanced budget. That ambitious plan was shelved with the departure of Bert Lance, the man who was to be its main artisan and who was forced to resign in September 1977 as a result of his dubious banking activities. The 1980 budget deficit could reach $60 billion owing to the lack of fiscal income sparked off by the recession. Automobile manufacturers have produced 30 percent fewer vehicles since the beginning of the year than in the corresponding period of 1979, and the big Detroit firms announced unprecedented losses in July.

In the social sphere, the federal social security system (which represents a minimum guarantee for old people) could be bankrupt by 1981. As for the national health insurance plan, which was included in the 1976 Democratic platform and which Senator Kennedy still advocates, it was discreetly abandoned in March 1979.

In the external sphere, the human rights campaign has been temporarily shelved. The only major success to which Mr Carter can lay claim is the signing of the peace treaty between Israel and Egypt which explains the energy with which the President pressed for the resumption of the Palestinian autonomy negotiations in order to give the impression, at least until 4 November, that the Camp David spirit is not dead.

Far From Plains

Even the "Plains' mystique", from the name of the little town from which Mr Carter comes, has suffered in recent months, notably because of the "Libyan connection" affair. Mr Carter's country origins, which had played such an important role in forming his "image" as a candidate in 1976, are now forgotten. Descriptions of his spartan childhood, agricultural work, games with black friends of the same age (but who did not go to the same school or church as him), then his studies at the Annapolis Naval Academy and his meeting with Admiral Rickover, "father" of U.S. nuclear submarines, filled the newspapers 4 years ago. All that is left today is an outgoing President, worn out by power without really having exercised it, who is having difficulty asserting himself in his own party and who has not fulfilled the hopes he had aroused.

MSGR CAPUCCI COMMENTS ON VISIT TO TEHRAN

[Text] Rome, Aug 18 (AFP)--Msgr Hilarion Capucci, apostolic delegate of the Melchites in Europe, arrived here today from Tehran to try to solve the question of Iranian students detained here for the past 10 days. Twenty two students were arrested following a demonstration in St. Peter's Square and eight have been provisionally released. Msgr Capucci was to meet the students in prison and return to Tehran in 3 or 4 days.

The prelate had been asked earlier by Pope John Paul II to intervene on behalf of clergy and Catholic schools in Iran. On arrival here today he said that release of the detained Iranians could facilitate solving the problem of clergy threatened with expulsion from Iran. He was optimistic about the outcome of this mission and said that charges against priests at the Andisheh Catholic School of "spying for Israel" had been characterized as "without any foundations" by the examining magistrate.

He had not discussed the U.S. hostages with Iranian authorities but he did not exclude possible involvement with this issue once he had finished his current assignments, Msgr Capucci added.

Meetings With Khomeyni, Bani-Sadr

AU181935 Rome ANSA in English 1900 GMT 18 Aug 80

[Text] Rome, 18 Aug (ANSA)--Msgr. Hilarion Capucci, who early this month had high-level talks in Tehran in a bid to unblock the situation of Catholic schools in Iran, returned to Rome today. The prelate will remain in Rome for three or four days on a mission that has nothing to do with the Catholic schools in Iran. He let it be understood that his mission here centers on the arrest in Italy of Iranian students who demonstrated in front of Saint Peter's Basilica.

Questioned by newsmen on his trip to Tehran, where he will return in a few days, Capucci said that the problem of the Catholic schools in Iran had still not been solved although great progress had been made. He said he was optimistic. While in Tehran, Capucci was received by the Ayatollah Khomeyni and President Bani-Sadr. He delivered a message from John Paul II to both men.

The prelate said he was optimistic on the outcome of his mission since all the Iranian leaders he talked to, including Khomeyni, were in favor of adhering to the principles embodied in the new constitution, which among other things, urges respect for religious and cultural minorities. This clause should safeguard the right of Catholics to have their own schools and would restore the situation to what it was prior to a revolutionary council decision in February to nationalize all schools. A special committee has been formed in Tehran to implement these constitutional principles, Capucci said.

The prelate said that the expulsion of priests and members of religious orders was not an Iranian problem. The order to leave the country can be given only by one person, he continued. This person has recognized the right to substitute each priest or member of a religious order so as to keep the preexisting number the same. This same person said he was amazed at the defamatory campaign waged against the priests, Capucci went on. He stressed to newsmen that a Tehran judge had found the accusations against the priests and members of religious orders groundless.

Capucci said that when he met with Bani-Sadr, the president said he believed the charges were part of a plot to compromise relations between Iran and the Vatican. The aim of this plot was reportedly to seek to isolate Iran even more and to deform the true image of Islam.

Christians and Muslims have always lived as members of a single family, Bani-Sadr reportedly said. Attempts to expell certain priests from Iran aimed at breaking up this reality forged of charity, friendship, fraternity and cooperation, the Iranian president was quoted as saying. There are those who think that persons working for "SAVAK", the former shah's secret police, are behind the defamation campaign as part of a wider scheme to foment disorders in Iran.

Capucci said that he was authorized to say no more but that in two or three days at the most, he felt sure that everything would be made public.

PARTY LEADERS COMMENT ON POLISH STRIKE

LD181730 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0600 GMT 18 Aug 80

[Excerpt] The developments in large workers' centers in Poland are followed with particular attention by all Italian political forces which, although with different emphases, express solidarity with the militant workers.

Flaminio Piccoli, secretary of the Christian Democratic Party, said that the Polish events have again brought forth the drama of real socialism which operates in the name of the working classes and expresses continuous affirmations of justice and then manifests a reactionary face which is incapable of solving the fundamental problems of the people. The communist parties which operate in democratic countries, the Christian Democratic secretary concluded, must recognize that we are not facing a secondary but a fundamental error born from the total absence of freedom.

According to Communist Gian Carlo Pajetta, the world crisis is also affecting a socialist country, increasing acute tension and highlighting the serious difficulties of intervention and participation by those very workers who say that they want to live and live better in socialism. We hope that a solution is rapidly found. We note that the strikes have not caused and allowed explosions which in the past were also tragic. It is a fact that the Polish Government and party have not condemned the strikers as enemies and have not denied the objective reasons for their agitation.

Silvano Signori, deputy chairman of the Socialist senators, states that the unprecedented struggle undertaken by the workers of Gdansk and numerous other Polish towns to achieve better living and working conditions and the right to set up free and independent trade unions merits the most open solidarity of all European workers and their trade unions. But on this occasion also, the Socialist exponent continues, the superior reason of state seems to prevail over just causes and authentic proletarian internationalism. Why? When will our unitarian trade union confederation, Signori asks, decide to express support for the striking Polish workers? When it does so, it will be too late, but it will be better too late than never.

ROME 'ANTITERRORISM' RAID NETS 'RIGHTWING SYMPATHIZER'

AU161946 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 16 Aug 80

[Text] Rome, 16 Aug (ANSA)--A rightwing sympathizer, 44-year-old Remigio Falai, was arrested today at Castel Fiorentino (Florence) for the illegal possession of arms. As part of anti-terrorism measures, police raided Falai's home, finding guns, rifles, hand grenades and bullets in his attic and cellar.

PARTIES COMMENT ON SA CARNEIRO STATEMENT ON CHARGES

[Text] In support of the cabinet statement read by Prime Minister Sa Carneiro last night, the political committee of the Social Democratic Party has issued a communique reaffirming its greatest confidence and admiration for what it describes as the political and human integrity of Francisco Sa Carneiro. In the Social Democrats' view, the aims of the libelous campaign led by the Communist Party are obvious. The communique further states that after the unsuccessful attempts to overthrow the government by means of street demonstrations or parliamentary obstruction, the Communists are now again turning to putschist maneuvers, as they did in 1975, by resorting to worn-out Leninist tactics in an attempt to tarnish the figure of the prime minister.

The Communists, for their part, have also issued a communique in which they state that Prime Minister Sa Carneiro did not answer a single one of the many concrete and documented charges leveled against him. The Communists further say that the statement read by Sa Carneiro on behalf of the Council of Ministers was nothing but a pretext for yet another reinforced dose of demagogy about the government's performance and an attempt to conceal the reactionary and antiworker nature of a disastrous and subversive policy which Portuguese reject and vigorously condemn.

Speaking on behalf of the Socialist Party, Almeida Santos described the prime minister's statement as disappointing. In the Socialists' view, Sa Carneiro had been charged, truthfully or untruthfully, with a number of concrete acts allegedly substantiated by written evidence, and what one expected from him was a version of the said acts and a statement on the documents in question. Instead, Almeida Santos said, Sa Carneiro delivered a mere [words indistinct].

Commenting on Sa Carneiro's statement last night, another political organization, the Popular Unity Front, said that the prime minister failed to conceal the signs of awkwardness and even panic prevailing within the ranks of the Democratic Alliance.

Now one can only wait for the decision to be made by the standing committee of the Assembly of the Republic, a meeting of which has been scheduled by the speaker of the house for 25 August in order to decide on whether or not a parliamentary inquiry requested by the Socialists and Communists is to be started into the financial dealings of the prime minister.

CSCE ENVOY TO MOSCOW TO DISCUSS AFGHANISTAN

[Sebastian Garcia report: "Javier Ruperez To Negotiate Madrid Conference Agenda in Moscow"]

[Excerpt] Javier Ruperez, Union of the Democratic Center deputy and secretary for external relations and recently appointed head of the Spanish delegation to the CSCE conference which will begin in Madrid this fall, will travel to the capital of the USSR (Moscow) on 24 August. The aim of the visit is to discuss with the Soviet authorities the holding of the CSCE conference and in particular the possible inclusion of the issue of Afghanistan in its agenda.

Deputy Ruperez, who, as head of the Spanish delegation at the conference, holds extensive responsibilities for Spain's policy on the CSCE conference, will seek to ensure the meeting's success, or at least that the main participants reach Madrid with a minimum degree of agreement on the issues to be discussed.

This intention is in danger, because, according to informed sources, it is highly likely that the Soviet Union will persist with its stance against including the issue of Afghanistan in the Madrid agenda during the talks with Ruperez in Moscow. This flat refusal could represent a grave danger to the Madrid conference, in view of the probable Western pressure--especially from the United States--for the issue to be discussed.

DEFENSE MINISTER OPPOSES PROPOSED AMNESTY FOR OFFICERS

LD152334 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 15 Aug 80

[Text] In statements to a Madrid daily Defense Minister Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun has expressed his disagreement with the proposed law submitted in parliament to grant amnesty to the officers of the Democratic Military Union [UMD]. The minister, who is in Almeria on holiday and who is preparing a report in which the government's viewpoint on the subject is set forth, hopes that certain amendments to the proposed law are presented. The UMD was a small clandestine organization of army officers which was broken up in 1976. Seven of its members were tried and sentenced by a military court and expelled from the army. The amnesty proposal seeks to reinstate these officers although, if the proposal goes through, they will not be able to hold posts in command of troops.

At another point in the interview the defense minister categorically states that there have been no confrontations at all in the armed forces. In spite of what some people want, the minister adds, the conduct of the armed forces has been exemplary. However, Rodriguez Sahagun says, their members have their own feelings and I try to keep informed about them, to get to know them and to bear them in mind when decisions are made.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE ON NUCLEAR ARMS PROLIFERATION

LD181129 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 14 Aug 80 p 8

[Editorial: "Nuclear Arms and Nuclear War"]

[Text] As the debate continues on the costliness of and the alleged risk in the use of civilian nuclear energy, the existence and the dangers of the enormous nuclear arms arsenal are still a central concern in world politics. Two occurrences this week have led to increased attention to the two most frequently discussed dangers associated with nuclear arms: a war between the superpowers and the spreading of nuclear arms to more, possibly "irresponsible" countries.

Nuclear arms have an important deterrent effect. This is the only positive feature of nuclear arms and the nuclear balance between the two superpowers, which is sometimes described as "the balance of terror." Awareness of the danger that if a war broke out between them the losses in human lives and the material devastation could be inconceivably great has a deterrent effect.

In order to preserve the deterrent effect the U.S. Government this month adopted new guidelines for nuclear arms strategy, which attach increased importance to the capability to neutralize military targets in the Soviet Union rather than to the possible annihilation of cities and other predominantly civilian targets. The background to this is the apparent paradox that a credible nuclear strike capability is a necessary precondition for the preservation of the balance of terror.

However, the Soviet Union has interpreted this American strategy, which has developed over a number of years and has been continually debated in public, as a new outbreak of American "war hysteria."

Despite the violent Soviet reaction the probability of a nuclear war between the superpowers is still extremely small. A greater danger threatens from a conflict between countries that today do not have, but are possibly on the way to producing their own nuclear arms.

In addition to the present nuclear powers at least a score of other countries are known to have the technical capability of making nuclear weapons, and several of these countries are also thought to have a motive for doing so. It is the chance of limiting or at least hindering the growth in the number of states with nuclear capability that is at present being discussed in Geneva by the 114 countries which signed the nuclear arms nonproliferation treaty 12 years ago.

An unusual feature of this conference and its predecessor is that the two superpowers here stand side by side. They are both opposed to the spread of nuclear arms and are both under pressure to decrease their own nuclear arsenals.

International security, however, depends on many more factors than the size of nuclear arsenals alone. There are political and economic causes for the many tensions in the world, which must be limited and, if possible, removed in order to lessen the risk of the spread of nuclear arms and the danger of nuclear war.

If one or more parties encourage such tensions or consider them an unavoidable consequence of the international "class struggle," it goes without saying that the chances of achieving this are minimal. The combined U.S. and Soviet opposition to the spread of nuclear arms does not go far enough for them to be able jointly to neutralize these tensions. This can be seen in several places in the world, including the Middle East.

STUDY VIEWS SOCIOECONOMIC IMPLICATIONS OF DISARMAMENT

LD151511 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 13 Aug 80 p 6

[Paal Nordenborg report: "Norway Can Afford To Disarm"]

[Text] What would happen to the Norwegian economy and to employment in Norway if military expenditure were used instead in aid to developing countries? Not much, say the four researchers Olav Bjerkholt, Aadne Cappelen, Nils Petter Gleditsch and Knut Moum.

They have recently completed a piece of research at the request of the United Nations at the Norwegian Institute for Peace Research. They present results that show that disarmament and the use of the resources thus freed would not mean any insurmountable economic problems for Norway. But they stress that planning for such new uses could be improved in a number of fields.

Past studies, including one by Olav Bjerkholt, have shown that disarmament would not cause any great economic problems, if Norway and other Western nations were free to choose economic (?countermeasures with regard to) developing nations.

Even if the international situation made swift disarmament possible, it would, however, lead to unacceptable problems of readjustment in the short term if all military expenditure were transferred to a Third-World aid budget with the same structure as today's budget, the authors state. They have called their report "Disarmament and Development: A Study of Conversion in Norway." Some 83 percent of Norwegain foreign aid comprises the simple transfer of finances. And a quadrupling of this form of aid would lead to the loss of 60,000 jobs in Norway.

It is this problem that the report looks at. Among the possible solutions sketched out are that the readjustment should be gradual, that foreign aid should be rearranged so that a large proportion is given in the form of goods--something which in its turn would create jobs in Norway--and that only part of the new money available should be used for foreign aid, while the rest is invested in social measures on the domestic front to create new jobs.

As an example the report gives a large number of estimates of how many jobs could be created by using some of the freed resources to increase the numbers of domestic aids. By the use of such countermeasures the readjustment problems could be reduced to an acceptable level in Norway. There would, however, continue to be local problems for individual industries and individual areas of the country. The report recommends new investigations to look further into these problems. It also points out that it is necessary to improve the public planning apparatus with an eye to disarmament.

The project is part of a larger research program on the relationship between disarmament and development that was initiated by the UN first special session on disarmament in 1978 at the suggestion of the Scandinavian countries. The project on the economic consequences of disarmament in Norway is financed by the Committee for Arms Control and Disarmament.

BERTRAM OF ISS VIEWS U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY

DW180851 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0517 GMT 15 Aug 80

[Reporter Hauschild interview with Dr Christoph Bertram, head of the London Institute of Strategic Studies [ISS]--place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] First of all, what effect will the new nuclear strategy have on the arms policy of the United States? The new strategy seems to mean that one needs newer and more accurate arms systems and that arms expenditures must be increased accordingly?

[Answer] First, it will probably not have an effect on the arms programs of the United States. What has been termed the new doctrine was accepted long ago in the American discussion. The new arms systems which are now being acquired are in line with these projects. This means that the result will not entail considerable changes in the present U.S. arms programs.

Second, the Americans tend to announce even slight changes of their strategy as being a new strategy, a new doctrine. This is not a new doctrine in this sense. No radical change has taken place; if at all, there has been a change of nuances with regard to the effect nuclear arms ought to have in the future from the U.S. point of view.

Third, this remains a strategy of deterrence and not a strategy of waging war. In other words, the United States is facing the problem of how to deter under the changed conditions of the present and future an attack of the Soviet Union against the United States or its allies.

A basically different problem, which this so-called strategy cannot and does not want to refer to, is the following: What will happen if this deterrence does not work?

My fourth point is the following: We here in the institute are skeptical whether this will be the last American nuclear doctrine in the years to come. To us it seems to be slated for changes simply because it presupposes the existence of a degree of communication systems. It presupposes that enlightenment, communications, the passing on of orders and coordination will be safeguarded against war, against nuclear wars, safeguarded in such a way that they will really work.

[Question] This new strategy, or the strategy that is not so new, as you call it, makes nuclear war more likely--as many observers believe in Europe. There exists a doctrine saying that limited nuclear war can lead to the destruction of the opponents' nuclear bases with an offensive strike--that is a nuclear first strike.

[Answer] Yes, this doctrine exists. Considerations exist in the Soviet Union as well as in the United States of whether the much higher accuracy of intercontinental nuclear delivery systems could be used to destroy the delivery systems, missiles and planes of the other side before they have been used. This tendency is based on technology, so to speak. But I want to stress the following: Viewing theoretical possibilities of modern arms systems is one thing; it is a completely different matter, however, to take conditions which would exist in a nuclear war into consideration.

The clearest limit still exists between conventional arms and nonconventional nuclear arms. Once this limit has been passed, even with a very limited use of nuclear arms, nobody knows and nobody can predict with certainty whether it will lead to escalation and extension. It seems therefore wrong to us, despite the Washington interpretation of this new doctrine or the so-called new doctrine, to assume that in future we will have to deal with numerous limited nuclear wars. We doubt very much that nuclear wars can be limited in the future.

[Question] What do you think, how will the Soviet Union react to this strategy?

[Answer] The Soviet Union has already reacted through numerous press statements. It is certainly concerned by this development, and quite rightly so. The United States with this change of strategic ideas has tried to adapt to what it considers the Soviet strategy. The Soviet Union, as well, has very accurate intercontinental missiles which can destroy American missile silos. The Soviet Union interprets the new doctrine as indicating that the United States was seeking the potential to make a first nuclear strike, which is certainly not a positive interpretation in the sense of future stability and positive arms control.

[Question] Must one now assume that the Soviets could be more easily inclined due to this system to be the first to launch a destructive strike?

[Answer] Yes, but one thing must always be stressed in these matters, namely the following: A difference exists between deterrence and the waging of war. These doctrines are suitable--and I also believe that the change of the strategic doctrine of the United States is suitable--to make deterrence more credible under the changed conditions. But nobody knows what will happen once deterrence has failed. Both sides are willing to deter and to cope with considerable costs in this respect. But their doctrines, which have been developed for deterrence, will not be suitable for a situation that will come about once deterrence has collapsed.

[Question] Is there a connection between this American nuclear strategy and the simultaneous deployment of nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe, as wished by the Americans?

[Answer] No, there is not a direct connection between these two decisions. You know that NATO decided in last December to deploy a number of accurate nuclear delivery systems in Western Europe which are supposed to be less vulnerable to an attack from the East. This has happened primarily because NATO must assume as before that because of its weak conventional situation it must use nuclear arms, and that it is naturally important that these nuclear arms will then be available and that they will not have already been destroyed.

DEMIREL COMMENTS ON MARTIAL LAW, EARLY ELECTIONS

[Excerpts] In a statement after today's 3-hour Council of Ministers meeting, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that the struggle against anarchy and divisiveness was one of the biggest problems facing the Turkish Republic. Recalling that martial law was declared on 26 December 1978 because the situation described in Article 124 of the Turkish Constitution had been created in the country, Demirel added that the National Security Council recommended to the government that martial law be extended by another 2 months, that the government had assessed this recommendation and that it would refer it to the Grand National Assembly.

Demirel said: There are traitors in Turkey. There are those bothering the nation. They are shedding blood and mercilessly killing the innocent, among them women and children. This is a monstrous situation. They are engaged in plunder, arson and destruction. However, the state is waging an uncompromising and determined struggle against these treacherous gangs and bandits, and the state, sooner or later, will be victorious. Any other alternative is inconceivable.

In reply to a journalist who recalled the statement made by RPP leader Ecevit to the effect that early elections will not be held by the current government, Demirel said: Everyone is aware that lately Ecevit has been very inconsistent. I do not attach any importance or take his statements seriously. I do not find them serious. He is obsessed with this antigovernment attitude. We propose early elections; he refuses. We propose that the president be elected by the nation; he refuses. We propose the ratification of bills aimed at preventing anarchy; he refuses. Then what will happen? Turkey can not be governed on the whims of individuals.

In reply to a question on a date for early elections, Demirel said elections could be held between 15 October and 15 December. He added: A date for early elections is not something the party can decide. Elections are held the first Sunday after the 60-day period following the decision on early elections. This is stipulated by law. We can not change this through motions.

In reply to a question on measures taken against violent incidents, Demirel said: The betterment of mankind is the major principle of development. The martial law commanders, other officers and soldiers within the martial law command have struggled courageously and are continuing to do so. I will not let anyone speak against them. That is not an issue for discussion. More authority is needed. We need intelligence, police and various other services. The police force needs equipment--from radios to bulletproof vests. We will soon supply these needs and continue our struggle.

Commenting on a statement made by NSP leader Erbakan that various ministers have to be replaced in the event a decision to hold early elections, Demirel said that a conditional motion on early elections was out of the question. In reply to Erbakan's view that a decision on the issue should be made within a week, Demirel said: The NSP is willing to hold early elections on 25 October. However it is not willing to hold elections 10 days later. Is that it? If this is the case then the NSP is insincere. If the NSP agrees to hold early elections what difference does it make whether or not they are held a week later? Is this precondition directed at us? A decision on the issue does not depend on us. Had it depended on us we would have decided on it long ago.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY APPROVES MARTIAL LAW EXTENSION

[Text] The Senate and National Assembly joint session today approved the prime minister's note on the extension of martial law, which is currently in force in 20 provinces, for another 2 months.

Interior Minister Orhan Eren was the first speaker at the session, which began at 1500 under the chairmanship of Deputy President Ismail Hakkir Yildirim. Eren explained the reason for the extension. Noting that the struggle against anarchy and terrorism is being waged effectively and speedy results are being obtained, Eren said: However, it is also necessary to strengthen democratic authority in order to conduct this struggle with the desired speed and effectiveness. Stating that many of the sources of terrorism have received heavy blows, Eren said that terrorist organizations are systematically continuing their provocations with new forms of actions despite the struggle being waged. Pointing out that it is essential to implement broad measures effectively and simultaneously in a bid to disband terrorist organizations, Eren said: Naturally, the most important factor is to destroy the terrorists' moral strength.

The interior minister stated that, during the recent 2-month martial law period, 264 persons were killed in anarchic incidents, 2,544 suspects were detained and 609 of those were arrested. Eren added that the bill which stipulates measures against anarchy and terrorism should be enacted as soon as possible.

Expressing the views of the RPP, Senator from Konya Mukbil Abay said that the government is backing one side of the enemies of the state and democracy, who caused so much bloodshed in the country. Explaining that during its term of office, the RPP attacked sources of terrorism without discriminating between left or right, Abay said that the government is trying to attract attention to other issues to conceal its failure. Pointing out that his party considers martial law to be a gurantee of the state and democracy, Abay said that, therefore, the RPP will vote in favor of the extension of martial law.

Speaking on behalf of the JP, Senator from Istanbul Sadik Batum said that there are efforts to present the anarchy in Turkey as a government problem. However, anarchy is aimed at destroying the state. Batum noted that this is why anarchy and terrorism should be handled as a state problem and not an administrative problem. Pointing out that all political parties should arrive at a consensus on the diagnosis of the causes and goals of anarchy, Batum said that certain legal vacuums should be filled in a bid to prevent these incidents. He added that the JP will vote in favor of the extension of martial law.

Expressing the views of the NSP, Deputy from Malatya Recai Kutan claimed that the government does not have a plan to combat anarchy. Noting that the martial law [personnel] have adequate authority and that state security courts and the state of emergency law is not needed when martial law is in force, Kutan said: The enforcement of martial law cannot be successful in the hands of this government because the diagnosis and the mentality are erroneous. The state should be serious and have faith. Kutan said that the NSP members will vote freely because his party does not believe that martial law will be successful with the mentality of this government.

In his speech, NAP Deputy from Nigde Sadi Somuncuoglu said that the state has not been able to arrive at a lucid and conscious diagnosis of the foreign communist and secessionist treason. Somuncuoglu explained that this is why the real threat, the artificial threats and Turkey's definite problems are being confused. Pointing out that this confusion is serving the interests of Turkey's enemies and that the anarchy monster is thus becoming stronger, Somuncuoglu said: There has been an ideological attack against Turkey. This attack, which has continued for over 12 years, is being conducted with weapons and is directed against the state everywhere. Somuncuoglu demanded that the government take the necessary effective measures against anarchy.

Replying to criticism, Eren said that the terrorists are being dealt with indiscriminately. He noted that the bills on combatting anarchy and terrorism should be enacted as soon as possible to obtain tangible results. Pointing out that the perpetrators of anarchy and terrorism are known, Eren said that, however, it takes time to apprehend and punish them. Noting that one of the aims of terrorism is to provoke more reaction in political parties, Eren stated that the mutual accusations of the parties on this subject are assisting the terrorists. He added that the state security forces are waging a determined struggle against terrorism in regions outside the martial law areas as well.

The Prime Ministry note on the extension of martial law for another 2 months was then approved by a show of hands.

JP SUBMITS EARLY ELECTION PROPOSAL TO NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

TA181415 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1300 GMT 18 Aug 80

[Text] During its meeting today the JP National Assembly group approved a proposal submitted by party leader Suleyman Demirel and decided in favor of early elections. Following this decision, the early elections proposal prepared by Deputy from Isparta Demirel and his colleagues was submitted to the National Assembly chairmanship.

The proposal, which was submitted to National Assembly President Cahit Karakas at 1430 by JP National Assembly deputy group leaders Oguz Aygun and Giyasettin Karaca, noted that it is necessary to resort to the judgment of the nation in a bid to save Turkey from its current situation. Pointing out that it is not possible to stop anarchy and terrorism, enact social legislation and save the citizens from their present difficulties on the basis of the current composition of the parliament, the proposal stated: the JP National Assembly group views resorting to the free will of our great nation as the only way to secure political and economic stability as well as to combat anarchy and terrorism.

Demirel's Comments

TA181530 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 18 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Justice Party leader Suleyman Demirel held a news conference at the parliament today and commented on the issue of early elections.

[Begin recording] The only way to save the country from crisis is to hold early elections. Turkey should go to the polls in the fall of 1980, that is to say on the days when elections can be held. This is in the interest of the country. We exist for Turkey; if everyone can say this, then let us save Turkey from its difficulties. What shall we do? Let everyone face the nation instead of pushing each other around and preparing various alliances and intrigues in Ankara.

Ankara has a headache and Ankara's headache is causing the nation to suffer from a headache. The way to cure the nation's headache is to derive strength from the people once again.

Our parliament is trying to enact laws in August. In a country where there is bloodshed, the main opposition is blocking the bills which will grant democratic authority to the state. We have a parliament in which the main opposition is blocking our proposals to restore order to the country and to enact a state of emergency bill and establish state security courts, which are stipulated by the constitution.

We have a parliament that has been trying to elect a president for months and again the main opposition party has not attended a parliamentary session for almost 3 months. No one, including the main opposition party, has the right to destroy the parliament through arguments. It is necessary to save the institution from destruction, for this institution constitutes the heart of Turkish democracy and no one has the right to jeer this institution. This would be tantamount to irresponsibility and thoughtlessness.

Therefore, if it has been made clear that a parliament with the current composition is unable to elect a president and make certain decisions that are extremely necessary, then it is useless to insist on making it function. What do you want to do with parliament? It is meaningless to push it around. This is why the shortest way is to hold early elections. [end recording]

Ecevit's Criticism

[RPP leader Bulent Ecevit's statement at news conference in Ankara on 18 August--recorded]

[Text] Mr Demirel and the JP spokesmen are leveling the harshest insults at us for opposing early elections. However, they think that the nation has forgotten how they rejected early elections in 1974 and in 1975. Both the fact that we favored early elections in 1974 and in 1975 and the fact that we are opposed to them now are very consistent. In 1974 and 1975, we wanted to hold early elections in a bid to save Turkey from a nazi plot or from a plot that would pave the way to fascism. Today, too, we are opposed to early elections in order to save Turkey from a nazi or fascist scheme.

In his news conference yesterday, the prime minister claimed that our contention about lack of election security cannot be taken seriously. However, in the same press statement the prime minister expressed his grief over the killing of a RPP administrator and over the fact that one more has been added to the list of our friends who have lost their lives.

Which of the prime minister's two attitudes should we take seriously? Should we take seriously his opposition to the contention about lack of election security or the grief he expressed in the face of murders--aimed at RPP administrators--that prove that election security does not exist?

Naturally, elections will be held in Turkey when the time comes. However, first this government will go, and an atmosphere of election security will--even to some extent--be insured. Only after that will elections be held. Those who consider it possible to hold early elections in any other way cannot escape the consequences and responsibility for this to history and our nation.

GDR'S HONECKER TO VISIT AUSTRIA IN NOVEMBER

AU191642 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1600 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] The GDR state and party chief Honecker will pay an official visit to Vienna in early November. It will be Honecker's first official trip to a West European country.

USSR FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER TO VISIT IN SEPTEMBER

AU140926 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 14 Aug 80 p 7

[Text] Soviet Foreign Trade Minister Nikolay Patolichev will pay an official visit to Vienna from 7-9 September. Within the framework of this visit, which is also connected with the conclusion of the 25th anniversary of the first trade and shipping agreement with the Soviet Union, a "long-term program" for economic cooperation until 1990 is to be signed. The development of trade with the Soviet Union that is most unfavorable from Austria's viewpoint has given rise to the question among experts whether this visit, beyond being merely an affair of protocol, will open new possibilities for exports to the USSR.

Austrian exports to the USSR declined in the first half of this year by 10.2 percent to barely 2.5 billion schillings, while imports from the USSR increased 47 percent to nearly 5.9 billion schillings. Thus the deficit in Austria's trade with the USSR rose in the first half of this year alone by over 2.1 billion schillings to 3.4 billion schillings. In view of the drastic increase in energy prices, Austrian export industries are particularly worried over the simultaneous downward trend of exports to the USSR that is making itself especially strongly felt in these circumstances. Should Austrian exports in the full year of 1980 remain below the 1979 level, this would be the first time since 1955 for annual export figures to decline.

The very comprehensive "long-term program" which is to be signed at the end of the Patolichev visit, contains detailed lists of potential cooperation projects as well as lists of goods on which both sides have agreed regarding endeavors to intensify economic relations. However, despite its formal character the paper is actually no more than a declaration of intent, which does not contain any concrete commitments. Austrian export industry quarters believe, however, that the "long-term program" could acquire some importance by providing skeleton conditions that are by and large in compliance with Soviet foreign trade policy. Thus concrete export and cooperation projects could undoubtedly benefit to some extent by it, although they will ultimately be subjected to individual decision criteria.

OFFICIALS, PRESS REACT TO DEVELOPMENTS IN POLAND

Strauss Comment

LD191438 Hamburg DPA in German 1353 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 19 Aug (DPA)--Great attention is still being paid to the strikes in Poland in both the East and the West. Franz Josef Strauss, the CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor and Bavarian minister-president, in an interview in the FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU, has called upon the Federal Government to warn Warsaw and Moscow against the use of force. He said that Bonn should make the granting of the intended financial assistance to Poland dependent on the demands of the striking workers being met. Strauss' remarks were echoed by other CDU/CSU politicians. CDU Bundestag Deputy Werner Marx accused Bonn of underestimating the strong currents of history in East Europe and of overstimating the political leadership. A spokesman for the SPD Executive said in Bonn that it is in the interests of everyone to exercise restraint with regard to exacerbated developments in Poland.

Trade Union Chairman Support

LD191824 Hamburg DPA in German 1458 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] Hamburg, 19 Aug (DPA)--The chairman of the IG Metall Industrial Trade Union, Eugen Loderer, has appealed to the Polish state and party leadership to be open to negotiations on the workers' wishes. In an interview in BILD ZEITUNG, (Wednesday's edition), Loderer said, according to the newspaper: "The Polish workers can naturally count on our solidarity and support." Spectacular or short-sighted actions at a political level are assuredly out of place, said the IG Metall chief. "Our interests must be directed toward a peaceful settlement of the conflict," said Loderer.

Press Review

DW190801 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Press review]

[Text] Due to the workers' strikes along the Polish Baltic seacoast party chief Gierek had to cancel his meeting with Chancellor Schmidt in Hamburg which had been scheduled for today. This, as well as Gierek's appeal to the striking workers, are the topics of today's editorial comment.

The Main ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: The strike of Polish workers in the Gdansk area, which has lasted for 7 weeks now, intensified as yesterday party chief Gierek cancelled his visit to the Federal Republic which must be taken as an admission of the critical developments in Poland which grow constantly more incalculable. What is constantly gaining weight apart from the wage and price demands of the striking workers is the demand for political concessions such as freedom of speech and freedom of the press, right to strike, release of political prisoners, and the legalization of free trade unions. Such demands strike authoritarian regimes to the quick. The national pride of the striking workers and the deeply rooted aversion to the Russians in the people might lead to concession, to political moderation, in the strike centers at the last minute. The alternative would be a bloodbath. The fact that citizens of an active European cultural nation are forced today to face this inhuman consequence in their desire for the most elementary rights exposes the communist signatures under the Helsinki conference statement as a hypocritical declamation. Thus far the Main ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG.

Bonn's GENERAL-ANZEIGER makes the following comment: As late as yesterday morning the Federal Government still refused to believe the cancellation of party chief Edward Gierek's meeting with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Hamburg. For the time being the reciprocation to the Schmidt visit of a year ago on the Baltic Sea peninsula of Hela, not far from Gdansk, the present center of the Polish strike movement, has been shelved. A later date is being sought. Schmidt may regret it, especially since German-Polish relations in their special character are being considered a value in themselves, at least in Bonn. For Gierek, however, a storm is looming ahead. Not only Poland but he, too, is in a predicament.

AACHENER VOLKSZEITUNG stresses: There is great embarrassment in Bonn now because the private visit has been called off. A year ago the chancellor had been welcomed by a Polish honor guard in the port of Gdansk. Now he cannot even give a dinner in the one-family house because the boss of people's Poland just is not the boss of the Polish people. For the sake of peace the embarrassment is bearable. Any sort of interference in Poland conditions or even in those of the Warsaw Pact does not become us. But we need not hid our sympathies for that reason.

The OBERNDORF SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE observes: Bonn's regret over the Polish cancellation is mixed with relief at the fact that the Hamburg meeting is not taking place on the eve of a possible violent action by state law enforcement forces against striking workers demanding more freedom and humaneness. This is how quickly things change: A situation has emerged overnight in which neither Gierek's meeting with Schmidt nor the chancellor's meeting with SED chief Honecker supplies election campaign ammunition. In fact, the question arises whether as a consequence of the aggravation of the situation in Poland the meeting between Chancellor Schmidt and Honecker can take place at all. It seems--also and particularly after Gierek's televised speech--as though developments are drifting toward a decisive test of strength.

Now follows an except from LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN, which writes: Strictly speaking the chancellor may be glad that under the present circumstances in Poland he need not shake Gierek's hand as a good friend. This would indeed no longer be of any election campaign impact. The workers of Gdansk are on strike and demonstrating against Gierek and his party which refuses to let them have what Helmut Schmidt's SPD jointly with others has long attained by struggle in more than 100 years of its history: free trade unions, the right to strike, and the abolition of any censorship in free utterance of one's opinion. The right to voice freely one's opinion spells the doom of any dictatorship. Anyone demanding freedom of opinion in the communist power sphere, however, at the same time challenges the hegemonic power of the East Bloc, the USSR. But for the time being Moscow is reluctant to gain any further notoriety in the world as an aggressor. But how far does the patience of the Kremlin go?

RHEIN-NECKAR ZEITUNG of Heidelberg writes: Gierek would have been unable to come if guns had been fired in Gdansk, Warsaw and Lodz in order to bring the striking people in the shipyards and transport organizations back to their jobs. The guns remained silent but Gierek will not come anyway to Helmut Schmidt in Hamburg. The commitments to be made to help the foresaken Poles overcome their economic difficulties seem to be less important than the political crisis in Warsaw. The problem of Poland is not merely the pressure to follow the commands of a communist apparatus. The doom of this country was and is its geopolitical situation. Being almost completely exposed to the Soviet Union, Poland does not have a chance to maintain resistance. If Gierek is kicked out and another puppet takes over the chairmanship of the party, nothing will improve. The people have just the hope expressed in their anthem: Poland is not yet lost.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG notes: Despite all the forbearance of the Soviets vis-a-vis Warsaw, it is unimaginable that they will accept developments which according to their inner logic could lead to the elimination of the communist system. Therefore the question of Western reaction comes up. The demand to contribute to the destabilization of a failed system is pure recklessness as long as the West would have to look on helplessly in the worst case--a Soviet intervention. The fact that the rest of detente policy would be at stake that way would be regretted by the Poles, because without detente policy they would hardly be able to strike today relatively unpunished.

SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG of Leutkirch argues as follows: Regardless how much Helmut Schmidt may have expected to come from the meeting with Edward Gierek, he ought to be rather happy now that the Polish party chief will not come. Had no cancellation come from Warsaw, Bonn would actually have to look for a pretext to postpone the meeting. Schmidt would have had to face one embarrassing situation after another if he had to receive this Polish guest in that situation. The German chancellor cannot talk about detente with a communist ruler who is losing power in his own country and who is therefore as good as helpless vis-a-vis Moscow. It would be most fatal to the Social Democrat Schmidt to shake hands with a Marxist-Leninist who is considered relatively tolerant, but who is opposed by the workers because they are being deprived of their rights.

FRANKFURTHER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG assesses the situation in Poland as follows: The outer calmness with which the representatives of the Polish Government and the strike committee were facing each other, is not the calmness of a Polish laissez-faire but much rather the quietness inthe center of a typhoon. The demands of the strike committee remind one more of historic independence statements than of positions of a workers' fight. They are demands that hardly can be negotiated with the will to compromise. Neither the one who has made them, nor the addressee can have in mind a bit more or a bit less than press freedom, the establishment of independent trade unions, or access of churches to the media; he can, if at all, say yes or no--or make a fake promise which will not be taken seriously by one or the other.

BERLINER MORGENPOST writes about the Polish party chief's address to the striking people in Gdansk: The evening appeal of party chief Gierek addressed to the Polish people was a cry for help of a man who has been cornered. The fact that he admitted mistakes and that he announced the freezing of meat prices will hardly limit the spreading fire of the strike. The workers state now that Gierek has promised them better management of plants, more freedom of trade unions and more democracy. His political fate would be sealed if the wage fight turned into political rebellion. He can only bet on the discipline of the Polish people and hope that the indignation will articulate itself within those limits which will rule out a Soviet intervention. The shock of the strikes in Poland naturally is a harder blow for the East bloc than for the West. Ceausescu has canceled his visit to the Near East not merely because of the strikes in Romania, but most of all because of developments in Poland. What concerns Ceausescu must irritate Moscow.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG stresses: The Poles demanding more meat and bread have naturally been incited by anarchist forces and enemies of socialism, as the party chief said. That an evil distortion of facts which is supposed to distract attention from the obvious inability of state institutions. Gierek's attempt to justify himself was not suitable for the creation of new confidence between the populace and the leadership. Half-truths and wrong interpretations do not contribute to reconciliation.

SOVIET-GERMAN SOCIETY MEETS SPD DEPUTIES IN BONN

[Text] Bonn, 19 Aug (DPA)--A delegation of the Soviet-German Society had a meeting in Bonn today with a group of SPD lower house deputies led by the deputy parliamentary group chairman, Horst Ehmke, for political talks. The Soviet group was led by Leonid M. Zamyatin, a member of the CPSU Central Committee and president of the Soviet-German Society.

According to parliamentary group spokesman Knut Terjung, the Foreign Ministry had prior to the meeting given a briefing on the events following Zamyatin's remarks in Moscow on the occasion of the visit by lower house deputies. Zamyatin had made critical remarks about a visit by CDU politican Juergen Todenhoefer with Afghan resistance fighters. Following statements by the Soviet Foreign Ministry, the Foreign Ministry now regards the matter as closed.

NEW U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY PRAISED, HANDLING OF ISSUE SCORED

[Wolfram von Raven editorial: "Not New, But Effective"]

[Text] What is there to the--allegedly--new nuclear strategy of Washington, which seems to be causing confusion in the public opinion of the beleaguered country and which is being used for furious polemics by Moscow's propaganda? Does it mean the scrapping of the old concept based on the ability to retaliate to the first strike of the adversary with a second, discarding the ability to deprive the opponent in a first strike of using his combat means for a second strike? Some people already believe that the rule "the one who shoots first is the second to die!", which has kept the conflict between the United States and the USSR within limits so to speak, is not valid any more and that the threshold of nuclear war is being lowered this way, so that nuclear peace between the Americans and the Soviets will be endangered.

Again, as so often during the administration of Jimmy Carter, indiscretions causing doubts and mistrust have come prior to information. The authorities involved are having considerable trouble in calming down the public now because they lagged behind with their information. Communications shortcomings are evident again between the Pentagon chiefs and the State Department which creates the suspicion among the "doves" that the "hawks" in the government want to secretly prepare a change of course in a dangerous direction. The master of the White House again was not fortunate because the document with the title "Presidential Directive 59" threatens to become a subject of the election campaign. One hopes that it will not cause too much trouble for the issue.

The decision which has been made after thorough consultations with NATO in fact does not indicate a change in the current strategy of the United States vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, as some people say and others fear. The debate will unfortunately cause misunderstandings and trouble because of the unavoidable gross generalization of the meaning of the measure, although it is actually based on a sensible calculation, namely a refinement of the concept. Through a change in target planning the strategy is supposed to become more flexible and thus more credible without changing its threat of retaliation into a threat of aggression.

The basic idea still stems from Robert S. McNamara. The draft dates back to James Schlesinger, so that Harold Brown, who is implementing the matter according to technical developments, is exploiting ideas that are rooted in technical developments that are rooted deep in the sixties.

What is involved? The target planning of the United States for a retaliation strike was mainly aimed at population and industrial centers of the USSR, because Washington originally only had arms suitable for fighting wide area targets and not pinpointed targets within the area of Moscow's rule. The adversary was supposed to know that he--if he dared make an aggression--would be punished with unbearable losses of populace and industrial substance. That concept contained quantitative but not qualitative leeway for escalation, because theoretically there were only some more or some less targets of the same kind available, while the practice was aimed at the alternative "everything or nothing!"

Since the accuracy of nuclear arms--first of land-based and not yet of sea-based missiles--has been sufficiently improved in the meantime, the possibility arose of including pinpointed targets as well as wide areas into target planning. Thus the United States does not have to touch off total retaliation in every case, it can much rather vary the kind of retaliation according to the kind of attack that has taken place. It can aim strikes against important military or civil objects so that mass annihilation will remain as a reserve, so to speak. Washington's potential, however, does not suffice to disarm the adversary with one strike, or to diminish his capacities so much that they will not suffice for countering.

The Soviet Union has been able for quite some time to follow a concept with a choice between the targets. Moscow is even going a bit beyond that by having equipped itself with arms sufficing in quality and quantity to produce so much intimidation that it touched on the opposing world power's deterrence ability. This particularly caused the dilemma for the arrangement resulting from SALT. A parity of combat means as a whole has been agreed by SALT. But that did not rule out the possibility that one of the two sides could achieve for itself an advantage in the field of options, aims and respective purposes.

Nothing will be changed in this respect. Despite the probably justified reservations which caused the failure of ratification of the treaty with the Soviets, the Americans will keep to the agreements. With the modifications in the operative core of their strategic concept they have just exploited the possibilities which have been offered to them in the framework of the agreements; the arms programs which are supposed to follow will also be kept within the limits of the agreements. It is not the issue which must be criticized but the clumsiness with which it has been launched and handled.

The leading power's measure is in harmony with NATO plans because it takes into consideration the necessity of an escalation of small steps--not of great leaps. The decision to station medium-range arms on our continent will thus be properly complemented by the regulations for the use of long-range arms.

POLL SHOWS DECLINE IN SPD/FDP LEAD

[Text] Frankfurt, 11 August--The two Bonn coalition parties have been unable to maintain in the second half of July their lead over the Union parties which they had scored in the public opinion polls of the Allensbach Institute up to the end of June; they suffered a certain decrease. According to the announcement by the institute the proportions of the voters now are as follows (preceding month in parentheses): CDU/CSU 46.5 (44.5) percent, SPD 43.9 (44.5) percent, and FDP 6.6 (7.3) percent. The share of the "greens" in the notes dropped again by 0.1 to 2.6 percent. Yet despite the slight decrease of 1.3 percentage points all told, the Bonn government parties according to a new survey continue to have a comfortable absolute majority of 50.5 percent. The difference from the Union now amounts to 4 percentage points.

ARCHBISHOP BARDEN ARRIVES IN ROME AFTER EXPULSION FROM IRAN

[Text] Rome, 19 Aug (ANSA)--Catholic Archbishop William Barden, expelled from Iran yesterday, limited comment on his arrival in Rome today to a reiteration of the point that he had been expelled from Iran "on groundless pretexts". Without saying so openly, the church leader left the understanding that he was not at all optimistic about the outcome of the intervention with Iranian authorities on his behalf conducted by the Palestinian Melchite Bishop, Hilarion Capucci, seeking to open the way for his return to Iran.

Msgr. William Barden, who is an Irish national and a member of the Dominican order, is 72 years old and is the archbishop of the Latin rite chruch in Esfahan with residence in Tehran. Of the five Catholic bishops in Iran, he was the only foreigner and only Latin rite bishop. The other four are Iranian nationals. Three belong to the Caldean rite and one to the Armenian rite.

For the time being, Monsignor Barden will stay in Rome and take part in the world bishops synod, meeting in the Vatican in October, as a representative of the Iranian Episcopal Conference.

TRIAL OF IRANIAN STUDENTS CANCELED; NAMES TO BE GIVEN

LD191948 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] The trial by emergency procedure of 12 Iranian students, who refused to give their names and addresses to the police after being detained on 8 August during a demonstration in St Peter's Square, has been canceled. The decision was made for unexplained reasons of necessity by Deputy Public Prosecutor Laticella. The Association of Islamic Students in Italy stated that the 12 were prepared to give their particulars if the police first explained the reasons for its intervention in St Peter's Square. In Tehran, the president of parliament told Italian Charge d'Affaires Bondioli that the release of the students could prevent a deterioration in the relations between the two countries.

Discussion With Capucci, Others

LD192124 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] Talks lasting 2 and 1/2 hours were held at Regina Coeli jail between Msgr Hilarion Capucci, magistrates, Italian and Iranian diplomats and the detained Iranian students. It seems that the long discussion was useful to end the affair. The 12 students have been convinced to give their names and addresses. As is known, it was their refusal to give this information that landed them in jail. When they leave the jail, they will write a respectful letter to the pope to explain the demonstration which they staged on 8 August in St Peter's Square.

NORWAY'S ENVOY EXPECTED TO RETURN TO TEHRAN

LD191617 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 16 Aug 80 p 16

[Text] Norwegian Ambassador to Tehran Tormod P. Svennevig will probably return to Iran in the course of the next few weeks, according to information AFTENPOSTEN has received. Svennevig has been home for "consultations" since the Christmas holiday last year as part of the Norwegian reaction to the occupation of the U.S. Embassy.

Yesterday Norwegian Charge d'Affaires in Tehran Thomas Hauff, together with representatives of seven other countries' embassies, delivered a written request to the Iranian authorities for the release of the 52 American hostages.

OSLO PAPER ASSESSES 'NEW' U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY

[Editorial: "The U.S. 'New' Nuclear Strategy"]

[Text] In the middle of the American election campaign there have come announcements from Washington that the United States has adopted a "new" strategy for a possible future nuclear conflict with the Soviet Union. It is a strategy which--like all rational thinking on the most unthinkable of all wars--has as its purpose the reduction of the risk of a nuclear conflict, by ensuring the possibility of offering a credible deterrent. For over 35 years now this possibility has prevented a really destructive armed conflict between East and West. But the new doctrine was made public at an unfortunate moment--election campaigns are not well suited to weighing up such questions calmly--and in an unfortunate way. The fact that a foreign minister is kept in the dark about changes in strategic doctrines, as was the case in the United States, is not an indication of the best way of dealing with the issue.

The fact that the doctrine comes from a President who is hard pressed in the election campaign by an opponent who is calling for a harder line toward the Kremlin has also meant that the strategy has been described as newer [in italics] than it actually is--at least as far as we can judge by what we have been told up to now. The main thesis is that the United States will to a greater extent than in the past choose purely military targets for its nuclear arms, and not as in the past principally threaten retaliation against industrial plants and cities. When NATO's nuclear planning group met in Bodoe in June this year, with our own Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg as host, his American counterpart Harold Brown gave quite a detailed account of American thinking. The trend away from a massive retaliation against major cities toward training the missiles--including the most destructive--on military targets has already been prominent in discussions in the United States and within NATO for a long time.

What is new is that the Americans are obviously going a step further along this road, and particularly that they are announcing this as a "new" strategy. We find the military reasons for this in the technological developments, which are making missiles ever more accurate, and in the Russians' growing numbers of large land-based, and therefore extra-accurate missiles. There are growing fears in the United States that a surprise attack with these large Soviet missiles could knock out the Americans' land-based missiles. This would face the President with the choice between surrender or full retaliation with the submarine launched missiles against Soviet cities, something which in its turn would mean the destruction of American cities with missiles from Soviet submarines.

To reduce the fears of, or the temptation to create, such an insane situation the Americans are trying to get more alternatives between the two extremes--more calculated attacks against purely military targets.

In addition, their initiative has a purely political motive: The Kremlin must not be misled into taking a greater political risk in crisis situations, in the belief that the Soviet Union's powerful nuclear arsenal makes a great impression on the U.S. allies and faces the United States with the paralyzing choice between "all or nothing."

The precondition for the deterrent effect of the strategy that has been announced in the United States is that it reduces the dangers that a nuclear war will be triggered off and increases the U.S. capacity to present a credible deterrent. If such a deterrent effect is to remain constant in an age of rapid technological change, the superpowers' military measures must also be supplemented by negotiations on these the most dangerous of all weapons. SALT is a beginning, and the United States must ratify the SALT II agreement that was signed over a year ago. In no other area within international politics are distrust, uncertainty and fear greater than in the field of nuclear arms, and therefore negotiations and agreements are the only navigable course toward a really secure future.

NORWEGIAN EXPERT ON FOREIGN, SECURITY POLICY

[Ritzaus Bureau report: "No Confidence in Norwegian Defense Policy"]

[Text] Oslo--Norwegian Foreign Policy Institute information chief Anders C. Sjaastad considers that Norwegian foreign and security policy is characterized by a lack of determination and by sidelong glances at the ruling Labor Party's leftwing.

In the latest issue of the Conservative newspaper OSLO OG VI he gives three examples of things which illustrate this.

The first example concerns the modernization of NATO's long-range [as published] tactical nuclear missiles. He writes that the government did take the decision to support modernization, but only after a number of maneuvers which created the impression abroad that Norway belonged to the little group of doubters along with Denmark, the Netherlands and Belgium.

Sjaastad's second example is the long-term plan for Norwegian defenses. He describes it as disappointing that the Labor Party is intent on a lower growth rate in the defense budget than recommended defense commission.

His third example is the question of the contingency stockpiling of NATO heavy equipment in Norway. The government has repeatedly approved contingency stockpiling in principle, he points out, but he writes that he cannot understand the uncertainty that has suddenly arisen on the issue.

ARBEIDERBLADET Comment

LD191431 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 13 Aug 80 p 4

[Editorial: "Defense and Security"]

[Text] In a large article on its front page yesterday, AFTENPOSTEN was able to report that the leaders of Norwegian foreign policy are indecisive. And on its inside pages the paper describes as worrying the fact that foreign policy leaders reportedly cast "sidelong glances at the Labor Party's leftwing." The basis for these claims is an interview with Norwegian Foreign Affairs Institute information chief Anders C. Sjaastad. The interview can be found in the Oslo Conservative Party paper OSLO OG VI.

In AFTENPOSTEN's version, special importance is attached to the information chief's position as a researcher and his detailed knowledge of the country's security and defense policy problems. What AFTENPOSTEN neglects to report is that the same Sjaastad is also a politician--a Conservative politician. At present he is first deputy chairman of the Oslo Conservative Party and as far as we know is competing to take over Paul Thyness's seat in the Storting next autumn. In view of the defense and security policy reflections that AFTENPOSTEN communicated yesterday, we think that it would be advantageous--not least for Sjaastad himself--if greater importance were attached to his role as politician rather than to his role as researcher.

As "proof" of his claims of indecision and "sidelong glances at the leftwing," Sjaastad produces three factors: the modernization of NATO's nuclear arms, the long-term plan for the defense forces and the contingency stockpiling of heavy military equipment.

As far as the modernization of the nuclear arms in West Europe is concerned, Sjaastad makes so many concessions that his claims here fall by their own absurdity. We are rather of the opinion that this matter was dealt with a little too decisively and that the authorities did not reach the people completely with their arguments for an approach that involved a package solution containing measures for modernization as a form of pressure to bring about negotiations on disarmament.

As far as the long-term program is concerned the government supported, as is well known, a growth in the defense budget in the next few years of 3 percent, while the defense commission for its part proposed an increase of 4 percent, something which the nonsocialist parties supported in the Storting. When the government chose to opt for 3 percent, it was not because of pressure or out of indecision. However, the government sees defense spending as a part of the national economy. We think that this is also a factor of great importance for general support for, and agreement on, defense policy. When the matter was discussed in the Storting in April, the Conservatives' parliamentary leader Kaare Willoch announced that he could feel "understanding for the government's national economic arguments," even though he did not agree with its conclusions. Willoch also said in the same Storting debate that it was necessary to tone down the impression of divisions surrounding Norwegian defense policy. We are unable to see that Anders C. Sjaastad has followed these instructions. He ought also to study how the governments in Europe, that he is closer to than is the Norwegian Government, have fixed their future defense spending. He will then find that Norway is in a small but exclusive company of nations that have followed NATO's advice for a 3 percent budgetary growth.

Nor can we see that there is any support for Sjaastad's weighty claims concerning the question of contingency stockpiling of allied equipment in Norway. There has long been political agreement on the question of stockpiling itself. But defense policymakers would be neglecting their responsibilities if they did not take time in the light of the present situation to study in detail, and start a debate on, the question of whether contingency stockpiles of heavy equipment for land combat forces should now be set up, what they should contain and where they should be placed. Neither the defense commission's recommendations nor the discussion of the subject in the Storting Defense Committee have given any answers to these questions.

Anders C. Sjaastad is concerned that foreign and defense policymakers should follow a line which would hinder the Soviet Union from exerting political pressure and in the last resort going to war. However, he does not mention the important task of preventing war by creating calm and stability. Here there is a delicate balance that all responsible leaders must take account of.

We attach the greatest possible importance to broad agreement surrounding the country's foreign, defense and security policies. But we do not believe that this can be achieved through so-called decisiveness, if decisiveness means that views are dictated from on high. Such questions as these must also be subject to democratic treatment and public discussion before decisions are made. We believe that our age has more use for politicians who can use their heads and win the support of the people than for "decisive cowboys" who compete to be the first to fire.

ATKINS REBUFFS IRISH PRIME MINISTER ON FUTURE OF ULSTER

[Paul Potts report: "Ulster Solution 'Not Dublin's Business,' Says Atkins"]

[Text] The Irish Government was warned yesterday by Mr Atkins, the Northern Ireland secretary, to keep out of the search for a political solution to the problems of Ulster. He gave a blunt rebuff to the overtures of Mr Haughey, the Irish prime minister, on a direct Anglo-Irish initiative for the constitutional future of the Province.

Mr Atkins said the way forward was none of Dublin's business but a matter for the people of Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland secretary also hit back at sceptics who have written off his latest political initiative by predicting that the cabinet will present legislation during the next parliamentary session to bring about a fresh structure of government for Ulster.

But it was his total rejection of Mr Haughey's diplomatic manoeuvrings to bring about a round table conference involving the two governments which caused the most surprise. In what was his most authoritative statement on the subject since taking office over a year ago Mr Atkins firmly stamped on any progress the Irish Government believed it was making with Mrs Thatcher. Asked during an interview on Belfast's local radio station about such a summit, Mr Atkins replied simply: "It is not a starter."

While accepting that regular contacts do exist between Belfast, London and Dublin, Mr Atkins, using words which will upset diplomatic circles in the Republic, announced: "It is not their business to settle this." "It is for the people of the United Kingdom and particularly the people of Northern Ireland to work this one out for themselves."

Questioned about his political initiative Mr Atkins said: "If this is not successful in producing the necessary agreement we shall have to think of something else but it is our firm view that the proposals we have put forward are the most likely way of establishing in Northern Ireland a workable and acceptable administration. There may be other ways but to be honest I do not think there is any other as good."

His statement comes at a time when he is having difficulty with the Unionist parties in his peace talks. His words will also scotch the persistent rumour in Irish political circles that the British Government is about to abandon its traditional guarantees to the Ulster Protestants and seek a solution in the context of an all-Irish dimension.

Although some of his officials and most observers are convinced that this latest initiative to bring developed government to Ulster will fail, Mr Atkins is determined to press on with publication of a white paper early next year on the government's constitutional proposals.

The pessimism is supported by the leader of the Official Unionist Party Mr James Molyneaux and the Northern Ireland Office. In a recent speech Mr Molyneaux severely criticized Mr Atkins and said: "He's wasted a year and a half in talks instead of getting on with the job of restoring government to the Province."

Mr Atkins did accept during the interview that there were still "considerable differences" between the parties in Northern Ireland over the make up of the executive to run the Province but insisted that those involved wanted a solution. He went on to reassure Unionist opinion that the government would not impose a solution on Ulster. However he did not rule out a referendum if agreement could not be reached by negotiation.

DENKTAS LETTER TO WALDHEIM ON SECURITY OF TURKISH CYPRIOTS

[Text] President Denktas has drawn the attention of the UN secretary general, Mr Waldheim, to the latest Greek Cypriot disclosures of plans to exterminate the Turkish Cypriot community overnight. In a letter to Mr Waldheim, President Denktas stressed the efforts required to reach a solution to the Cyprus problem which will insure a guarantee that any such future plans have no chance whatsoever to succeed. He pointed out that one of the main concerns of the Turkish Cypriot side in the search for an agreed just and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem was the question of security on which depends the very survival of the Turkish Cypriot community.

President Denktas said: In order to guarantee our survival, we have to be satisfied and insured that past attempts by the Greeks to annihilate the Turkish people of Cyprus cannot be repeated again, and, if repeated, cannot succeed. To this extent, our people are very alarmed and concerned to have verified from time to time by authentic disclosures confirming past Greek plans to exterminate the Turkish people of Cyprus in order to turn Cyprus into an all-Greek island and to unite it with Greece. President Denktas, after recounting several examples of these Greek Cypriot disclosures, concluded by saying that these were the main reasons which underlay the basic policy of the Turkish Cypriot case.

ATAKOL MEETS GOBBI TO DISCUSS RESUMPTION OF TALKS

TA191138 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] Kenan Atakol, Turkish Cypriot minister of foreign affairs, defense and tourism, met this morning with the UN special representative in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi. Adviser to the UN representative Remy Gorge was also present at the meeting. It is reported that the request for the meeting came from Gobbi. Speaking to reporters after the meeting, Atakol said that the meeting was in preparation for the resumption of the intercommunal talks. In reply to a question on whether statements made by Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou and Archbishop Khrisosthomos created the impression at the United Nations as well that the talks cannot be resumed, Atakol said that their statements have been protested to the UN secretary general and that the representatives at the United Nations have been informed about the Turkish Cypriot views. Atakol said: No doubt, every person and country with commonsense is well aware that these statements are harmful and do not contribute to the rapprochement between the two communities.

ROLANDHIS PROTESTS ARTICLE IN UN MAGAZINE TO UN ENVOY

NC181155 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 18 Aug 80

[Text] Today, Foreign Minister Rolandhis contacted a UN representative on Cyprus and made a strong protest over an article in the August edition of BLUE BERET magazine, which is published by the United Nations, that calls Nicosia "Lefkosa" and Cyprus "Kibris." The article also makes a reference to the word "Lefkosa" as meaning the northern part of Nicosia.

Rolandhis pointed out that the article clearly constituted a violation of the UN resolutions by the UN, and described the situation as inadmissible and unacceptable. Rolandhis said: UN Secretary General Waldheim has often expressed his concern and disappointment over noncompliance with UN resolutions. I do not know how he will interpret a UN publication's description of a UN member-state called the Republic of Cyprus as Kibris, especially when the publication says that Cyprus has been called Kibris since the 16th century. It is understood that the entire matter of the article is being studied by UN authorities in Cyprus.

ECEVIT COMPARES DEMIREL'S ELECTION MOVES WITH NAZI STRATEGY

TA191515 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has announced that his party's joint Senate and National Assembly group has decided to oppose the early election proposals because of the lack of personal and election security. Ecevit repeated the speech he had delivered at the joint group meeting at a news conference later in the parliament building:

[Begin recording] Mr Demirel has been planning to hold early elections since the establishment of the present government. He drew up a strategy to achieve this aim--a crisis strategy. He has been hindering the National Assembly for the past 5 months as part of the crisis strategy. For the past 5 months he has been hindering the election of a president and he is now using the state's inability to function--an inability caused by his own obstacles--as a reason for early elections.

Even though it is the right of every political party to ask for ealry elections whenever it considers it necessary or appropriate for its own interests, it is nobody's right to create a crisis in the country in order to prepare a reason for early elections. That is an example of extreme irresponsibility. Early elections can be proposed whenever necessary to emerge from a crisis. However, it is incompatible with a statesman's responsibility, with patriotism or with democracy to create a crisis or to exacerbate the already existing crisis in the country in order to make early elections necessary.

The Nazi government in Germany had been established with similar strategies, with a similar crisis strategy. The Nazi government was established after a Bogeyman, communism, was created and used as a pretext for rightist terrorism and nazism. The burning of the Reichstag was exploited for this purpose. In Turkey, the inability of the parliament to function is being exploited for the same purpose.

In Germany, rightist terrorism had gone too far, election security had been lifted and the national will had been rendered ineffective just before the elections which led to the establishment of a Nazi government in Germany. Today, in Turkey, we have reached the point where there is absolutely no election security or personal security during the elections. Furthermore, the foreign debts accumulated by mortgaging Turkey's future have been spent in accordance with the early elections strategy and for election hoarding [as heard]. In short, the government is acting with the sole aim of winning the elections and the aftermath is of no concern to it, that is, the aftermath of Nazism and fascism.

The RPP managed to frustrate this plan in its earlier stages. The RPP will certainly do all it can to frustrate the plan within the rules of democracy once again. The Turkish people's loyalty to democracy is the main guarantee in this issue.

The RPP joint Senate and National Assembly group has decided to oppose the early proposals in the face of the present conditions in the country, especially in the face of the lack of personal and election security. [end recording]

JP Secretary General's Response

TA191947 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] JP Secretary General Nahit Mentese said that the RPP will not be able to escape from early elections by means of pretexts and allegations. In a written statement he issued in Ankara, Mentese charged that the RPP governments that had come to power so far had shown that they knew nothing about governing the country.

Mentese added: Ecevit and his friends are concocting unfounded allegations and trying to divert the attention of the citizens in order to make the nation forget their own unsuccessful governments in order to gain time and to prepare new intrigues. That is why they are trying to escape the early elections. Their claim that early elections cannot be held with the present government--a government which has received a vote of confidence from the Assembly--is not credible. It is mere words, and deceitful ones at that, to say that nazism and fascism can be established in Turkey.

Nahit Mentese pointed out that the JP had gone to the polls while being in government several times and that it had done whatever was necessary in order not to cast a shadow over the national will in the elections. He said: There will not be tarnished elections if the JP is in government. The allegations to the contrary are made only by those who tarnish the elections.

Mentese charged that the RPP was trying to evade early elections because it was afraid that it would lose greatly. He added: It is extremely significant that the leftist terrorists say "death to fascism" and Ecevit says similar things. Also, it is as significant to see that both the leftist terrorists and Ecevit use the slogan "no to early elections."

NAP Official's Comments

TA191954 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] NAP Deputy Secretary General Yasar Okuyan has said that RPP leader Bulent Ecevit must stop slandering the NAP and the nationalists and must say yes to early elections. In a statement in Ankara, Okuyan challenged Ecevit to clearly say what party he meant when he said that fascism and nazism can come to power in Turkey. Okuyan charged that with these remarks Ecevit was accusing the nation of both fascism and nazism.

The NAP official said: If, by means of hints and obscure remarks, Ecevit means that he sees the NAP as fascist and nazi and if he is worried that the NAP will enter parliament as a very strong party after the early elections, then he should come out and say it clearly and receive the necessary answer.

Yasar Okuyan stressed that the Turkish nation was as opposed to fascism and nazism as it was to communism. He added: Those who insistently talk about a fascist and nazi threat are the supporters of communism. Ecevit and his supporters who protect, forgive, feed and defend the communist and divisive murder gangs will naturally accuse the nationalists of being fascists and evade early elections.

SOVIETS ASKED NOT TO MASS TROOPS ON BORDER

NC191220 Istanbul ERCUMAN in Turkish 16 Aug 80 pp 1 & 12

(Report by Sedat Sertoglu)

[Excerpts] Turkey has officially asked the Soviet Union not to mass troops on the Turkish-Soviet border. Considering that Soviet intervention in the Persian Gulf could create a situation contrary to its national interests, Turkey has begun preparations for joint action on the side of its allies. Both these situations, which are expected to bring about important changes in Turkey's foreign policy, have been determined jointly by the office of the general staff and the Foreign Ministry. High-ranking officials in the Foreign Ministry have stated that relations between Turkey and the Soviet Union have entered a "cool period" following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Turkey's request that the Soviet Union not mass troops on its borders with Turkey has been referred to the NATO delegation in Vienna where talks are being held with the USSR on the question of mutual balanced force reduction [MBFR].

Competent Foreign Ministry officials in Ankara have said that the Soviet Union has been notified of the Turkish proposals which have been sent to Vienna within the framework of the talks concerning the "security of the flanks."

High-level Turkish officials, who prefer to remain anonymous, say that if the Soviet Union decides not to increase its 15 divisions (200 thousand strong) now concentrated on the Turkish-Soviet border, then Turkey also undertakes not to send further troops to the area. This, they say, has been communicated to Russia. Competent authorities say that the Soviet Union is understood to have chosen Odessa on the Black Sea as a springboard against Turkey.

Foreign Ministry officials have stated that it does not expect the Soviet Union to respond to the Turkish proposal. Meanwhile, competent authorities in Ankara say that should the Soviet Union enter the oil areas in the Persian Gulf, Turkey's interests would be jeopardized. The same authorities add that "under such circumstances, Turkey would act jointly with its allies as the conditions of the day dictate."

Foreign Ministry officials believe that relations between the Soviet Union and Turkey "were experiencing a cool period" and that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan could be considered as marking the beginning of a tendency to move down to the oil regions. Adding, however, that no one at the moment knows the next Soviet step, the Foreign Ministry officials say "it is out of the question that the United States can use Turkey as a springboard for an attack in the Middle East. However, if the Soviet Union attempts to move down to the Persian Gulf, this would prejudice Turkey's interests. Turkey would then act jointly with its allies because, having occupied the Gulf, the Soviet Union would certainly threaten Turkey's oil supplies."

Finally, the authorities have said that technical work has begun in view of such a probability.

CHIEF OF STAFF DENIES POLITICAL INFLUENCE IN PROMOTIONS

TA201131 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] The chief of the general staff's office has issued a statement noting that the Turkish Armed Forces are not affected by political considerations in their promotions and appointments.

The statement is as follows: Personal interpretations have appeared in certain press organs regarding the promotions, retirements and appointments which were made following the meetings of the Supreme Military Council from 4 to 8 August, 1980. These interpretations, which were made in accordance with the personal prejudices of the interpreter, are totally without foundation. The promotion and retirement procedures within the Turkish Armed Forces are determined following the evaluations of the Supreme Military Council in accordance with the armed forces' own rules and regulations and the personnel situation. The appointments by the chief of general staff's office are determined in a balanced manner and take into account the person's term of duty in the field and at headquarters and their service in Eastern Anatolia. The Turkish Armed Forces have always--both regarding promotions and appointments--remained outside political considerations.

The statement concluded: It is believed that the public will not credit such interpretations and statements made in line with biased and personal interests. However, it was considered to be useful to clarify the matter once more.

SCHMIDT STILL PLANNING ON GDR VISIT; COMMENTS ON POLAND

LD201538 Hamburg DPA in German 1447 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 20 Aug (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is assuming that his meeting with SED chief Erich Honecker next week in the GDR will go ahead regardless of developments in Poland. According to information in Bonn today, the delegation which is to accompany Schmidt to Werbellinsee does not rule out the possibility that in the event of a dramatic exacerbation of the situation in Poland, the talks with the GDR leadership could be postponed. In Bonn, Government Spokesman Armin Gruenewald limited himself to telling the press that as yet there are no indications that there would be any change in Honecker's invitation to the chancellor or his intention to visit the GDR.

On Friday the chancellor is to prepare for talks with the GDR leadership in a final session in Hamburg with Foreign Affairs Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff, minister for Inner-German Relations Egon Franke and the state secretaries who will make up the delegation to the GDR. Lambsdorff and Franke are accompanying the chancellor to Werbellinsee. On Tuesday the final discussion with the chancellor was officially set for the beginning of next week.

Bonn's permanent representative in the GDR, Guenter Gaus, attended the consultations in Bonn today of the state secretaries for intra-German policy on the summit. Gaus will also accompany the chancellor on his visit to the GDR.

According to information from the chancellor's entourage Schmidt is "profoundly worried and depressed" by the development of the conflict between the reformist forces in Poland and the political leadership. This concern of the chancellor, it was stated, encompassed not only the events themselves and the situation among the Polish leadership, but the negative prospects for East-West relations in Europe. It was described as not unthinkable by these quarters that if a severe worsening of the conflict in Poland gave rise to the risk of the unrest spilling over to the GDR, the GDR leadership might decide to cancel Schmidt's visit.

'FINAL PREPARATIONS' FOR GDR VISIT UNDERWAY

LD211058 Hamburg DPA in German 1012 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 21 Aug (DPA)--The final preparations for Chancellor Schmidt's meeting with the GDR head of state and party Honecker will be discussed by Chancellor Schmidt and the delegation accompanying him to the GDR in Hamburg tomorrow. Bonn government representatives from the Federal Press Office, the Chancellor's Office and the protocol section of the Foreign Ministry today visited the meeting place to settle technical and organizational details including the working facilities for the over 200 journalists from the Federal Republic who will cover the meeting at Werbellinsee and Schmidt's visits to Guestrow and Rostick.

LEADERS, PRESS VIEW POLISH DEVELOPMENTS, EFFECT ON GDR VISIT

LD201444 Hamburg DPA in German 1410 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 20 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government believes public reticence to be the proper attitude toward the events in Poland. This was stressed by Government Spokesman Armin Gruenewald today following a meeting of the cabinet in Bonn at which the developments in Poland were discussed.

Gruenewald told the press that the government is imposing restraint upon itself because it wants to avoid the possibility of the remarks being used as an excuse to claim that it is interfering in the internal affairs of another state. It is known that other Western allies hold the same views as Bonn on the subject of whether official statements should be made on the Polish situation.

Gruenewald Statement

DW210657 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1500 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Excerpt from press conference statement of Deputy Government Spokesman Dr Armin Gruenewald]

[Text] We would like to avoid contributing to a situation in which our statement could be taken as a pretext by others in the sense of interference in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Poland. It may be that some others will consider this as strange. The Federal Government will have to endure that in the interest of the matter and it will endure it.

Brandt Reaction

DW210657 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Statement by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt on the strikes in Poland]

[Text] Naturally we cannot be indifferent but are keenly sympathetic if elsewhere in Europe workers advocate their rights and their interests, as well as the freedom of expression in order to look after their interests. Second, we would deem it fatal if this conflict skids into a use of armed power. Third, it is probably true that no foreign interference is of any help, but that the U.S. Government is right if it raises the question against the background of the Polish difficulties of how one could help eliminate the economic difficulties which the country there is facing. Fourth, we definitely advocate the view that Poland cannot be any topic for the federal election campaign in 1980. And finally, fifth, we must never forget, even in this particular situation, how important a factor Poland is and will be in everything that is connected with pan-European cooperation and the safeguarding of peace.

SPD's Ehmke Comment

LD201220 Hamburg DPA in German 1057 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 20 Aug (DPA)--Horst Ehmke, deputy chairman of the Bundestag parliamentary group, has expressed the hope that the conflict between the reformist forces and political leadership in Poland will be settled without violence. Ehmke, the first prominent SPD politician to comment on the current situation in Poland, at the same time expressed his view in an interview with DPA today that the reformers as well as the political leaders in Poland want to avoid a similar development to that in the CSSR in 1968, where the reform movement of the "Prague spring" ended with the military intervention of the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact troops. Replying to the question of what he feels as a native of Gdansk in view of the unrest in the Polish ports, Ehmke said that the events in his birthplace and other towns affect him deeply. In Poland too his heart is on the side of the reformers. Ehmke conceded that the development in Poland is not without dangers and worries him. "But I have the impression, as far as it is possible to judge, that the reformers, but especially the Polish leadership too, have learned their lesson from the Prague spring." The question of whether this is also true of the Soviet leadership was answered by the SPD politician as follows: "This has yet to be seen. One can only hope so."

Strauss Remarks

LD201520 Hamburg DPA in German 1405 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] Hamburg, 20 Aug (DPA)--CDU/CSU chancellor candidate Franz Josef Strauss thinks that Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's visit to the GDR is not appropriate at the present time because of the situation in Poland. In an interview for BILD ZEITUNG, the text of which has been prereleased to DPA, Strauss replied in answer to a relevant question: "I would not go in the present situation." According to Strauss he has information to the effect "that highest government quarters in East Berlin and Prague have urged the Polish Government to take tough action against the opposition in its own country." The reason for this insistence is the fear that the strikes in Poland could have effects in their own countries. Strauss said that no one could rule out Soviet intervention in Poland. If it did intervene, he said, it would "completely destroy the policy of detente and also put trade relations with the West at risk." At the moment, he said, the Polish Government is doing its utmost to prevent intervention by Moscow.

CDU/CSU Views

[Text] Bonn 20 Aug (DPA)--In the view of Helmut Kohl, CDU/CSU parliamentary group chairman in the Bundestag, the demands of the striking Polish workers prove that yet again a communist system has reached its limits. A statement by Kohl published in Bonn today says that the CDU/CSU greatly admires the courage and level-headedness of the Polish workers. The Polish leadership might recognize that the economic and social problems can only be solved on a long-term basis by reforms and more freedom and not by terror from above or from outside. Kohl said that if the communist leadership in Warsaw and the Soviet Union were to respond to the demands of the Polish workers merely by using measures of force internally or by intervention from outside, this would be a fresh admission that their power is based only on the bayonets of force and terror from above.

The CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor, Franz Josef Strauss, said that the situation in Poland is oppressively reminiscent of the events in Czechoslovakia 12 years ago when Soviet troops stamped on the "Prague spring." Strauss said that at a time when the Soviet Union is oppressing another small nation in Afghanistan, the fate of Czechoslovakia should not be forgotten. The Western ritual surrounding Soviet oppression is always the same. It consists of indignation, the call for sanctions, warnings against overreaction, the break up of Western solidarity, concern for the "so-called policy of detente," the abandonment of sanctions and finally a return to the day's agenda.

CDU Deputy Werner Marx wrote in the CDU/CSU press service that the demands of the Polish workers are justified. The West should give them immediate moral support. There is obviously a deep gulf between the dictatorial leadership and the working population in Poland. CDU Deputy Norbert Bluem expressed solidarity with the strikers in Poland. He specifically welcomed the statement the metalworkers' labor union chief Eugen Loderer, who yesterday assured the Polish workers of his union's solidarity.

DIE WELT Editorial

DW201125 Bonn DIE WELT in German 20 Aug 80 p 6

[W. Hertz-Eichenrode editorial: "Gierek, Honecker and Schmidt"]

[Text] Helmut Schmidt adopts the words of Carl Friedrich von Weizsaecker, who said that there are "ways to deal with dangerous times." [paragraph continues]

He shuddered when thinking that we could fail to find these ways, that this would be fatal. Schmidt recommended himself to the voters as a pilot, because he has the ability to think ahead. So our pilot has thought beforehand of the hardly tolerable position in which the Federal Republic of Germany now suddenly finds itself: The federal chancellor has tugged himself and all of us, whose political credo is freedom, into playing the role of the stabilizer of Soviet usurpation of the people of East Europe. This is not supposed to be a clumsy attack on the Social-Democratic government chief of our country, as if the editorial board of this paper does not share the insight that a military eruption of the fermentation process in Poland ought to be prevented as much as possible, or as if the author does not know the rules of a nuclear stalemate and its "zones of influence" of the world powers, whose most important demarcation line in Europe is set by a German-German border commission. And yet: The situation into which the federal chancellor has maneuvered himself and us is morally and politically unacceptable.

Shortly before the evening when Gierek threatened the disciplined protest of the workers who did not apply any violence by saying that economic concessions will be granted, but not political concessions under any circumstances, Schmidt obviously considered it important to state that nothing indicates that Gierek will not come to Hamburg as scheduled. The idea is ghastly that the German federal chancellor, a convinced advocate of free trade unions, would welcome the Polish party chief like a good friend in his home, although Gierek has used the dictatorial power of the communist state against the strike movement aligned with civil rights. Furthermore, the zeal with which the Federal Government is making propagandistic preparations for Schmidt's visit to Honecker--bypassing Berlin--indicates that the chancellor cares much more about the Werbellinsee meeting with the Soviet-infiltrated man from the Saarland than about the "messenger" meeting with Brezhnev in Moscow. He is probably concerned with setting a proper example in the vicinity of 5 October, demonstrating a piece of dogged hard work for human and economic alleviations in German-German reality. The speculation on national emotions which can be mobilized with regard to the elections certainly plays a role. But with whom is the federal chancellor dealing at a time when we view with sympathy the reasonable freedom fight of the Polish workers?

Honecker represents the "GDR" as a Moscow satellite as Ulbricht once did. It has not been forgotten at all that in 1968 Ulbricht was one of the initiators of the attack on the CSSR to quell the "Prague spring." He was acting not merely out of loyalty towards Moscow, but out of the GDR's own interest. Honecker's "GDR" is willingly prepared to take over the function of a crossbar safeguarding the cohesion of the European Soviet bloc toward the West. Honecker will do everything he can to prevent the formation of a liberal national movement in Poland, or even the development of national anticommunism which could orientate toward the West. Honecker is much more than Gierek an uncompromising governor of Soviet predominance.

The main principle of our constitution is: "The dignity of man is inviolable." It expresses a general human right that stands above any state power. The acknowledgement with regard to the dignity of man and freedom commits us to maintaining solidarity with all people fighting for their civil rights, regardless where that may be in this world. Out of solidarity with the striking people in Poland the federal chancellor should have done the following:

1. Not have waited until Gierek canceled his visit, but suggested on his own to the Polish party chief a postponement until the danger of a bloody suppression of the strike has been prevented.

2. This advice to Gierek should have been given publicly.

3. Political guidelines ought to have been given to those who want to grant a credit to Poland running into the billions, the guidelines of which should have bee published. The money should not flow as long as the danger exists that the communist state power of Poland or the Soviet Union could shoot down the bourgeois strike movement.

4. Honecker should have been told, and this statement ought to have been published, that a meeting at Werbellinsee or somewhere else would be possible if suppression by force of the protesting workers in the Warsaw Pact area was not to be feared any more.

Should the chancellor argue that one must talk to each other particularly in times of crises to do everything possible for peace, one ought to answer: None of these four measures would have meant bringing active influence to bear on developments in Poland, none would have challenged the Soviet Union, and none would have destroyed forever the laboriously built bridges to Warsaw and East Berlin. But every one of these four measures would have contributed to maintaining the loyalty to our democratic beliefs and thus our national credibility. We would have demonstrated that we care more for the freedom of the people than for the strengthening of shaking totalitarian regimes.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Article

DW201147 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 20 Aug 80 p 4

[Klaus Dreher article: "Can Schmidt Still Go To See Honecker?"]

[Text] Bonn, 19 August--The Federal Government will strictly deny it, and it need not happen this way, but at least since Polish Communist Party chief Gierek's cancellation of his Hamburg visit the preparations for the chancellor's visit to the GDR have been made with the reservation that they might have to be discontinued prematurely for political reasons. In the event the developments in Poland dramatically aggravate any further a situation might ensure in which the GDR, at any rate, would have to be afraid that the unrest would threaten to spread to its own territory. In such a case a trip by the chancellor through the German Democratic Republic aboard the special train probably would not be desirable any longer.

At the moment there is no call for envisaging concretely a cancellation of the meeting between Helmut Schmidt and Chairman of the GDR Council of State Erich Honecker. The Federal Government as well as the parties are awaiting developments, endeavoring not to come out with any utterance that might tend to contribute to the aggravation of the situation. Meanwhile, they know that through the Western media the people of the GDR are better informed about the strikes and the demands of the strikers than any other people in the Eastern power sphere--a reason why NEUES DEUTSCHLAND probably has plunged forward and is providing relatively comprenensive information from the neighbor country. Depending on what will yet happen by Wednesday next week Honecker might find himself compelled for various reasons to cancel the meeting with Schmidt. In any event his leeway has been narrowed down even now. Any promise, even if given only in the vague form of a declaraton of intent, would be interpreted as a weakness of his regime. The more unstable the power structures in the forefield of the Soviet Union will be, the more Moscow will see to it that particularly the GDR will remain free of external shocks.

The problem of the chancellor's visit will not be Werbellinsee, where Schmidt and Honecker will be screened from the public. The more difficult part for the GDR is much rather the return trip via Guestrow and Rostock. In both places it will probably be impossible to completely shut off contacts with the populace. Those politicians and officials who escorted the then Federal Chancellor Brandt to Erfurt still know very well how the local authorities there reacted oversensitively even their preparations; they also know how quickly an explosive mood can build up.

It must also be considered in Bonn that in an extreme case the federal chancellor could be forced to demand a postponement of the visit on his own. He must reckon anyway with a respective demand of the opposition. One must not even think of direct Soviet intervention. Even a Polish application of means of power would necessitate new considerations. So far these are just speculations and prohibitive considerations. But they demonstrate that the second attempt to bring about a meeting between Schmidt and Honecker has been involved overnight in a swirl of events also involving the Federal Republic.

GOVERNMENT CRITICIZES ISRAELI RAID IN SOUTHERN LEBANON

LD192104 Paris Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] France this evening officially reacted following the operation carried out by the Israeli Army in southern Lebanon, an operation which is reported to have resulted in about 12 deaths among the ranks of the Palestinian forces. The Quai d'Orsay expresses its sharp disapproval and notes that this kind of action worsens the situation and runs counter to the efforts made by the European Community to try and obtain a return to peace in the Middle East.

LE MONDE REVIEWS GIEREK SPEECH, POLISH SITUATION

[Editorial: "The Wager"]

[Excerpts] As could be expected, since his return from the USSR Mr Gierek has been trying to regain control over the situation. The Gdansk events have been seen as sufficiently explosive to make the first secretary postpone indefinitely the visit which he was to pay to Hamburg--this is no longer the time for trying to convince Chancellor Schmidt that he should prepare some diplomatic initiative before the Madrid conference. It is merely a question of preventing the irreparable and saving what can still be saved. Gierek's televised speech on Monday night undoubtedly had a fundamental role to play in the "deescalation" strategy which is now being implemented by the first secretary. It is as yet too early to say whether Gierek has been successful but it is not premature to state that the number one man in Poland has taken a big risk by throwing all his prestige into the balance.

Remembering that he owed his rise to power to the same Gdansk workers who had already rebelled in 1970, Gierek wisely decided not to confront the strikers as a whole. He took care not to threaten them with any swift intervention by the forces of law and order but has tried to separate the wheat from the chaff by denouncing "attempts to politicize work stoppages and incitements to anarchy and antisocialism." Obviously the strike is acceptable to Gierek only if its aim is to secure material improvements. It is intolerable if it results in calling into question what he called the "political and social order" in Poland which itself represents, he said, "a fundamental element of the order established in Europe after World War II." In particular, Gierek clearly hinted that even though it was opportune to repaint the facade of the Polish trade union edifice, it was absolutely out of the question to accept that it be gradually transformed into a representative and democratic parallel system which would enable the workers to continually have at their disposal a lever for action with respect to the authorities appointed by the party.

Will Gierek's statements be sufficient to defuse the grave crisis which has been smoldering since the beginning of July? The Gdansk strike committee's initial reactions indicate that they will not. However, in the present state of affairs you must avoid drawing any conclusions too hastily: There are many Poles who without approving of the regime under which they live nonetheless prefer the present state of probation to a "normalization" which would be carried out by Soviet tanks and tanks from fraternal countries. Even opposition activists are not seeking such a confrontation. But the fact remains that the leaders of largely spontaneous movements like that now affecting most enterprises in the Gdansk region could lose control over it at any moment. The smallest provocation could be sufficient to bring this about. And, finally, Gierek's promises are far from exciting--they have been made to the workers for years and, in view of the fact that any wage increases have rapidly been nibbled at by inflation, many workers no longer believe in them. The stance which the Catholic hierarchy, which has remained surprisingly silent in this affair as if it were keeping itself in reserve as the last resort, will adopt is the only unknown quantity in the present situation.

TRADE UNIONS EXPRESS SOLIDARITY WITH POLISH STRIKERS

LD192054 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Excerpt] In Italy solidarity with the striking Polish workers and farmers has been expressed by the United Trade Union Federation composed of the Italian General Confederation of Labor-Italian Confederation of Workers Unions-Italian Union of Labor; the Autonomous Trade Unions Italian Confederation of National Unions of Workers; the Italian Federation of Autonomous State Railway Trade Unions, FISAFS; and the Christian Workers Association. In an article to be published in tomorrow's IL POPOLO, Secretary of the Christian Democratic Party Piccoli criticizes the stance of the Italian Communists concerning the Polish crisis expressed in an article by director of L'UNITA Reichlin. It is necessary, Piccoli writes, to investigate thoroughtly the crux of the problem--i.e. the Polish political system. The Christian Democracy secretary concludes that the crisis of real socialism represents a blow to the proposed third road--i.e. Italian communism. Puletti, deputy secretary of the Social Democratic Party, has asked for an urgent meeting of the federation of European socialist parties.

Planned Visit by Delegation

LD201756 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] An Italian trade union delegation will most probably leave for Poland the day after tomorrow in order to evaluate the on-the-spot situation and to express to the Polish workers and workers' defense committees the concrete and militant solidarity of the Italian trade union movement and workers. The initiative has been proposed by the CISL [Italian Confederation of Labor Unions] and has already been accepted by the UIL [Italian Union of Labor]. The decision of the CGIL is expected tomorrow. Tomorrow morning the CGIL will hold a meeting with representatives of the other two trade union confederations.

PAJETTA COMMENTS ON POLISH SITUATION, PROBLEMS IN ITALY

[Unattributed report on PCI Directorate member Gian Carlo Pajetta 17 August speech at L'UNITA festival in Montecatini: "Just Solution in Dialogue"]

[Text] Montecatini--Speaking in Montecatini at the end of the L'UNITA festival, Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta referred to events in Poland. Pajetta said among other things, we cannot be pleased to observe a world crisis that is also affecting a socialist country, increasing acute tensions and highlighting serious difficulties of involvement and participation on the part of the very workers who declare that they do want to live--and live better--within socialism.

We hope, Pajetta continued, that a solution will soon be found. We note that the strikes have not caused and have not as yet permitted the kind of eruptions to occur which in the past have sometimes proved tragic. It is a fact that the Polish Government and Communist Party [as published] have not condemned the strikers as enemies or denied the objective reasons for their unrest.

Not Merely an Idyll

For some time now, he added, we have known and been saying that there are no borders beyond which everything is purely idyllic. We want to be sure that beyond the socialist countries' borders there exist the shared responsibilities and hard work whereby everyone does his duty with freedom and justice.

Next Pajetta discussed the problems regarding the political situation in our own country. This is a difficult situation, he said, with prospects of a deterioration in the months ahead. The danger of alarmism is a serious one if it conceals or suppresses the demonstrations of democratic life which millions of Italians give every day in their political struggle and trade union resistance, just as in their concerned yet calm meetings together at our rallies, such as this one.

But while alarmism is dangerous, Pajetta continued, so too is concealing or minimizing a situation which demands prompt and effective measures. It is not true that it only rains under a bad government and we have never used this old proverb as a party watchword. But to accuse us of watching the barometer with concern simply because we are in opposition is not only ridiculous but could be seriously damaging to everyone at a time such as this.

Italy does not want to decline, neither do the Italians want to let themselves be dragged into the storm without putting up a struggle. But this does not mean that we can close our eyes or accept the lure of inurement, forgoing an uncompromising condemnation merely to avoid distrubing the vacations or the government's first few months of very unsuccessful apprenticeship.

At present, Pajetta continued, people are naturally still talking about the Bologna massacre and the latest victims. The Mayor of Castelvetrano had to be mentioned. But some columnists have told readers not to worry too much about the three carabineers who died in Viterbo because it is not known whether they were the victims of common criminals or terrorists. Perhaps because they caused no deaths, the high-powered bomb which exploded in the Orgosolo police station or the one detonated under the relay antennae on Elba do not seem to have set in motion the state security apparatus, whose staff is perhaps depleted because of the summer season. But all this is known and we are not saying it merely to fulfil our opposition role. Does not all this demand a new and different form of intervention?

Instead, Pajetta said, we have to settle for a polemic in which there is not lack of allusions that only to the experts can comprehend--between the transport minister calling for an extraordinary Council of Ministers meeting as soon as the weather cools and the industry minister, calling for a verification of the newly published program. Today we heard some empty remarks from [Defense Minister] Lagori who, following the Olympic successes, wants to reassure us by stating that he is almost--but only almost--confident about the services that should guarantee the Italian people's security. Meanwhile, Pajetta added, the Fiat workers have left on vacation with their minds on the crisis in the automobile industry and wondering whether the specter of redundancy will appear, while workers in the state-owned industries are being told that the crisis is affecting that area too and that the president of the industrial reconstruction institute cannot give them more than a few consolatory promises or the time being.

We urge all the democratic forces to reflect and all Italians to reflect and struggle; but what are the others doing--the people who so glibly accuse us one day of being prophets of doom and the next of having broken the national unity--and what do they want? It is not a matter of haggling over a mayor, of asking us to maintain an indulgent silence or asking the trade unions to behave themselves. It is a matter of knowing and saying what you want.

Is it possible, Pajetta asked, that all that one Christian Democratic deputy, De Mita, had to do to bring his party secretary Piccoli's greatest excommunication down on his head, despite the dozen-or-so charges he leveled against us, was to say that it might even be possible to consider the hypothesis of a possible form of government cooperation with the communists?

National Unity

This is the kind of crazy reply we have been receiving to our calls for responsibility--a responsibility which, as far as we are concerned, we have never tried to and are not now trying to evade. We want national unity, the kind which inspired the helpers in Bologna, ranging from the railroad worker to the doctor, from the nurse to the unpaid official and from the policeman to the Communists criticized even for insuring order in that anger- and rage-filled square.

But we have smashed the network of deception; we want the Italian people to see through the veil of false hopes which have been presented to them by this government. We have done so, Pajetta concluded, in the name of a joint blueprint and of joint action, for the sake of a path which we believe must still be pursued. Prohibitions, bans and anti-communism at any price are being rejected by an ever-increasing number of Italians, irrespective of how they voted.

20 Aug Comments

[Excerpts] Rome, 21 Aug (ANSA)--Labor unrest and spreading work stoppages in Poland shaping up as a challenge to the nation's communist government continue to dominate political debate in Italy. Communist party official Gian Carlo Pajetta, speaking yesterday in Siena, told his audience that, "the news arriving from Poland, a source of serious concern, poses a series of problems for communists in countries in which they are in power and also for us and all workers". The spokesman for the big opposition party identified these problems as those requiring "deep study and audacity for finding adequate responses to the objective difficulties and the needs advanced by the workers in the struggle, problems connected to couageous recovery and the quick correction of mistakes".

Addressing himself to the Polish strikers' demands for the recognition of free trade unions, Pajetta declared, "we want to say, unequivocally, that if these liberties are to be defended here, for conducting the class struggle in a socialist society which has abolished classes and in which privilages should not exist, all liberties. including those of labor unions and the right to strike, must be strongly uplifted to guarantee the rational development of society, to allow mistakes to be corrected, to obtain from everyone his own share of work and corresponsibility".

After affirming that the working class must be considered a valid partner for dialogue and that the Polish workers must seek out "those who will listen to them," the Communist Party official said that events in Poland, "require further development, a definition of prospects which we know will not be easy".

Giuseppe Amadei, a member of the steering committee of the small Social Democrat Party, in the opposition, delivered a statement recommending that, "the caution of Western diplomacy" should be replaced by "the non-caution of the trade union headquarters patterned on the Italian Labor Federation which, in its first communique, expressed solidarity and raised a protest without entering into the heart of the problem, which is political".

GOVERNMENT EXPELS FOUR SOVIET DIPLOMATS FOR 'INTERFERENCE'

LD210132 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Excerpts] An official note issued this afternoon by the presidency of the Council of Ministers and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs said that the Council of Ministers, in its meeting on 20 August had decided according to Article 9 of the 1961 Vienna convention on diplomatic relations to declare as personae non gratae for interference in internal Portuguese affairs the following diplomats attached to the Soviet Embassy in Lisbon: Vladimir Konyaev, Aleksandr Kulagin, Albert Matveev and Yuriy Semenychev. [Paris AFP in English at 1839 GMT on 20 August reports that "Matveev, a minister counsellor, is the second ranked diplomat at the Soviet Embassy here," and that Yuriy Semenychev is "the KGB head for Portugal."] The note ends by saying that the said diplomats have been given 5 days to leave Portuguese territory.

ANOP reported later on that the diplomats involved were a minister counsellor, and embassy attache, an assistant naval attache, and an assistant to the military attache.

We contacted various sources close to the present government who told us that the government is in possession of indisputable proof of the accusations leveled against the Soviet diplomats which were the basis for the decision now taken. We were also told that the Soviet Ambassdor to Lisbon was called to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and informed of the government's decision.

One of our sources said that espionage was involved. This is exactly the word he used. We asked what kind of espionage: military, political, economic, activities in the agrarian reform area? Our source cautiously pointed to the agrarian reform area but firmly refused to give any more details.

This is what we have been able to discover. Anything more to come, if there is anything more, will have to come from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

POLITICAL, LABOR GROUPS SUPPORT POLISH STRIKERS

LD201734 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Excerpt] The Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy, UEDS, yesterday expressed its support and solidarity with the striking Polish workers. In a communique it described the current strike movement in Poland as an expression of the Polish workers' wish freely and actively to participate in the construction of a socialist society.

Apart from the pay demands, the UEDS regards the other demands, some 16 of which are political, as reflecting just aspirations.

Also with regard to the labor unrest in Poland, the CGTP [General Federation of Portuguese Workers]-Intersindical yesterday describes the Polish workers' demands as just. In a communique in which the word strike is never used, the CGTP-Intersindical warns against the designs of those bent on fostering division among the Polish people.

FOREIGN OFFICE 'DEPLORES' USSR JAMMING OF BBC

LD201904 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1853 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] The Soviet Union today jammed BBC programmes into the country during a news bulletin including details of the unrest in Poland. All six BBC frequencies into the Soviet Union were blocked this afternoon for the first time since 1973.

The jamming was "deplored" by the Foreign Office, which said it was inconsistent with the Soviet Union's commitment to the Helsinki Agreement, allowing freedom of broadcasts by its signatories.

Meanwhile, the BBC, whose programmes to the Soviet Union are put out by external services, was trying to find alternative means of broadcasting to the country.

Mr Gerals Mansell, managing director of external services, said: "The resumption of jamming can only be regarded as an admission of weakness by the Soviet authorities." He added that there was little doubt that the Russians were deeply concerned about the possible "contagious effect" in their country of news of events in Poland.

UNION DELEGATION TO PROCEED WITH POLISH VISIT

LD201826 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1726 GMT 20 Aug 80

[By Ken Dennis, PA chief industrial correspondent]

[Excerpts] 20 Aug--A TUC [Trades Union Congress] visit to crisis-torn Poland is to go ahead--despite opposition from four powerful trade union leaders. And tonight the head of Britain's second largest union condemned today's General Council decision to send a five-man delegation next month.

Mr Terry Duffy, president of the giant Engineering Union, said: "I believe that the visit of the British TUC more or less condones what they are doing there. I am particularly opposed to a visit during this crisis. I think it gives credibility to people who are trying to prevent trade unionists having the same democratic rights that we have in this country. I believe visits to communist countries like that give credibility to their regimes."

Mr Duffy, who turned down a place on the delegation, was joined in his opposition by electricians' leader Frank Chapple, Mr Tom Jackson of the Postman's Union and miners' leader Lawrence Daly. The team will be headed by Mr David Bansett, general secretary of the General and Municipal Workers Union.

Mr Len Murray, TUC general secretary, said the council was naturally sympathetic with the wishes and attempts of working people in any country to establish their own strong and independent trade unions and that governments should respond to this. The delegation expected to meet representatives of the workers at the plants they visited and to learn at first hand about developments in Poland. He refused to be drawn over criticisms by Tory MPs that British union leaders were not voicing their support for the Polish strikers. "I am always reluctant to draw analogies between countries. We realise that trade union growth and development must reflect the circumstances of the country", he said.

Mr Basnett said the group would ask its hosts--the Central Council for Polish trade unions--if it could meet the unofficial strike committees.

GOVERNMENT WILL NOT REPLY TO LATEST DENKTAS ALLEGATIONS

NC201604 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] An official announcement states that Foreign Minister Rolandhis today i ed instructions to the republic's acting permanent representative at the United Nations, Mr Sierifis, to inform UN Secretary General Waldheim that the Cyprus Government does not intend to reply to Mr Denktas' latest letter to Mr Waldheim. In this letter, which was released for publication yesterday, Mr Denktas repeats the well-known unfounded charges of Turkish propaganda about the alleged plans of the government and the Greek Cypriot community to exterminate the Turkish Cypriots. The Cyprus Government, for its part, adds the announcement, notes that the launching of charges of this nature at this moment does not contribute to the creation of a suitable climate for the successful resumption and continuation of the talks. That is why the government will ignore Mr Denktas' allegations, confirming itself only to pointing out that these are unfounded. The official announcement concludes by stating that Mr Rolandhis has instructed Mr Sierifis to repeat to Mr Waldheim the complete support and attachment of the Cyprus government to the process of the dialogue.

EDEK LEADER SAYS TALKS 'BOUND TO FAIL' OVER BIZONALITY

[Text] Socialist EDEK Party leader Dr Vassos Lissaridhis said yesterday that the inter-communal talks were bound to fail because of the advance acceptance of bizonality.

He suggested that the right course for Cyprus would be a national liberation struggle along the lines of Vietnam, Angola and Palestine.

Dr Lissaridhis claimed that his party alone could save the country from both the national dangers and economic collapse.

He insisted that those who favoured concessions misrepresent the Makarios line. The collapse of the talks would not be due to the refusal of the victim to sign his own death sentence but because of the insistence of the criminal to have his crime legalised.

Dr Lissaridhis attacked both the AKEL, without naming it, and the "oligarchy".

He said present policies made the rich richer and the poor poorer and the people would soon face a problem of "heating" and "feeding".

Dr Lissaridhis said his party held out the promise of change and added that the rally too promises changes but it would be changes for the worse, at the exprese of the people.

GROUP OF HOUSE MEMBERS TO SEEK EARLY ELECTIONS

NC210740 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 21 Aug 80 p 1

[Excerpt] A group of House of Representatives members will move to seek the dissolution of the house before its usual term expires. The group will submit a document during the first house meetings and suggest that the House members submit their resignation to enable early parliamentary elections. In the event that this move by the House members succeeds, it will bring about new developments on the internal front and will step up the election campaign by the political parties because in such a case early elections will be proclaimed. According to the constitution the House can dissolve itself, provided that there is a majority decision by House members, that is by 18 members. In such a case elections will have to be held about 1 month after the decision on the dissolution. The group of House members behind this movement has already made a number of contacts and will seek more such contacts with other House members in an effort to secure the necessary majority for the dissolution of the House.

'FRICTION POINTS' REMAIN IN ECONOMIC AGREEMENTS WITH USSR

AT191324 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 19 Aug 80 pp 1, 13

[Text] A new 5-year agreement for economic and commercial cooperation between Greece and the Soviet Union (providing for the abolition of clearing) will be signed next month. The agreement is expected to contribute to expanding bilateral cooperation through additional relevant agreements and to reaching a solution to outstanding bilateral issues.

In the immediate future Greek-Soviet relations will experience intense activity which will be expressed by the visit of a Greek state mission to Moscow at the end of August and the visit of Soviet officials to Athens on 22 September, following the meeting of top officials of public organizations and businesses and representatives of Greek chambers at the Ministry of Coordination next Thursday.

The object of the talks will be the signing of a new bilateral agreement for economic and commercial cooperation and its period of validity about which, however, some differences of opinion have been noted.

Thus, the Soviet side recently submitted a plan for a 10-year agreement while the Greek Government is prepared to sign a 5-year agreement.

In addition, the Soviet plan envisages the expansion of cooperation to the entrepreneurial sector (establishment of an alumina factory and export of part of the production to the Soviet Union), whereas the Greek Government wants an agreement in principle on the basis of which relevant agreements will be prepared.

The Greek Government is still studying Soviet proposals for the alumina plant, examining whether such a plant is "viable" in Greece and can guarantee the sales of its product "on a permanent basis" to the Soviet Union and to other socialist countries through long-term contracts. It also seems that the use of Greek bauxite (the raw material for the production of alumina) and the number of technical advisers who will establish themselves on Greek soil constitute a point of "friction" for both sides.

In any case, after next Thursday the final formulation of the Greek "negotiating" positions will take place and it will be based on the final recommendation which ministry officials will submit to the responsible ministers.

Another "friction" point is the outstanding issue of the supply of electricity to Greece. As is well known the Soviet Union supplies "evening" electricity while Greece also wants electricity to be guaranteed in the morning.

Finally, the oil issue no longer "casts its shadow" over Greek-Soviet relations, according to a statement by a responsible source.

In any case, a government source yesterday felt the need to recall that "similar agreements (to the Greek-Soviet one) have already been made with other Eastern countries like Yugoslavia, Poland, and Czechoslovakia and will be signed with other countries with which exchanges are settled through clearing. These agreements will take effect on 1 January 1981, that is, immediately after our country's accession to the EEC."

It should be noted that after the period of agreement (which will be fixed) has expired, a new agreement between Greece and the Soviet Union will not be permissible, but only an agreement between the EEC (of which Greece will be a member) and the Soviet Union.

GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON ATTEMPT TO KILL PLO REPRESENTATIVE

TA201747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] The Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General has issued a statement in connection with reports that an attempt has been made to assassinate the PLO representative in Ankara. The statement says that the PLO representative in Ankara contacted a pertinent official of the Foreign Ministry at 1800 on 10 August and requested a meeting. The meeting was held a half hour later.

The statement continues: During the meeting the representative said that Ziyad Saqiti, a Palestinian living in Jerusalem who arrived in Ankara via Athens, arrived at the PLO representation on 9 August; that he aroused suspicion; that, therefore, he was interrogated by officials in the representation; and that during his interrogation the person in question confessed that he had been ordered by Israeli agents to kill the PLO representative and that he had arrived in Turkey for this purpose. The representative then said that a mutual oath was taken on the Koran that Saqiti, who was frightened and repentent, was to be safely sent to Beirut and to be handed over to the PLO. He added that the person in question was kept at the representation of his own will.

Noting that the representative also requested that urgent additional security measures be taken around the representation, the statement adds: The representative has also unofficially requested that the personal security of Saqiti, who will leave for Beirut, be insured on route from the representation to the Esenboga Airport. The request in connection with the security of the representation was submitted to the pertinent security authorities the same evening, and the necessary additional security measures were immediately taken. The statement points out that the situation was reassessed at the second meeting between Foreign Ministry officials and the PLO representative on 11 August. Noting that the representative was informed at the second meeting that the unofficial request for the personal security of Saqiti would be fulfilled in light of additional information, the statement adds that the pertinent security authorities were contacted in connection with the necessary measures.

The statement further says: The PLO representative's recourse is not a denunciation, and it is not a complaint that requires intervention. Under the circumstances, the complete and prompt fulfillment of the representative's requests has been considered sufficient. The incident is being fully investigated due to the contradictatory way in which the incident was reported to the public.

ECEVIT CALLS GOVERNMENT 'ACCOMPLICE' OF RIGHTIST TERRORISTS

TA170457 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 16 Aug 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that the government considers the oppression and obscurity of fascism as an acceptable way to secure tranquillity.

In a news conference at RPP headquarters today, Ecevit said that the reports recently published in certain newspapers clarified the sources and nature of terrorism in Turkey with all its organizational and political connections. Ecevit noted that rightist terrorists are being encouraged by the government and are, in certain provinces, replacing the government. He said: However, the government is not displeased with this situation. On the contrary, the new interior minister is able to claim that peace and tranquillity prevail in those provinces.

Pointing out that the escalation of terrorism perpetrated by the rightists is encouraging and inciting the terrorism by extreme leftists, Ecevit explained that this incitement sometimes takes the form of actions perpetrated by rightists pretending to be leftists. Ecevit noted that, following reports published in newspapers, the judicial organs and the armed forces are fulfilling their duties but that the government, on the other hand, is not only remaining silent in the face of this situation but is also trying to keep the facts secret. Ecevit said: Actually, this government cannot be expected to act in any other manner, because it is surviving through the support of those who are organizing rightist terrorism. The JP organization is also being surrendered to them in some places. Certain JP administrators and members are saying this themselves.

Noting that the RPP's comments for years concerning terrorism are now being clarified in the press and through martial law court decisions, Ecevit said: It is now clear that the JP Government led by Demirel is the accomplice of rightist activists and is indirectly responsible for the escalation in leftist actions. Claiming that unless these accounts are settled, Turkey will not be able to become healthy, Ecevit said that important responsibilities fall on the judiciary, the civil servants, certain state organizations that are not directly pressured by the government and on the parliament and the opposition.

In his news conference, Ecevit then replied to reporters' questions. In reply to a question, Ecevit noted that his party is continuously alerting the public on how terrorism in Turkey is developing and mounting and is trying to fulfill its democratic supervisory duty in the parliament on this subject. Noting that the parliament has, for the past 5 months, lost its ability to function due to government obstruction, Ecevit said that, despite this, his party will do its best to restore the parliament's supervisory function.

In reply to a question on early elections, Ecevit noted: Neither early elections nor elections at the correct time can be held democratically under this government. Actually, all the schemes of the JP government and all its connection with terrorism have been exposed and the people are opposing this in many ways. Alarmed by this, the JP government is seeking an escape route. The early election flurry is an indication of a search for a way out. Ecevit also noted that the JP is trying to take refuge in early elections as soon as possible before the more painful consequences of the deterioration in the economy--due to the economic model it is implementing--become apparent.

In reply to a question, Ecevit said that if there is another appeal by the acting president to hold another meeting at the Cankaya Mansion, he will inquire about the agenda of the proposed meeting. He added that the first item on the agenda of such a meeting should be the issue of presidential elections.

GOVERNMENT ABOLISHES STATE MINISTRY FORMERLY DIRECTED BY EREN

TA201115 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] The State Ministry, which became vacant following the appointment of Orhan Eren as the interior minister, has been abolished. The decision on this subject was published in the official gazette today. The abolished State Ministry was being managed by another state minister, Koksal Toptan, in an acting capacity.

KREISKY TERMS POLISH STRIKES 'DEVASTATING' FOR COMMUNISTS

AU210830 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 21 Aug 80 p 3

[Text] Wherever workers and employees are waging a struggle such as that currently being waged in Poland, the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] must stand at their side. This was declared by Chancellor Kreisky on Wednesday [in Vienna] in his capacity as SPOe chairman. The party attaches tremendous importance to this movement. It is a downright devastating event for the communists in Europe, Kreisky said. He stressed that he regarded the events in Poland as just as important as the events of 1956 in Hungary and those of 1968 in the CSSR. The fear that tanks may again begin to roll against a country's own people cannot be brushed aside, he said.

CABINET APPROVES LOAN FOR POLISH COAL EXPORTS

[Excerpt] The Austrian Cabinet, which held a meeting yesterday [20 August] under the chairmanship of Chancellor Kreisky, approved a government draft bill providing for guarantees for a $300 million loan by an Austrian bank consortium to the Polish "Weglokoks" coal exporting agency.

The granting of this loan is a condition contained in the long-term coal delivery contract concluded between the Austrian coal importers (DKG, Newag and Stewag) and "Weglokoks," which provides for the delivery as of 1984 of a total quantity of 20 million tons of Polish hard coal as fuel for the new power plants to be put into operation as substitutes for the Zwentendorf nuclear power plant.

GDR TRADE COUNSELOR EXPRESSES HOPES FOR HONECKER VISIT

AU201502 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 20 Aug 80 p 2

[Summary] "Positive effects on the further development of the good economic relations between Austria and the GDR are expected by Heinz Stahl, GDR trade counselor in Austria, in connection with the official visit to Austria of GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker which is scheduled for November. This will be Honecker's first official visit to a West European country."

According to Stahl, negotiations between Austrian and GDR companies are currently underway on further large projects. Two large orders worth 1.7 billion schillings were placed with the Voest-Alpine Corporation during the past 6 months. Austrian exports to the GDR expanded nearly 60 percent while its imports from the GDR increased only 45-50 percent, Stahl said, adding that in the long run the GDR deficit in trade with Austria would have to be reduced through an expansion of GDR exports. "To this end, he said, it would be necessary to gradually eliminate such 'obstructing factors' as tariff burdens and the Austrian import authorization system [vidierungsverfahren]."

Stahl gave his press conference on the occasion of the forthcoming Leipzig fall fair where Austria will be represented this year by about 100 firms and a total of 3,434 square meters of exhibition space. Thus Austria will be the second biggest Western exhibitor—behind the FRG—at this year's Leipzig fall fair.

SCHMIDT CANCELS GDR VISIT; CITES EVENTS IN EUROPE

LD221342 Hamburg DPA in German 1333 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] Hamburg, 22 Aug (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has canceled the meeting with GDR leader Erich Honecker planned for next week. Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling told journalists here today in a statement following a 4-hour meeting in Hamburg that the latest events in Europe did not indicate a meeting at the present time as suitable.

FRG'S MOSCOW EMBASSY TO REQUEST EXPLANATION FOR DW JAMMING

LD221048 Hamburg DPA in German 1026 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 22 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Genscher has instructed the Federal Republic's Embassy in Moscow to make representations to the Soviet authorities in connection with the jamming of Deutsche Welle [DW] broadcasts. This was announced by Sudhoff, a Foreign Ministry spokesman, at a news conference in Bonn today.

According to Sudhoff the Soviets will be asked to explain their motives for jamming these broadcasts. At the same time attention will be drawn to the Helsinki Final Act which does not permit such interference.

Government 'Regret'

LD211636 Hamburg DPA in German 1506 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Hamburg--The Federal Government has expressed regret at the jamming by the Soviet Government of Deutsche Welle's Russian-language broadcasts. The jamming of Deutsche Welle, the BBC and the Voice of America, which is probably connected with the strikes in Poland, continued today. A Foreign Ministry spokesman in Bonn said the jamming was contrary to the Helsinki Final Act on the exchange of information.

In the Soviet Union, the Russian-language programs of Western radio stations have been the main source of information about the strikes. Apart from a report on a speech by Polish party leader Edward Gierek, in which work stoppages were also mentioned, there have so far been no Soviet reports on events in Poland.

Deutsche Welle announced in Kiel today that its director general, Conrad Ahlers, has asked the Foreign Ministry to look into all possible ways of achieving an end to the jamming by diplomatic means. In an interview for BUILD-ZEITUNG, Ahlers said he was convinced that the Soviet Union was afraid "of the strikes in Poland spreading to the Soviet Union. It wants to limit all possible ways for the Soviet population of learning about the unrest among Polish workers."

Commentary on Jamming

[Commentary signed Me.: "Airwave Pollution"]

[Text] The states participating in the famous Helsinki Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe 5 years ago called for the "expansion in the dissemination of information by radio broadcasts"; at the same time they expressed the "hope for the continuation of this process." But since Wednesday afternoon the Soviet leadership again has jammed the Russian-language broadcasts of the Voice of America, the British Broadcasting Corporation, and the Cologne Deutsche Welle to prevent the Soviet people from learning about the Polish strike situation. So far the British Foreign Office and a spokesman of the Foreign Ministry in Bonn have regretted the resumption of jamming and at the same time termed it incompatible with the Helsinki Final Act. Will Western signatories of the Final Act muster the courage to discuss the subject at their November meeting in Madrid? The Soviet Union should be publicly exposed at the followup meeting to the Helsinki conference for its misdemeanor--deprivation of information with simultaneous airwave pollution.

GENSCHER HOPES FOR PEACEFUL SOLUTION TO POLISH PROBLEMS

LD211534 Hamburg DPA in German 1737 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 21 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has expressed the hope that it will be possible to find a nonviolent and peaceful solution to the current situation in Poland. In an interview with STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG (Friday's edition), Genscher stressed that Bonn agrees with its American friends that there should be no hesitation if economic aid could help achieve this, and that the Germans feel a special bond with the Polish people which has been strengthened even more as a result of the terrible events of the past. Genscher will discuss the situation in Poland, among other things, with his U.S. counterpart Edmund Muskie when they meet in Washington on Tuesday.

TRAVEL COMPANIES CANCEL POLISH TOURS FOR SUMMER

LD220844 Hamburg DPA in German 0755 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Summary] Hanover--Two of the big travel firms in the Federal Republic which arrange trips to Poland, Hummel and Dr Tigges, have cancelled all Polish tours for the remainder of this summer season. On Sunday a train will leave Hanover without passengers for Gdansk to fetch back vacationers. At present approximately 850 citizens of the Federal Republic who have booked with the two firms are in Poland.

TANJUG INTERVIEWS GENSCHER ON MADRID CSCE SESSION

LD211038 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0954 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 21 Aug (TANJUG)--Federal Republic of Germany Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has stated to TANJUG that he expects of the Madrid session of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe "an open discussion on the causes of the present international tensions and on further decisions to eliminate the tensions."

Genscher said that the Federal Republic is determined to continue along the road paved in Helsinki.

"We want Madrid to give equal attention to all three baskets," Genscher said and offered support to the proposal on holding a conference on disarmament in Europe.

Referring to the inter-relation between Europe and the Mediterranean, Genscher set out that without "political stability, economic and social progress in the Mediterranean region no lasting peace and progress is possible in Europe." Proceeding from this, the Federal Republic of Germany urges, particularly within the European Community, dialogue and the development of cooperation between Europe and the Mediterranean as a whole and not only the Arab countries, Genscher set out.

The Federal Republic foreign minister assessed as positive the growing importance of the non-aligned movement for stability in the world and a peaceful solution of conflicts. Stressing that Yugoslavia, as one of the European non-aligned and neutral countries, played at the European conference Belgrade meeting a major role in the struggle for preserving detente, Minister Genscher expressed the hope that Yugoslavia will play an equal role in Madrid.

LAMBSDORFF REVIEWS BUSINESS WITH CHINA

[Fides Krause-Brewer interview with Federal Economic Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] In reviewing the results of your visit [to the PRC], would not you be inclined now to be a bit more receptive to complying with the Chinese wishes for inexpensive credits, especially since we will only get the greatly desired raw materials if we supply the installations and we need orders for these installations.

[Answer] On this very point, the insurance of the raw material supply for the German economy, I had the opportunity to explain to the Chinese that we have a better or, as far as they are concerned, a more gratifying export-promotion instrument, namely the granting of guarantees.

As far as low-interest credits are concerned, which the Federal Government never grants barring a few exceptions, I had no choice but to make it clear to the Chinese that we are neither able nor willing to treat them any differently than other countries. Involved, naturally, is the fact that China in the meantime has become a recognized developing country. One could then speak about capital assistance, that is cheap credits from public means, but these would have to be withdrawn from others to whom we had promised them first. Naturally we cannot do that. Moreover the whole world has agreed to give them to the poorest developing countries, among which fortunately the Chinese do not belong.

It cannot be said at the moment whether this will change in the foreseeable future to China's advantage. I would not consider creating such expectations now as very sensible, and I have been careful not to do that.

MINISTER APEL VIEWS COST OF NEW WEAPONS SYSTEMS

DW211018 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Werner Schawer interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel--place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The Bundeswehr is undergoing a modernization phase which will eat up more than DM55 billion all told.

[Answer] We have always had price hikes, especially as a result of the fact that we are developing new materiel to a great extent which is particularly susceptible to price increases. The second reason is this: If you produce internationally, jointly with the Italians, the French, the British, all of whom have higher inflation rates than we have, then this has some effect on our country as well. But if we take a look at the problem of the Tornado system, which does concern me indeed, then all this is kept within limits to be sure.

[Question] Will the large projects such as the construction of the frigates and the Tornado cause other weapons systems, which should be procured as well, to be shelved?

[Answer] Well, what we have ordered is the great renewal of the Bundeswehr. This remains financially feasible though there will be some sacrifice to be made. At the moment I cannot tell you more because we will draft the 1981 budget only after the Bundestag elections. Only then will I know exactly what funds we will have. But one fact remains with absolute certainty: The Starfighter costs DM15 million per unit, the Tornado costs nearly DM70 million a unit. This cannot go on like this; this cannot be financed anymore in the nineties. We need therefore at the beginning of the next legislative period a rigorous inventory which will make the weapons system affordable in the future also. The burden on the taxpayer has its limits.

EXPERT SEES DENMARK NATO CONTRIBUTION AS SYMPTOMATIC

[Adelbert Weinstein article: "Demonstrated by the Example of Denmark"]

[Text] Brussels, in August--Denmark is meeting NATO's ire with calm. The Jorgensen government's refusal to make good the commitment undertaken in Washington in May 1977 to jack up the financial contribution toward common security by a real 3 percent is meeting with the acclamation of the small nation. The laconic statement by an official in Copenhagen truly reflects the feelings of the people: Certainly Denmark's per-capita payment into the NATO treasury is smaller than those of the others, yet by the many square kilometers of land it makes available to the alliance it contributes more to the security of NATO than many other allies. This is a willful way of interpreting partnership. But strategically viewed this interpretation is not even wrong. The armed forces which the Danes can muster are insignificant. Their value is not highly assessed by the politicians of the country. Mogens Glistrup, whose Progress Party represents roughly 11 percent of the voters, already had suggested years ago making special preparations for "the event of the event." Loudspeakers should be set up along the borders, and a tape recorder should declare in Russian: "We Surrender."

This cynicism can be comprehended only if viewed against the background of the perfect welfare state into which Denmark has gradually but steadily developed. The Danes are well off, and they do not wish to see this reality changed. Allegedly they are even paying without a grumble--as the government claims--the roughly 30 percent taxation which they have to pay. In return they have free medical treatment, educational freedom, children's bonuses, retirement support, and pensions. In the last fiscal year alone the public expenditures were increased by 4.5 percent. Naturally this state is in debt. The balance of payments, while still fully equalized in 1970, now shows a deficit of $17 billion. Hence austerity is indicated. And the government which has fallen in love with the welfare state uses the red pencil for cutting expenses where all socialist politicians start saving whenever the parliamentary power configuration allows them to do so: in the defense budget. Denmark has 11 parties, a fact which guarantees, according to what an expert on the situation said, that everything and nothing happens.

So the Danes erase their promise of jacking up their financial contribution to the alliance, but this refusal, which has the effect of a demonstration, actually is but the recognition of a fact long in existence. The Danes never endeavored to live up to the agreement to which all NATO states assented at the Atlantic spring conference in Washington. By their own estimates they had been considerably short of their promises already by the time of the last Brussels meeting, the rate having been minus 0.6 percent. A cynic has called this NATO policy "Denmarkization."

The formula is as unjust as it seems to be applicable. "Denmarkization" is not an individual case. It threatens to become a disease of the alliance. Belgium is not prepared either to increase financial contributions to the Atlantic security to a level of real 3 percent annually. The Belgians have a negative 2 percent level at present. Instead of making an increase, the Italians have also dropped to minus 1.4 percent. The Rome government, however, is at least prepared to make available 112 launching pads for the envisaged NATO equipment of cruise missiles. The Belgians, however, have not yet made a decision, and nobody has dared ask the Danes. The Portuguese and the Turks, on the other hand, have come close to "Denmarkization." They fully depend on the contributions of the other Atlantic allies. They do not pay anything. Their significance for the alliance consists only in their geostrategic situation.

And the heavyweights of the alliance? Are they examples as regards financial contributions? Certainly NATO has spent some $85 billion in 1979/80 for the armament and maintenance of the armed forces. The United States has made available $126 billion for security. This means that the united West together has paid $211 billion for defense. But the Soviet financial expenditures are considerably higher. The Soviet military budget consumes 11 to 18 percent of the gross national product; the American military budget 5.2 percent; the British 4.9; the French 4, and the German 3.3 percent. In past yars the Red Armed Forces have received $100 billion more than the American units.

The present financial expenditures of larger NATO states must be viewed against the background of these figures. As regards the increase of the defense budget by 3 percent annually, the balance looks as follows in reality: The Americans are best off. They are close to the aim of really increasing defense expenditures. According to their own calculations they have achieved 3.3 percent, but that result has been manipulated, despite an inflation rate of 18 percent, thus formally living up to the promise. In fact, however, the Americans are below the margin. The Federal Republic has reached 2.7 percent--a figure which has also been windowdressed. The Netherlands have achieved a cosmetically corrected 2.2 percent, and the Norwegians 2.4 percent. "Denmarkization" seems to be a virus.

EFFECT OF EUROPEAN POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS PREVIEWED

[Editorial by Brussels correspondent Erich Hauser: "European Signals"]

[Text] The traces created by the spectacular state visit of France's chief of state Valery Giscard d'Estaing to the Federal Republic in the second week of July seem to have vanished. What the Frenchman discussed with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schdmit has become known only vaguely. If one leaves out the economic situation, the Afghanistan problem which is hard to solve, and the hotbed of tensions in the Near East, two important fields remain: the future of the European Community and of NATO. The Bundestag elections in October will not bring about any significant changes in either. The result of the U.S. presidential elections at the same time, however, could become a grave test for NATO should the future U.S. Administration not find a way to new East-West negotiations. More decisive then would be the question--after the French presidential elections in May--what course will Paris follow?

No reason exists so far to doubt Giscard's reelection, which will be decisive for the future of the European Community. First, a reform of the Common Agricultural Policy will be set up for discussion, a reform demanded by London and in the meantime also by Bonn, as well as the financing of the Community, on which Paris so far has shown a flexible approach. Second, there is the basic question that has been brought up by Paris over and over again with the other partners: How do you want the Community to be, looser knit or welded together more strongly?

This question contains two fundamental problems: The Community of 10 (with Greece as of 1 January) threatens to become unable to make the quick decisions necessary because of the different economic standards of its members, a problem which is hard to handle. The British and Danish populaces' dislike of a "Common Market" would indicate some slackening. Such a division of the European Community into a core and a marginal community would call for completely new forms of organization and treaties, which would be almost impossible in view of the manifold treaty commitments of the European Community-vis-a-vis the rest of the world.

The other even more decisive problem is that a further welding together of the Community would be possible only through a political structure which will not permit any further exclusion of defense and security policies. When Giscard became president in 1974, he had studies worked out on a new French defense doctrine. He dropped it because a change seemed to be impossible to implement for domestic policy reasons. Influential French military personnel seek to get the subject moving time and again. The new, accurate Soviet medium-range missiles (SS-20 with three warheads each) basically require a defense policy reorientation of Western Europe as does the development of the neutron weapon pushed by France. Bonn and the West German public, but also the Benelux countries, have received the latter with amazing calm.

Thus the question become obvious whether Giscard d'Estaing will develop plans for a further development of the EC after his reelection, possibly in the light of the foreign policy then pursued by Washington. But then Giscard d'Estaing's utterances and actions in foreign policy during the past several years have been characterized by inconstancy and short-windedness rather than by great prospects, and his domestic policy antagonist Francois Mitterrand has not been the only one to note that.

What is striking is that a French planning commission study as well as publications by French military people and most recently utterances by journalist Alfred Grosser time and again involved the question of a "West European defense integration" but never a potential return of France to NATO. The idea of a "European (French-British) nuclear strike force and the problem that--as Grosser put it--the Federal Republic cannot be assigned any lesser role in a West European defense alliance though Bonn can at best contribute conventionally armed troops, crops up time and again with the same harmony in this context.

Signals of London's intentions are also forthcoming. The Thatcher government increasingly plans to work toward West European arms cooperation. The announced modernization of the British nuclear submarine fleet among other things was justified as a "contribution to the defense of Western Europe." But what matters to Margaret Thatcher first of all is bringing Great Britain into the game between Paris and Bonn again and to avoid being elbowed out of the EC. But it will depend on the outcome of the U.S. elections, last not least, whether anything will change in the structure of Western Europe.

PS' DELFAU CALLS FOR 'SOLIDARITY' WITH POLISH WORKERS

[Article by French Socialist Party National Secretary Gerard Delfau: "Solidarity"]

[Text] A Socialist official can--and, I believe, must--make three observations on and draw one practical conclusion from the events in Poland. The first observation concerns the nature of Eastern countries. These countries have nationalized most means of production and exchange. However, the state itself has been taken over by a parasitic bureaucratic caste. As a result, a class struggle is being waged and a forceful and real workers protest exists. In Poland, the latter, which is admirable, has been organized around slogans calling for economic improvement and the restoration of trade union liberties. It in no way calls in question the public nature of ownership but is directed against the totalitarian and oligarchic nature of the state. Thus in the final analysis the aim of these demands is to achieve a change in the state's structure with a view to ensuring more freedom and the participation of the masses. This would, in fact, be tantamount to a revolution which would bring about self-management, a path which we French Socialists want to open for our country.

The second observation concerns the intensity of the phenomenon of nationalism as a collective way to resist oppression. In fact one of the main features of the present events is the solidarity with the Polish workers shown by all sections of the country's community ranging from Catholic movements, which are so important in a country whose religion is identified with its identity, to dissident intellectuals led by Jacek Kuron. This is due to the fact that the working class is obviously the most militant section of a movement which includes and trascends it--the Polish national movement aimed at preserving the nation's existence. Even though the present Warsaw government is part of the Polish nation, it owes its existence solely to Soviet proximity and this, in fact, is what Premier Babiuch said on Friday night. However, let us not be too ready to condemn this man and his friends. Wishing to safeguard their country at any cost from the misfortune of direct Soviet occupation, they are attempting the impossible. In their own way, they also are patriots. And yet it is this Polish patriotism which could in case of need make the Soviets retreat, so true is it that "a united people will never be vanquished." Despite so many setbacks this unconquerable nation has never been completely vanquished.

The third observation is of an international order. It is quite clear that the Soviet empire--or rather the Russian empire, in fact--has again become entangled in the problem of its peripheral nationalities. Now any regime confronted with this kind of problem is bound to be sorely tempted by the idea of opting for a military solution despite the risks involved. Under the cover of a state of war certain steps can be taken to eliminate the opposition, create a de facto solidarity and draw from it a feeling of unity. Obviously for the time being these are merely possibilities. There can be no doubt that those Soviet leaders who lived through the terrible 1941-1945 war are sincerely committed to peace. But what will happen after they have gone? Certain statements have been far from reassuring. Much will depend on the moral force of the Soviet Union's interlocutors, especially its European interlocutors.

These observations lead to a practical conclusion: solidarity. The Polish workers' struggle directly concerns French Socialists. In essence, their plan is our plan and their struggle is our struggle. Now, at this juncture, we stand alone. In fact, nothing can be expected from a Giscard and a Poniatowski who are obviously as thick as thieves with the Soviet-Polish establishment. Or can anything be expected from the PCF as such--even though some of its activists have personally adopted a correct attitude--except slanders and abuse. After betraying the cause of people of the left in September 1977, the PCF leaders are now betraying internationalist solidarity in Afghanistan and working class solidarity in Poland. Consequently much depends on us since the weight of international opinion in this affair is considerable. Therefore, this is an appeal.

LE MONDE SEES 'UNENTHUSIASTIC' CARTER RENOMINATION

[Editorial: "Mr Carter's Bitter Victory"]

[Test] Mr Carter is decidedly better as a candidate than as a president. When emphasizing in his 14 August speech accepting the Democratic nomination at the New York convention the dangers which, according to him, the election of Mr Ronald Reagan would represent for America and the world, he displayed what is for him an uncommonly sure political touch.

Mr Carter, who rightly felt in 1976 that he should campaign against Washington in the name of honesty, simplicity and sincerity, fully realizes that he cannot repeat this operation. This time he has to take stock of the situation. To avoid such a dangerous exercises which could, furthermore, prove disappointing, can there be a better solution than to attack Mr Reagan's supposed "warmongering" and the Republicans' "egoism" in the economic sphere?

By making his fellow citizens shiver at the possibility of a third world war in the event of Mr Reagan's victory, Mr Carter has certainly touched a sensitive chord. The Republican candidate, who has hitherto shown scant interest in foreign policy, has occasionally made disturbing statements on the methods which he intends to use to counter any unilateral actions by the Soviets or their allies. For instance, he has suggested a sea blockade of Cuba in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Furthermore, he is unfortunately inclined to deny the reality of national and social struggles in the Third World, refusing to see anywhere anything but Moscow's hand.

However, Mr Reagan is not--or is no longer--the bogeyman which the outgoing President has persistently claimed he is. Since he became a candidate, he has been careful not to repeat any of the bellicose statements whose rhetoric appealed to him. Furthermore, it is not certain that adopting a firmer but less ambiguous and less fitful attitude by the United States would lead to any further deterioration in its relations with the USSR. The Soviets were put out of countenance by the strange mixture of lectures on human rights and large-scale nuclear disarmament plans which marked the initial months of Mr Carter's presidency. They say in it both duplicity and a certain weakness of character. They would probably be more cautious with respect to a Reagan administration. Furthermore, the Soviets remember that it is in the years when Mr Nixon, a Republican, was in the White House that they had their best relations ever with the United States. The Republicans' sometimes rather isolationist patriotism suits them better than the Democrats' interventionism based on moral considerations.

Nor was Mr Carter very convincing when he attacked his adversary's economic plans. For more than 1 year he has chosen to fight more forcibly against inflation than against unemployment and he has preferred to limit expenditure in the social sphere--while increasing the military budget to a certain extent--to trying to reduce the budget deficit. The blacks, Americans of Spanish origin and the misfits of American society have no reason to be pleased with the way in which Mr Carter, for whom they overwhelmingly voted in 1976, has conducted affairs.

Mr Carter has revealed an important aspect of his personality by praising Harry Truman, "a president who knew how to secure his reelection." He no longer inspires enthusiasm, as he did in 1976, in either his fellow citizens or even his supporters. He no longer has any message to convey. The New York convention has revealed that he is now merely an obligatory candidate adopted without enthusiasm with a view to preventing a catastrophic Democratic defeat in November.

TRADE UNIONS EXPRESS SUPPORT FOR POLISH STRIKERS

[Text] Rome, August 21 (ANSA)--Italy's three major labor organizations announced plans here today to send a delegation to Poland to express its solidarity with striking workers in the East European state. The three trade union centrals, joined under an umbrella confederation, also urged the Italian Government to promote a European Economic Community (EEC) move to ease Poland's tough economic situation. They also called on the European Union Confederation (CES) to take similar steps with community authorities.

The joint confederation held a leadership meeting in Rome today to decide what moves to take with respect to the ongoing wave of labor unrest in Poland. A communique issued after today's meeting disclosed that the confederation's solidarity with striking Polish workers as expressed in statement issued on August 18 needed "a continuity of initiative on a national level, through debates and consultations with rank-and-file structures, and the international level as well".

The union delegation will be sent to Poland to make contact with Warsaw authorities, Polish trade unions and striking workers and to express the concern of Italian workers for the situation there.

The nation's major union locals voiced overwhelming support for the confederation's decision today. The national leadership of the Metal Workers Union, the most powerful local in Italy, today confirmed its "full solidarity with the striking Polish workers".

The joint "CGIL-CISL-UIL" [Italian General Confederation of Labor-Italian Confederation of Labor Unions-Italian Union of Labor] telephone workers union also voiced solidarity for Polish workers and charged Warsaw government authorities of "isolating the city where the unrest is most vibrant from the rest of the world". A spokesman for the union disclosed today that it was impossible to make telephone contact between Italy and Gdansk as well as other Polish industrial cities.

The leadership of the Italian Health Workers Union aired the possibility today of starting a nationwide collection to help striking Polish workers.

"CISL" International Relations Office chief Emilio Gabaglio, who will most probably be a member of the union delegation going to Poland, disclosed today that the Italian labor envoys would like to have "the most extensive contacts possible with the Polish strike committees, the official union councils and Polish authorities".

L'UNITA Editorial on Strike

[Alfredo Reichlin editorial: "Our Exhortation"]

[Text] Events in Poland are taking a very serious turn. Judging from the still fragmentary information available to us, it does not seem to be a matter of a movement inspired by purely economic considerations. These are relevant and exert a weighty influence, expecially in a country, such as Poland, which emerged from the 1970 crisis (the deaths in Gdansk and the fall of Gomulka) with an option which, while just and bold, also involved some risks. This was an option taken by the new leadership group under Comrade Gierek to emerge from an economy fairly closed to the world market and to concentrate on new production investments, but more generally on a major effort to modernize, open up and dynamize society, so as to develop productivity and exports and to keep consumption high.

The oil crisis on the upheaval in the world economy have jeopardized this effort. Leaving aside political and social errors and weaknesses which we are not in a position to judge (but obviously a very high level of national consensus and extraordinary social discipline were needed), there remains the simple fact that no magic wand and no recipe--albeit socialist--could prevent a very serious drop in Poland's exchange rate. Like it or not, there is a worldwide economy and its crisis requires that the specific Polish production structure raise import prices much more than export prices. Thus the vast deficit and indebtedness with respect to both the USSR and the West, to which Warsaw now owes $20 billion. So we should not be too surprised by the economic difficulties or the social protest.

But is this all? The political significance of what is happening in Poland is evident. When large masses of workers mount such prolonged strikes and seem to be refusing to make their demands within the normal dialectic among factory representatives, party bodies and the state administration; when the movement embraces feelings, thrusts and ideas which reflect a critique of the political system as well as government methods; when there is talk of new trade unions, new political rights and freedom, it means that the crisis is a serious one and that some fundamental political problems have come to the surface.

In fact we are not very surprised. Our entire critical reflection on the experiences of real socialism and the entire significance of the Eurocommunist option and of the third way stem from the awareness of these unresolved problems. That is, from the fact that there is now a contrast between a social, economic and cultural development which could well be described as grand (compare Poland today with what Poland was like under the colonels) and a rigid political organization within a monstrous, all-embracing, and now asphyxial schema. It really is an excessively close-fitting garment for a body that has grown so much and within which there pulses a varied, multiform and pluralist society. And this is not the first time that this contrast has exploded, both in Poland and elsewhere. And some tragedies have still not healed.

But let us be clear: This does not vindicate the gravediggers of socialism, the whole world of hypocrites who, silent and contrite when presented with the tragedies of modern capitalism which are exploding every day (from Bolivia to Iran and the ghettoes of the Western metropolises,) joyously welcome the events in Poland. The meaning is quite different. It means that a socialist-type economy, especially once it has extricated itself from an emergency situation, isolation or the heroic take-off phase, cannot be directed solely from above. It means that in order to involve people in a productive and above all, creative, effort there must be a new development of democracy and participation and that not even the openness of an illuminated leadership group are enough. And this development must not be restricted solely to the party, to a party, moreover, which embodies the state and embraces everything within itself.

This is what we believe. But for this very reason let us be clear. As far as we are concerned it does not in the least mean returning to the harsh rules of the market economy, of labor as a commodity, of human alienation, of unemployment as a tool for social control, of class differentiation as a guarantee of the power of the wealthy over the poor. It means progress-progress along the path of democracy and socialism of a form of democracy which, in order to be such, needs socialism and a form of socialism which cannot govern without democracy.

We have no recipes which are valid for all countries and we do not intend to impose any. Our historicist, nondogmatic and nonideological view of socialism itself rules it out. But we do feel that history is moving in this direction. It must be encouraged to do so and it must not be hindered. The result would be disastrous: either repression or else freedom for what Gramsci called "fascist parliamentarianism." This phenomenon can be perceived in Poland: Suffice it to consider the de facto party constituted by the church and other de facto parties existing within society and the state.

But here, from this viewpoint, in events in Poland, we also find a new and positive sign, a hope. It is a fact, as [PCI directorate member] Pajetta has said, that the Polish Government and Communist Party [as published] have not condemned the strikers as enemies or denied the objective reasons for their unrest. What they have said is very important and full of meaning: "It is our duty to show that we are a country capable of independently resolving the most difficult problems, of surmounting our difficulties on our own." This is the sincere and heartfelt hope that we address to the Polish worker communists: But more than a hope it is an exhortation. We really do want to be sure that beyond the socialist countries' borders there exist the joint responsibility and commitment whereby everyone does his duty with freedom and justice.

However the events in Poland may end, they will not leave things as they were before, not only in the Eastern bloc but also in the West. It is unnecessary to point out what very grave international complications would occur if the outcome proved tragic. No responsible force can set its sights on this, and the attitude of Chancellor Schmidt and several Italian politicians is very significant. We are a long way from 1948 and even from the sixties. No responsible leftwing force in Europe can believe it can build its fortunes on a crisis in the Eastern bloc countries. This gives much cause for reflection because it shows that, after all, the new factor, despite the splits, the anathemas and ideological disputes, is that objective processes are under way, encouraging the various currents of the workers movement throughout Europe to acknowledge shared interests. But even if a positive and original political settlement is achieved, the consequences of the events in Poland will be great and, here again, not only for the Eastern bloc but also for the Western left and in particular for Eurocommunism.

CAPUCCI SEES POPE ON BEHALF OF IRANIAN STUDENTS

NC211702 Paris AFP in English 1654 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Text] Castelgandolfo, Italy, Aug 21 (AFP)--Melchite Archbishop Hilarion Capucci today intervened with Pope John Paul [II] on behalf of 22 Iranian students released from an Italian prison following a Saint Peters Square demonstration on August 8.

Msgr Capucci, who arrived specially from Tehran on Monday to try to solve the student problem, handed over a letter in which they said their aim had been to persuade the Vatican to adopt a firmer attitude towards the Palestinian people.

Msgr Capucci is expected to return on Saturday to Iran where he has been sent by the pope to mediate on behalf of clergy and Catholic schools in Iran, including priests accused of spying for Israel.

Contents of Students' Letter

AU201957 Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] Rome, 20 Aug (ANSA)--The Islamic Association of Iranian Students in Italy sent a letter to Pope John Paul II today asking the pontiff "what Jesus would have shouted against tyrants and oppressors of peoples such as the shah or the United States Government which assisted him in building and holding his throne over the corpses of hundreds of thousands of martyrs...

The letter, which will be delivered to the pope tomorrow by Msgr. Hilarion Capucci, explains the reasons why a group of Iranian students staged a demonstration in St. Peter's Square on August 8. The students were arrested for failing to identify themselves to Italian police. They were released from jail yesterday after a mediation effort by Monsignor Capucci.

The students say in the letter that after the Israeli parliament's decision "to make Jerusalem the 'eternal' capital of the Zionist state of Israel", the Iranian students wanted to press the Vatican into "taking a more concrete position in favor of the liberation of Jerusalem".

The students also condemn the behavior of the Vatican's Swiss Guards and Italian police during the demonstration. The letter also contains a request for the Vatican to take a position against "the American fascist government" and promote an investigation into the situation of Iranian refugees in Iraq.

NEW INFORMATION EMERGES ON BOLOGNA BOMBING

AU161948 Rome ANSA in English 1925 GMT 16 Aug 80

[Text] Bologna, 16 Aug (ANSA)--An arrest warrant was issued today against neonazi Luca de Orazi, 17, who was picked up for questioning in Bologna Thursday during investigations into the August 2 bomb massacre in this city which has taken the life of 83 and injured around 200 others.

De Orazi has bee. charged with subversion. A provisional arrest order has also been issued against him on charges of having taken part in a robberty in Rome on February 15 four persons broke into an apartment on that date and made off with 50 million lire's worth of money and other booty. Investigators are seeing if there is any link between the robbery and subversive activities.

Meanwhile new information has emerged with regard to Paul Durand, the French deputy police inspector who lost his job after the Bologna massacre when it was learned that he was linked to a Paris-based neonazi group called "Fane".

Bolognese rightwing extremist Francesco Donini, 49-year-old secretary of the National Socialist Union, in an interview with the Italian weekly OGGI, today said that he met Durand twice during a trip the Frenchman made to Italy in July. "He told me he came to Italy to get in touch with "Terza Posizione", an extreme rightwing group headed by Sandro Saccucci (former "MSI" deputy wanted for the killing of a Communist youth), Donini said. Durand was under the mistaken notion that Domini was a member of this group, according to the interview.

Meanwhile, the investigation into the Bologna bombing was continuing in various directions. Numerous searches and identity checks were made yesterday.

PCP AIDE COMMENTS ON RECENT POLAND VISIT, CLAIMS NO 'ANXIETY'

LD201031 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 14 Aug 80 p 10

[Unattributed interview with PCP Political Commission member Sergio Vilarigues: "What is Happening?"--date and place not given]

[Excerpts] AVANTE!: Comrade Sergio Vilarigues, your recent stay in Poland followed reports and speculation in the press of capitalist Europe about social disturbances in that country. Did your visit and the meetings which took place here any connection with clarifying this campaign?

Sergio Vilarigues: No. This invitation was made quite some time ago, but there had hitherto been no opportunity to respond to it. It forms part of the normal contacts and consultations among fraternal parties.

AVANTE!: However, it is natural that this campaign should have been discussed during the contacts which took place in Poland.

Sergio Vilarigues: The Polish comrades gave an account of the overall situation in the country as is usual at these meetings and this issue was also broached. And it is clear that what is happening is substantially different from what is being said and written about it.

I will return to this matter, but, in general, the meetings which I had with Comrades Zdzislaw Zandarowski (candidate member of the Politburo and member of the Secretariat of the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] Central Committee) and Ryszard Frelek (member of the Central Committee Secretariat and PZPR Foreign Affairs Section director) at Central Committee headquarters in Warsaw, and with Politburo member Comrade Zdzislaw Grudzien and other comrades of the Voivodship leadership in Katowice, were very wide ranging and broached many other aspects.

In the first place, the issues of the defense of peace and of disarmament. The PZPR attaches great importance to the problems of European security and has contributed important initiatives to this effect. The meeting held in Warsaw between President Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt [as published], as well as the scheduled meeting between Helmut Schmidt and Comrade Gierek, also in Warsaw [as published], naturally assume great importance at a time when the plans of U.S. imperialism and NATO to deploy strategic missiles in Europe have created an atmosphere of tension contrary to the interests of all the European peoples. In addition, the great interest in the preparation for the coming Madrid meeting, with a view to creating conditions to enable it to produce conclusions really favorable to the interests of peace and detente, stems, of course, from the socialist countries' consistent policy of peace.

Avante!: Returning to the issue of the campaign against Poland....

Sergio Vilarigues: There were indeed partial stoppages in several dozen enterprises, but it is not a matter of any widespread phenomenon--far from it.

The problem stemmed basically from a recent increase in the price of meat, but there are aspects which must be emphasized.

Per capita meat consumption in Poland exceeds 70 kilograms and in some regions totals 90 kilograms--that is, well over double that in Portugal. At present, the price of meat is more or less half the price in Portugal, even taking into account all the differences in the exchange rate, viewed in the most unfavorable way. Being the outcome of very longstanding eating habits (although there is a good deal of fish, consumption of it is low), the improvement in the living standard has led, of course, to a very great increase in consumption. The situation is exacerbated by the fact that the production costs of these products have increased considerably, without this being reflected so far in purchase prices. (For instance, milk is purchased from the producer--who is often a private producer, since only about 30 percent of the land is nationalized--at exactly double the price at which it is sold to the public, with the state paying the difference.) The adjustment which was made was to some extent essential, also bearing in mind that the Polish comrades like those in all the socialist countries do not conceal the difficulties, including those which are created for them by the increase in the price of raw materials, such as oil, in the capitalist countries.

However, under no circumstances did I note any kind of anxiety, whether at the leadership or at the grassroots level.

The pure truth is that Poland's balance of trade was favorable for the first time in 1979 and development whether in housing, social welfare, education or the living standard in general is more than evident.

CP SECRETARY REITERATES CALL FOR GOVERNMENT'S RESIGNATION

LD171958 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1300 GMT 17 Aug 80

[Text] Speaking yesterday at a holiday rally held by the United People's Alliance [APU], in Figueira da Foz, the secretary general of the Portuguese Communist Party, Alvaro Cunhal, once again called for the immediate resignation of the government before the parliamentary elections. He stated that the Democratic Alliance government is engaging in unconstitutional, illegal and subversive activities in its bid to destroy the democratic accomplishments of the 25 April revolution. If the government remains in office, he added, the democratic nature of the coming elections will be severely compromised.

The PCP leader said that the parties of the government coalition, fearful of the outcome of the parliamentary elections, are dragging the presidential elections that will follow into their campaign. As for our party, he went on, it will only decide which presidential candidate to support after the parliamentary elections.

On the subject of the Democratic Alliance's choice of presidential candidate, Cunhal said that General Soares Carneiro's will be the Democratic Alliance's candidate until the legislative elections but as soon as the Democratic Alliance's defeat becomes a reality Carneiro will think of replacing him by someone less publicly hostile to all that 25 April 1974 stands for, Cunhal declared.

In his speech of over an hour, Cunhal described as ridiculous Mario Soares's claim that the Republican and Socialist Front [FRS], is capable of winning an absolute majority in Parliament. Cunhal added that while it is true that there can be no democratic majority without the Socialists, it is no less true that no such majority can be achieved without the Communists either.

FINANCE MINISTER SEES 'ENCOURAGING PROSPECTS' IN ECONOMY

LD220819 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 13 Aug 80 p 3

[Excerpt] Minister of Finance and Planning Cavaco e Silva denied at a press conference yesterday that investment companies are a disguised method of legitimizing private banking, pointing out that they are semibanking organizations but not credit institutions. During this press conference, which was called with the aim of disclosing some government economic measures, the minister announced that the date for paying compensation to the former FIDES and FIA [expansion unknown] bondholders will be disclosed this month, while certificates relating to state bonds will begin to be issued 18 August.

Cavaco e Silva outlined the present situation, which, in his opinion, displays "Encouraging prospects." The immediate mobilization of certificates of entitlement to compensation and new regulations governing the setting up of investment companies are already embodied in decrees approved by the government, he stated, adding that "Portugal does not need to turn to international bankers to request loans now; on the contrary, there is a stream of telex messages from credit institutions interested in granting us finance." With this statement, the minister sought to point out international bodies' confidence in the economic policy which is being pursued and he did not fail to emphasize that the government "has amply achieved its aim," specifically with respect to the forecast inflation rate.

Cavaco e Silva does not accept the criticisms leveled by the opposition that the government is curbing inflation by systematically subsidizing 50 percent of essential goods and not adopting effective measures to combat the factors which are contributing to the increase in inflation.

Denying that the government is postponing the resolution of the problem, the minister of finance said that the consumer price index and disclosed that the amount of subsidies to be granted this year will be well below the 20 million contos forecast.

In addition, Cavaco e Silva announced that the balance of payments deficit was between $50 million and $70 million in 1979. The corrected figures for imports turned the forecast $150 million surplus into a deficit.

Moreover, the balance of the current deficit totaled about $450 million during the first 5 months of 1980, including $283 million during the first quarter. However, a surplus in the third quarter of this year is forecast, because, among other factors, the emigrants' remittances have increased more than was forecast, just as income from tourism is higher than what the government was initially expecting. The balance of current account deficit may not exceed $600 million for the whole of 1980, the minister maintained, taking as his basis estimates made by the Bank of Portugal and the central planning department. It was initially forecast that this deficit would total $800 million.

According to figures disclosed by Cavaco e Silva, prices rose by only 1 percent in July and by 6.9 percent during the first 7 months of the year, as compared with 11 percent during the same period of 1979.

According to Cavaco e Silva, the relative containment of prices and the 21 percent increase in nominal earnings will cause a rise in real earnings and a reduction of profits, especially those of a speculative nature, thus creating a better distribution of income.

PSOE ISSUES STATEMENT ON POLISH STRIKE

LD202348 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] The press office of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party [PSOE] has issued the following statement:

We consider the strike actions in Poland to be more the expression of an explosion of claims, both political and economic, which has been growing ever since the destalinization process began. In this case, the note continues, the labor demands, caused by the economic crisis which also affects the other socialist countries, has highlighted the fundamental problems, the political problem, the problem of freedom in the broader sense. An end to the conflict appears difficult and complex. The Polish authorities have said that they will accede to the strictly socialist claims but they will not accede to the nonsocialist claims, such as abolishing censorship or trade union pluralism. Apart from the considerations which deserve being called claims of nonsocialist pluralism, the PSOE note continues, when socialism is precisely pluralism and freedom, we consider that it will be very difficult for the Polish leadership to grant this kind of freedom since this would signify the crisis of the so-called socialism which reigns in the countries of the East. Towards the end, the PSOE note says: The Polish strike movement has enormous importance not only for the Socialist countries but also for whole world context and the balance of East-West relations.

WORKERS' COMMISSIONS LEADER TO RETURN FROM POLAND

LD211946 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Text] The secretary general of the Communist Trade Union Workers' Commissions, Marcelino Camacho, will arrive in Madrid tomorrow from Poland, where he has been for the past 2 days finding out about the present situation in Poland. A spokesman for the Communist Trade Union said that Marcelino Camacho had talks with the official Polish trade unions and with the strikers. The same spokesman added that the Spanish trade unionist defends the right to strike and freedom of unionization a right he described as one of the permanent aims of workers.

CSCE AMBASSADOR TO VISIT MOSCOW, STRASBOURG, U.S.

LD212132 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Text] Javier Ruperez, the ambassador in chief of the Spanish delegation to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, CSCE, which will be held in Madrid next Autumn, will go to Strasbourg, the seat of the Council of Europe, and then to the American national capital, after his announced visit to Moscow. Ambassador Ruperez, head of foreign relations in the Spanish government party, the Democratic Center Union, will stay in the Soviet capital until 28 August. Then he will go to Strasbourg, where he will meet the delegation heads to the CSCE from countries belonging to the Council of Europe. On 29 August, Ambassador Ruperez will go to Washington, where he will stay until 3 September, when he will return to Madrid to be present at the preparatory meetings of the CSCE, which will begin on 9 September.

SUAREZ COMMENTS ON UCD, PORTUGUESE ELECTIONS

LD211816 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 21 Aug

[Text] The problems of Portugal and Spain are different, but generally speaking the policies of the Lisbon government coincide with those of the Democratic Center Union [UCD], the Spanish prime minister said yesterday in Oporto. He is on a private visit to Portugal.

As regards the coming Portuguese legislative elections, Adolfo Suarez said that the UCD will not take part in the Democratic Alliance's electoral campaign, but given the good relations existing between both political groups, if any technical assistance is requested the UCD will supply it. The Spanish prime minister also said that any member of the Spanish UCD will be able to take part in the Democratic Alliance's campaign, as occurred last September.

SOCIALIST PARTY PLANS SUMMIT WITH PORTUGUESE

LD202200 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] The socialist parties of Spain and Portugal will hold a high-level meeting in Lisbon on 30 and 31 August. This has been stated to the EUROPA PRESS AGENCY by sources in the Spanish Socialist Workers Party. The working summit will be attended by the leaders of the two parties and although no agenda for the summit has been issued, since preparatory work is still proceeding on it, socialist sources told the agency that the talks will cover all the main subjects which are affected by the present international political situation. Particular attention will be paid to the political situation in Spain and Portugal and an analysis will be made of the coming electoral campaign in Portugal, which begins in October.

SECURITY OFFICIAL SAENZ COMMENTS ON BASQUE COUNTRY TERRORISM

[J.M. Vaquero 17 August interview in Luanco with Spanish Government's special representative for security in the Basque Country, Gen Antonio Saenz de Santamaria: "General Saenz de Santamaria In Favor of Accelerating Transfers to Basque government"]

[Excerpt] Oviedo--Special representative for security in the Basque Country, Gen Antonio Saenz de Santamaria, is in favor of accelerating the transfer of powers to the autonomous government headed by Carlos Garaikoetxea in order to spare the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV] a difficult situation vis-a-vis its electorate, within the context of the political measures which must be combined with police measures for the struggle against terrorism, according to what he told EL PAIS in statements made on Sunday in Luanco (Asturias), where he is taking a few days' rest.

The Asturian general is opposed to army intervention and restoring to states of emergency, "although the really difficult thing is combating the terrorists within the law. In my opinion, this battle should be the outcome of a combination of political and police measures. Among the former, the central government must realize that the Basque Autonomous Government has received few powers. There is a good deal of talk about the PNV's ambiguousness, but not as much emphasis is placed on the fact that its position is very difficult, to the advantage of Basque homeland and liberty [ETA], if it does not have sufficient powers to govern the Basque Country."

"I realize," the general added, "that the Madrid Government has to resolve many problems simultaneously. For instance, in the autonomy field, the transferences to Catalonia and the contentious statutes of Andalusia and Galicia are also under discussion. I feel very satisfied that Asturias has embarked on a sensible and realistic autonomy path which could serve for the entire country."

With respect to police measures, the government representative stated, "we are boosting the intelligence services and measures to achieve selective aims. We are also working on conducting a psychological campaign among the population, but it is precisely in this field that least progress has been made."

During the conversation, Saenz de Santamaria avoided any overconfident verdict on the results achieved since his appointment in February to coordinate the antiterrorist struggle in the Basque Country: "This is a tough, protracted task and one which does not show any very spectacular achievements. So far this year we have arrested 300 people and 20 commandos. On the other hand, if ETA is now operating more outside the Basque Country than it used to do, this is because it is encountering greater difficulties inside it. At all events, we must not be overconfident. As long as ETA has support from abroad and from a section of the Basque people--which is diminishing, because Basque youth are rejecting violence--it remains a dangerous organization."

Solution Lies in Neither Terrorists nor Civil Guardsmen Dying

Without seeking to engage in polemics with [Popular Alliance Leader]--Fraga, General Saenz de Santamaria believes that the solution lies not in more terrorists than civil guardsmen dying but in neither of them dying and in the terrorists being tried by the courts. Nor does he share the opinion of those who maintain that under Franco, terrorism would now have been less rampant. "The problem," he asserted, "is that of discovering who is behind ETA. It seems clear that the terrorists in the Mediterranean countries are not operating freely or independently. Today conventional warfare has given way to subversive warfare, because nuclear warfare would mean total destruction. It is crystal clear that an attempt is being made to destabilize West Europe via the Mediterranean, but nor must we make the mistake of believing that Moscow's gold is behind everything. Moreover, in Spain the debate which has been started on Spain's entry into NATO represents an additional incentive for terrorist actions."

In his opinion, "if France had cooperated, the anti-ETA struggle would be on its way to being resolved, but that country held back to avoid problems with the French Basques. The French Government states that it does not allow the Basque refugees to engage in illegal activities on its territory, but everybody knows that the revolutionary tax [money extorted from Basque businessmen]--is paid in Saint Jean de Luz and that nobody pays it in Spain, the border problem is a tremendous difficulty."

Saenz de Santamaria has no doubts about the links between ETA's military wing and Herri Batasuna and between ETA's political-military wing and Euskadiko Ezkerra [Basque Left]. "It would be the same," he added, "as denying the relations existing between the guerrillas of Christ the King and New Force." He described as "impossible" negotiations between the Madrid Government and ETA, "because that organization operates in cells. They have even recently changed the training systems abroad in order to reduce the impact of losses. We would not know with whom to negotiate and nobody could give assurances of a cessation of the armed struggle."

In the opinion of the man responsible for security in the Basque Country, the campaigns for an amnesty and against the Lemoniz power plant are due to ETA's need to recover the currently imprisoned veteran activists, in whom it has greater confidence, and to the aim of wrecking the basque economy, one of whose few chances of recovery lies in the Lemoniz nuclear power plant. Navarra's inclusion in the Basque Country makes no sense, in his opinion, because "Navarra does not belong to the Basque Country, nor do the Navarrese wish to be Basques. ETA is seeking Navarra the territory and the supplies which it needs."

With respect to the extreme rightwing's actions, he stated that, as far as he knows, nobody under his command has any connection with them. "Sometimes I even wonder whether ETA is not perpetrating these actions. They are frequently carried out by extreme rightwingers from other provinces."

DEFENSE FORCES AIDE SEES WEAKENING OF FORCE STRENGTHS

LD211505 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 13 Aug 80 (Part I) p 5

[Jens Thomsen interview with Lt Gen Christian Vegger: "The Quality of Our Defense Forces Is Deteriorating"]

[Text] It is NATO's flanks which are the most vulnerable in the event of a future conflict, an American military committee from the House of Representatives [as published] stated after a visit to Denmark and Norway last week. While the central European front has received most of NATO's attention over the years, it is the U.S. delegation's view today that NATO will have to do much more on the northern flank.

The chief of the defense forces' operational forces and of the unit command for the southern part of NATO's northern region, Lt Gen Christian Vegger, expanded the American view and told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE: "It is partly due to the fact that rearmament within the Warsaw Pact has become increasingly fleet oriented, and the land force concept that the Russians found preferable for many years has been abandoned. Through this investment and through extending their maritime capabilities, both by acquiring bases and naval-support aircraft, the threat in those areas from which such a marine offensive could take place has grown. This is in the two flank regions, including the Baltic, where the Warsaw Pact and especially the Russian fleet has a significant part of its base facilities: depots, ports, training grounds and so on...."

"A zero [budgeting] solution for the defense forces would mean a reduction of one-third for all three branches of the Danish Armed Forces. This would obviously lessen our chances of fulfilling those tasks that have been entrusted to us. I have heard it said that Denmark is a lilliputian great power. But this is not true. Danish defenses have been restructured through many years of NATO membership so that they can fulfill special tasks. When people today point to a reduction in the number of units in the strength targets and talk of compensating for this with superior quality, this is irrelevant rubbish. The quality of defense forces is also measured by their strength, and it is obvious that if these forces fall under a certain minimum level, they cannot fulfill the tasks they have been entrusted with--no matter how good the quality is.

"One of the things mentioned in this connection is a reduction in Sjaelland's defenses so that there would in fact be nothing left of them. There is nothing that could make up for a zero solution. There is no way in which it would be possible to replace what would be destroyed through a zero solution."

[Question] Would a zero solution and the consequent reductions decrease Danish defense credibility to such an extent that we could not expect help from our allies if a war were to begin?

[Answer] There is a good old dictum that says: Never reinforce a failure. One precontion for the ability of reinforcements from outside being able to reach us is that we are able to hold a large enough area for the arrival and deployment of the aid. If we do not have sufficient resources for this, we would be flattened before reinforcements could arrive. I very much doubt that we are in a position to maintain a defense until this help could arrive. At any rate, certain parts of the country could not be held. And so it is Sjaelland that has been considered less important.

It is not true when people say that the other side is not rearming. It is stated from time to time that the number of divisions, ships and aircraft has not risen. But this is probably a truth with modifications. The quality has become better, and it is true as people say that on the ground there are no more divisions than before. But alongside the number of divisions at corps and army level, new special units have been added. The result is that instead of being reduced by 20,000 men and 1,000 tanks the troops have in fact been strengthened. For this reason the threat has grown, and the considerations that formed a basis for our own strength targets in 1971 are now hopelessly outdated and we need more troops. This is especially true of the army, where we have made cuts from 30,000 to 14,000 men since the sixties.

CP LEADER: EVENTS IN POLAND DUE TO LEADERSHIP-MASSES GAP

LD211609 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 19 Aug 80 p 5

[Tor Hognaes report: "Something Must Have Gone Wrong"]

[Excerpt] Helsinki, Monday--Something must have gone wrong in socialist Poland, Finnish Communist Party Chairman Aarne Saarinen told DAGENS NYHETER. He thinks that the distance between the party leadership and the masses is too great. But politics also come into the picture, and show that opponents of socialism are on the move. The violent strikes in Poland give rise to feelings of embarrassment among Finland's Communists and Popular Democrats. The trade union movement is also tensely following events in Poland. Theoretically the workers in a socialist country own the means of production, and are therefore striking against themselves.

Saarinen thinks it ironic that Gierek's leadership has been burdened by these strikes. It was after the 1970 strike that Gierek succeeded Gomulka and gave a push to economic development so that the workers would have better conditions. The results have been slow to appear. Progress has been made but foreign debts have grown, and the debts must be paid. It is of no advantage to raise the workers' wages by 10-20 percent, as is being demanded, when productivity is rather low and the foundations of the economy are weak. The regime has tried to keep a rein on prices by means of expensive subsidies. Around 70 percent of agriculture is in private ownership. Meat consumption has been higher than in Finland at 7 kilos per person per year. But this has cost the state a great deal, Saarinen pointed out.

In talks with leading Polish politicians we have had the impression that everything is going well despite economic and other problems. It seems as if the leaders have tried to lull themselves and others into feelings of security, Saarinen thinks. The leaders have obviously been unaware of or have turned a deaf ear to the mood of the masses. In Hungary things are different: Trade union politics have been carried out openly and have strengthened the role of the trade unions. "The Poles are on a dangerous road if trade union leaders reach agreements with the government over the workers' heads." One must of course accept that the opponents of socialism will exploit a situation such as the one that has arisen in Poland, Saarinen said. The political element in the Polish picture shows that these opponents are making the best use of the opportunity.

UK'S CARRINGTON, VAYRYNEN DISCUSS PAPER EXPORTS

LD211722 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1700 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Text] Finnish paper exports to Britain were discussed in talks between Lord Carrington, British foreign secretary, who arrived in Finland on an official visit today and Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen.

Both Carringon and Vayrynen expressed their satisfaction over the solution achieved in the paper export issue. A few weeks ago the British Government rejected a request by British paper importers to limit British paper imports.

President Urho Kekkonen received Lord Carrington at Tamminiemi shortly after the latter had arrived in Helsinki. Lord Carrington's 1 and 1/2-day visit to Finland ends tomorrow. Before his departure he is due to meet Premier Mauno Koivisto and Speaker Johannes Virolainen.

DIRECTIVE 59 SEEN REFLECTING 'INTENSIFIED NUCLEAR ARMS RACE'

[Editorial: "The Downward Spiral of the Superpowers'Arms Race"]

[Text] Although nuclear arms are in their own way status symbols, no one acquires them simply for the pleasure of owning them. It is obvious that every nuclear state has drawn up plans for how it will use its nuclear arms in a possible conflict. It may not, however, be worth attaching very much importance to these plans. If the world goes so mad that nuclear arms are actually used, decisions on how to use them will be made on the basis of the situation at the time and not on the basis of old strategic plans.

The United States has now announced that its nuclear arms strategy has been "officially" changed by a directive signed by the President.

The basis for the former strategy was the notion that a possible attack should be answered by devastating the attacker's biggest cities, strictly speaking113 million people in 220 Soviet population centers. According to the new strategy the retaliatory strike will not be directed against cities but against missile bases and other military targets.

Although knowledge of the change in nuclear strategy was only allowed to leak out very recently, the actual change may have been decided years ago. The strategy of retaliation directed against cities has been criticized the whole time and with growing severity as nuclear arms with greater accuracy have been developed. It has been claimed that if the Soviet Union with the so-called first strike destroys part of the U.S. nuclear arsenal, a retaliatory strike against cities would be suicidal because the Soviet Union would still be in a position to destroy the largest U.S. cities. The basis for such claims seems to be the assumption that the Soviet Union is prepared to sacrifice 100 million of its citizens and that the United States would choose suicide rather than surrender.

The change in nuclear strategy and its announcement may be largely an election tactic. President Jimmy Carter wants to show the voters that he is just as "patriotic" as Ronald Reagan. The decision seems thus to let slip that the United States is recovering from the war weariness caused by Vietnam and growing more militaristic again.

However, in the final analysis Presidential Directive 59 is a consequence of the intensified nuclear arms race. The greater the number of more sophisticated nuclear arms acquired, the more clearly nuclear war changes from something "which no one dares contemplate" to something that has to be contemplated. The fear that the other side is in a position to create for itself the prerequisites for a totally destructive first strike gnaws at both superpowers' strategic planners and decision-makers. It forces them to acquire ever greater numbers of ever more accurate nuclear arms and to protect them with complicated defense systems. A depressing example of the power of the arms spiral is the MX system contemplated by the Americans which, according to preliminary budget estimates, would cost $34 billion at the very least.

FOREIGN MINISTRY 'DEEPLY WORRIED' BY POLISH EVENTS

LD211625 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 Aug 80 p 8

[Text] Both the Foreign Ministry and the Norwegian Trade Union Congress are concerned over the situation that has developed in Poland and the possible consequences it could have.

"I cannot comment on what is happening in Poland other than to say that the Foreign Ministry is deeply worried," Foreign Ministry press spokesman Geir Grung said. "But these worries mean that the Foreign Ministry is following what is happening and keeping itself informed. Our Warsaw ambassador is going back to Poland on Thursday, but the embassy has been keeping us informed the whole time. As far as the Norwegians working in Gdansk and Gdynia are concerned we have passed on a request from their employers that they should leave the country, and the majority have now left these cities," said Grung, who is unable to state whether the Foreign Ministry has adopted any special measures in connection with the situation that has arisen in Poland.

"On Tuesday we in the Trade Union Congress discussed the situation in Poland several times," Norwegian Trade Union Federation International Secretary Kaare Sandegren said. "We are following closely what is happening there and the possible consequences it might have.

"It is our hope that the Polish workers will come out of this well on the basis of their rights as union members. But we are otherwise aware of the effects interference from outside can have and do not therefore wish to say anything about what we or others could or should do in the situation that has arisen.

"Tomorrow a council meeting of the Scandinavian trade unions' coordination organization begins on Gotland, where trade union leaders from all the Scandinavian nations will meet. What is happening in Poland will also be discussed at this meeting as well as what possible statements from Scandinavia might be made."

Sandegren also told AFTENPOSTEN that the trade union federation is being kept busy at present by inquiries from members who are concerned about what is happening in Poland, that the trade union federation's leaders are aware of the dangers in the situation and that the trade union federation is keeping in close contact with the Foreign Ministry on new developments.

NORWEGIAN-SOVIET INDUSTRIAL COOPERATION TALKS UNDERWAY

LD211519 Oslo AFTERNPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 Aug 80 p 12

[Text] Norwegian-Soviet discussions on a long-term program for economic and industrial cooperation have started in Oslo. Trade Ministry departmental head Tor Stokke is leading the Norwegian delegation in this working group and departmental chief V.I. Simakov, of the USSR Foreign Trade Ministry's administration for trade with Western countries is leading the Soviet delegation.

The program for the meeting is a followup to the agreement on technical, economic and industrial cooperation concluded between the Soviet Union and Norway in 1972. This working group will report to the mixed Norwegian-Soviet governmental commission which is expected to meet later this year, the Trade Ministry announced.

USEFULNESS OF EMBASSIES FOR INFORMATION GATHERING QUESTIONED

LD181405 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 18 Aug 80 p 12

[Editorial: "Reluctant To Learn"]

[Text] Reduction of the British Embassy staff in Tehran, and temporary suspension of its operations, makes it timely to ask hitherto muted questions. First, why maintain the fiction of diplomatic relations at all, long after Iran's revolution of madness has ineluctably passed the point where procedures evolved during centuries of European civilisation no longer bind the revolutionaries? Optimistic illusion is not virtuous, least of all when it lends a false sense of security to British residents who would have been better off cutting their losses and leaving sooner. And why should the Iranian Embassy here be enabled to enjoy wholly asymmetric reciprocity, uninhibitedly waging propaganda, inciting and mobilising mobs composed partly of students enjoying subsidised births, educational facilities and partly of janissaries thinly disguised as students?

Has not the time come to ask whether the decline of Western power, and the minimum civilised standards it was able to impose over large areas of the world, has implications for diplomatic theory and practice? Where states have enough in common to require regular negotiations over matters great and small, diplomatic missions have a role. Where common interests are few or non-existent, frank friendly contact discouraged, unofficial sources of information restricted, may not residual negotiations be better conducted at the UN, and monitoring of the situation from London or convenient listening posts? For example, experience has repeatedly shown that Soviet, East European, Cuban and Chinese affairs were better understood and predicted by London and other Western-based specialists--not necessarily in the Foreign Service either--than by British and other Western embassies on the spot.

Several official reports over the years have questioned whether, now that we have excellent overseas communications--less susceptible than domestic ones to post office unions--and no gunboats, we need so many diplomatic missions and staff. As we strike one more flag, why not heed the questions?

MORNING STAR: POLAND MUST TACKLE SOCIALIST DEMOCRACY ISSUES

LD201127 London MORNING STAR in English 20 Aug 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Issues That Must Be Tackled"]

[Excerpt] As Mr. Gierek said in his broadcast, the finding of solutions to the present strikes in Poland through "discussion and dialogue, compromise and agreement" is both necessary and urgent. Any other course would only make worse an already difficult situation. The discussions he proposes clearly need to encompass questions of socialist economic practice related to the way price increases are handled and the arrangements made for the distribution of food when it is in short supply. These questions are obviously of concern to the people of Poland as a whole and not just to workers in Gdansk and elsewhere who have been on strike. But it is the action of these workers which is at the centre of attention at present.

Their action poses one straightforward question: How is it possible in a socialist country for circumstances that have in the past decade twice led to strike action to re-appear? The answer is to be found partly in the inadequacy of the democratic functioning of trade unions on behalf of their members--to which Mr. Gierek himself referred--and in the way the Polish Government has handled its decisions on prices and food distribution. Wider questions of socialist democracy are also involved. The sooner these issues are tackled by the Polish authorities the better it will be for the future development of socialism in Poland.

EC COUNCIL LEADER THORN ARRIVES FOR VISIT WITH ROLANDHIS

NC211834 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Text] Mr Gaston Thorn, the foreign minister of Luxembourg who is also chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers, arrived in Cyprus this evening at the invitation of Foreign Minister Rolandhis. During his stay Mr Thorn will convey to the Cyprus Government a joint declaration by the EEC member states on developments in the Cyprus issue.

Mr Thorn today completed an exploratory mission on the Middle East question on behalf of the EEC during which he visited several countries in the area.

On his arrival at Larnaca Airport this evening Mr Thorn was welcomed by Foreign Minister Rolandhis; Director General of the Foreign Ministry Pelagias; Netherlands Charge d'Affaires Kwint, who also represents Luxembourg in Cyprus; and a representative of the British High Commission.

Statements After Meeting

NC221237 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] Today Mr Thorn, foreign minister of Luxembourg and president of the EEC Council of Ministers, met privately with Foreign Minister Rolandhis at the Foreign Ministry. Following their talks, Mr Rolandhis said that he had an extensive and in-depth discussion with Mr Thorn on the Cyprus problem and on Cyprus-EEC relations. The discussions were held in a very friendly and constructive atmosphere. Mr Rolandhis said: I believe that the fact that Mr Thorn is one of the leading personalities in the European and the international arena makes these talks most valuable and very productive. Finally the foreign minister said that he now looks forward to another meeting with Mr Thorn either in Europe or New York to further discuss the questions that were taken up at today's meeting.

After the meeting Mr Thorn stated that his talks with Mr Rolandhis have been very thorough. He added: My counterpart explained to me the way in which the Cyprus Government views the intercommunal talks, the resumption of which was desired and has been hailed by the European Community. He also explained to me the importance which the Cyprus Government attaches to its relations with the EEC and stressed to me Cyprus' wish for the earliest possible customs union with the EEC.

Mr Thorn added: In the course of the meeting I also had the opportunity to declare to Mr Rolandhis not only the understanding of the government of Luxembourg but also to assure him that the whole European Community considers its relations with Cyprus to be important, and that despite the existing technical difficulties that we all know, the important thing is that we shall do everything to achieve progress during the talks, knowing that our final goal is the customs union.

Asked if the European Community, as a result of his talks with the Cyprus Government, will undertake a more active role in the Cyprus issue, Mr Thorn said: In the case of the Cyprus issue the initiative belongs to and it is in the hands of our friend Mr Waldheim, the UN secretary general. The Cyprus Government has asked the European countries and all its friends to assist the secretary general in his efforts as well as to assist the parties for the successful conclusion of the talks. The European Community is ready to demonstrate this support, assistance and sympathy in the future, more than today. He concluded: However, this is going to be neither an initiative nor an active involvement at the present stage.

This morning Mr Thorn contacted President Kiprianou, who is currently in Athens, by the phone. Mr Thorn expressed to Mr Kiprianou his pleasure for having the opportunity to visit Cyprus and stressed that he will try to again visit the island soon and meet him personally. He also said that within the framework of his authority he will try to assist in achieving progress for the solution of the problems that Cyprus is facing.

UN SPECIAL ENVOY GOBBI LEAVES FOR NEW YORK

NC211417 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Text] The UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, Gobbi, left this afternoon for Geneva. Later, he will proceed to New York for consultations with Mr Waldheim on the Cyprus problem. The consultations will take place in view of the resumption of the intercommunal talks on the substance of the Cyprus problem on 16 September. Mr Gobbi will return to Cyprus during the first week of September.

TURKISH CYPRIOT OFFICIALS LEVEL ACCUSATIONS AGAINST GREEK CHURCH

Denktas' Comments

TA201814 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 20 Aug 80

[Text] President Denktas has said that Archbishop Khrisosthomos was working for the establishment of a fascist dictatorship in Cyprus and for this purpose he was propagating anti-Turkish feelings among the Greek Cypriot community. President Denktas was answering questions from a correspondent of ASIA NEWS AGENCY.

He said that recent reports of efforts by the Greek Cypriot communist AKEL Party to try to come to power in the Greek Cypriot zone at the forthcoming general election had created anxieties in the Greek Cypriot church. He recalled that since 1955 the Greek Cypriot church had acted as the breeding ground of several underground terrorist organizations which had as their aims the suppression of the Greek Cypriot communists and the Turkish Cypriot community. He added that, depending on these past experiences of the church, Archbishop Khrisosthomos had now initiated a new anti-Turkish campaign with the hope that it will unite the Greek Cypriot right wing around himself as the ethnarch. President Denktas said that the connection between the gangs of assassins who murdered the Turkish diplomats abroad and the Greek Orthodox Church was well known. He added that the Turks knew very well that the Greek Orthodox Church was among the leaders of those who wanted to destroy Turkey.

Legislative Leader Kazim

TA191146 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] The deputy president of the Turkish Cypriot Legislative Assembly, Dr Semsi Kazim, has said that the statements made by Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou and Archbishop Khrisosthomos aimed at rendering ineffective the efforts being exerted by UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim and the Chief of State of the Libyan Socialist People's Arab Jamahiriyah, Al-Qadhdhafi, toward the resumption of the talks, and could endanger the future of the talks which will be resumed on 16 September. Dr Kazim said: We believe that acts and statements that could hinder positive developments and approaches, and sterile and unproductive arguments, should be avoided if the problem is to be solved.

He added that if the Greek Cypriots continue to dream that only the Greek Cypriots will have authority in the island's administration, that they will eliminate Turkey's guarantor rights stipulated in the agreements and that they will abolish the rights of the Turkish Cypriot citizens, who have been brought to the free Turkish Cypriot sector from the south within the framework of the Vienna agreements, and if they insist on not considering the Turkish Cypriot community an equal partner in the Federal Cyprus Republic to be established, then they will be responsible for the developments that might follow.

DIKO SPOKESMAN ANSWERS AKEL ATTACK ON KIPRIANOU

NC201930 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 20 Aug 80 p 8

[Text] Upon being asked to comment on the AKEL Central Committee's 16 August statement, the Democratic Party [DIKO] spokesman said the following:

"Although, as reported yesterday, President of the Republic and DIKO Chairman Kiprianou is expected to reply after his return to the attacks on him, at this point we consider it necessary to state the following:

"A. It is inconceivable that the president is being accused of not accepting the four guidelines of the Makarios-Denktas agreement; as every genuine observer can confirm, the acceptance of the Makarios-Denktas agreement was reaffirmed at the highest level by the 19 May Kiprianou-Denktas agreement which was signed in the presence of UN Secretary General Waldheim. President Kiprianou faithfully follows the Makarios line and is working toward finding a just and lasting solution based on the agreements which have already been concluded and on the UN resolutions.

"B. At times, some have complained, justifiably or not, that the people are not briefed often enough. After the agreement on the resumption of talks and before his departure for Greece, President Kiprianou considered it necessary to brief the Cypriot people on the details of the resumption of negotiations. We believe the people have a right to be briefed and that it is the duty of their leader to brief them responsibly and correctly.

"C. The AKEL Central Committee statement accuses the president of being the grave-digger of unity and cooperation. On the contrary, despite the attacks on him, the president has repeatedly stated that he does not want to blow up the bridges of cooperation and that he will continue in his efforts toward forging the people's unity.

"This should suffice for now in expectation that, as previously stated, President Kiprianou himself will reply to the attacks against him."

RALLIS MEETS WITH VISITING CYPRIOT PRESIDENT

NC211219 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 21 Aug 80

Statements After Meeting

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou has stated that he is fully satisfied with his meeting in Athens today with Greek Prime Minister Rallis. During a 90-minute meeting which was held in an atmosphere of cordiality and real cooperation, they discussed questions connected with the resumption of the inter-Cypriot talks, as well as the various actions which are connected with the Cyprus problem and which are now required by circumstances. President Kiprianou stated that during the meeting it was again established that there is absolute cooperation between the governments of Greece and Cyprus. He stressed: Beyond this, it has also been noted that the Greek Government will stand by the side of the Cyprus Government in all its efforts to resolve the Cyprus problem. A statement released by the Greek Foreign Ministry says that during the meeting President Kiprianou briefed the Greek side on recent developments that have led to the agreement on the forthcoming resumption of the intercommunal talks and explained the Cyprus Government's views on the line that it intends to follow during the first phase of the talks. The statement adds: The Greek Government expressed satisfaction on the resumption of the talks and on the Cyprus Government's handling of the issue.

After his conference with Mr Rallis, Mr Kiprianou talked privately with the Greek prime minister for 20 minutes. Tomorrow President Kiprianou will call on Greek President Karamanlis, and he will then have contacts with Greek party leaders.

BOMBS EXPLODE AT SUPREME COURT WITHOUT DAMAGE

DEMIREL ACCUSES NSP OF STALLING EARLY ELECTIONS

TA211731 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that the issue in Turkey is not early elections, but a fight over government. He noted: It is not possible to obtain results from elections unless the RPP and the NSP abandon their bargaining over government.

In a statement at the end of the Council of Ministers meeting, which began at 1100 and lasted over 3 and 1/2 hours, Demirel said Turkey's needs for the next year were discussed during the meeting.

In reply to a journalist's remark that Ecevit had compared him to Hitler, Demirel said: I would consider such a thing ridiculous. Not only me, but everyone in Turkey would find it ridiculous. Not one person would say that this is correct. If you really want to know, what he did was not good. I do not compete with ugliness and do not acknowledge adjectives that do not apply to me. If I were to liken him to Kerenski or Weimar, would this be right? In other words, I do not know what good it would do to direct the discussion in this manner. Actually, only a desperate person resorts to such ugly things. One can seen that he is desperate. If there is a need to utter bad words, then it is always possible to do so. I have been in politics for 20 years. Both my lofty nation and God know what a struggle I am waging.

Claiming that it is not possible to take Ecevit's remarks seriously these days because of such statements, Demirel continued: If he wants to be taken seriously, he should utter serious words. I view his remarks as not serious, unsuitable and unnecessary, which one of Turkey's problems does comparing me to Hitler solve? Our government is a democratic one. We came to parliament through the citizens' votes. We are not remaining in power by force. Only 1 and 1/2 months ago we obtained a vote of confidence. How did we receive the assembly's vote of confidence despite our likeness to Hitler? In short, there is no basis for this remark. This is why I do not think it is necessary to comment on it any further.

In reply to another question, Demirel said that the NSP is not sincere in its wish for early elections and that this is very evident in the attitude of the NSP deputy who is chairing the constitution committee which is discussing the proposal for early elections. Demirel noted: If the NSP were in favor of early elections, he would have concluded [the discussions]-- on this proposal. I waited for 3 days before saying anything. Tuesday passed, Wednesday passed and Thursday passed and the committee has still not issued a four-line proposal.

Replying to a question, Demirel said: The NSP did not stop talking about early elections. Where are they now? Everyone knows that there is maneuvering taking place. This is not a recent development, for it has been going on for a long time. What it signifies is a different matter. It is the issue of early elections that is facing us now. If you are in favor of early elections, then adopt your stand accordingly. If not, we will expose all the schemes and the plotters of the schemes to the nation. This is a very serious matter which cannot be conducted through schemes.

TURKES DISCUSSES ANARCHY, WAGES DURING PRESS CONFERENCE

NC191327 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 17 Aug 80 p 5

[Text] Ankara (Special)-- NAP leader Alpaslan Turkes has stated that the Demirel administration has failed to fulfill the pledges which it made to the nation before the 14 October elections.

Turkes said at a press conference yesterday that the Demirel administration has been unable to stop or at least reduce anarchy and added: "Anarchy has increased fourfold. One of the reasons is the administration's failure to fulfill its promises to the nation. One thing Demirel had undertaken was to eradicate the subversive and divisive cadres which the Ecevit administration had appointed. Another pledge was to call on those who committed acts of corruption, lawlessness, theft and torture during Ecevit's term in office to atone for their offences. The present administration has simply carried on where the former Ecevit administration left off. The ministers and some officials have changed but the subversive elements are still preserving their positions.

NAP leader Turkes also referred to the question of minimum wages and urged the "commission for establishing minimum wages" to convene immediately and to reassess the minimum wages. Turkes further stated that his party was in favor of the workers' getting cost of living increases after minimum wages are determined.

Asked to comment on reports that the Turkish Workers Confederation [Turk-Is] had suggested 8 thousand Turkish liras [per month] as the minimum wage, Turkes said: "Turk-Is must have advanced this suggestion after examining the matter comprehensively."

JORDANIAN DELEGATION ARRIVES TO DISCUSS TRADE INCREASES

TA191945 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 19 Aug 80

[Text] A Jordanian trade delegation headed by Minister of Supplies Jawad al'Anani arrived in Ankara today. The delegation was received at Esenboga airport by Trade Minister Halil Basol. In a speech at the airport Basol said that the aim was to raise the volume of trade between the two countries to $100 million this year. Recalling that a new trade agreement was signed with Jordan in June, Basol pointed out that the volume of trade during the first 3 months of this year reached $24 million making it clear that the target of $100 million would be reached.

Halil Basol also said that the contacts the Jordanian trade delegation would have in Ankara, Izmir and Istanbul carried great importance for the determination of the trade potential between the two countries.

The Jordanian minister of supplies said in a speech that his government wanted to take a big step toward further development of the increasingly growing volume of trade between the two countries. He pointed out that he would look into the trade possibilities in Turkey, and especially of foodstuffs.

The Jordanian delegation will go to Izmir tomorrow to study the fair and confer with businessmen. Later, the delegation members will hold talks with businessmen in Istanbul. The delegation is expected to stay in Turkey for 1 week.

LEADERS, PRESS VIEW CANCELLATION OF SCHMIDT GDR VISIT

Boelling Statement

LD221520 Hamburg DPA in German 1413 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text of 22 August statement by State Secretary Klaus Boelling]

[Text] Hamburg, 22 Aug (DPA)--It has been and remains the task and aim of the Federal Government to actively work, based on the balance of forces, toward safeguarding cooperation in Europe. The federal chancellor and the federal minister for foreign affairs for this reason accepted the invitation by the USSR Government for a visit to Moscow from 30 June to 1 July 1980 and held talks with the Soviet leadership. The federal chancellor accepte the invitation by the chairman of the GDR State Council for a meeting in the GDR for the same reasons.

The Federal Government is deeply convinced of the necessity that Germans in particular must contribute towards strengthening peace in Europe, and that cooperation between both German states must be strengthened and developed in the interests of the citizens of the FRG and the GDR. As envisaged in the basic treaty, it remains our common task to establish sensible neighborly relations despite all existing difficulties.

The federal chancellor, who hoped for a positive effect on bilateral relations and also a favorable effect on the entire European situation through his talks with the State Council chairman, following thorough consideration and after discussions with the vice chancellor and competent federal ministers, has arrived at the conclusion that the visit to the GDR planned for next week should not take place at this time, but rather at a time which in the sense of the progress we have striven for can be viewed as more appropriate. It is the Federal Government's view that developments which have taken place in Europe in recent days do not make next week an appropriate time.

The preparations for the meeting have conveyed to our side the impression that progress in relations between both German sides is quite possible and that a meeting will promote the further development of inter-German relations. The Federal Government considers the meeting between the federal chancellor and the State Council chairman necessary for the further development of relations between both German states. In the interests of the policy of cooperation and security in Europe it is also determined to continue its policy vis-a-vis the GDR, and it is ready for all efforts serving German cohesion. It shares the view that the further normalization of relations between both German states is an important contribution towards peace.

The Federal Government has an unaltered and undimished interest in agreements which are beneficial to citizens in both German states and which are to complement the numerous accords between us and the GDR which have come about over the past 10 years, and which despite continually existing fundamental differences of views and contradictions between the FRG and the GDR have led to undeniable improvements in relations.

Genscher Comments

[Excerpts] Bonn, 24 Aug (DPA)--FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher would like to see a common approach by all political forces concerning questions relating to policy on inter-German relations.

In Genscher's view the reason for the canceled meeting showed that relations between Bonn and East Berlin cannot be treated in isolation. Separate inter-German actions are an illusion. Relations between the Federal Republic and the GDR are embedded in European and international developments.

Genscher on Detente

LD241413 Hamburg DPA in German 1352 GMT 24 Aug 80

[Text] Federal Foreign Minister Genscher, viewing the events in Poland and the chancellor's canceled visit to the GDR, does not feel that the policy of detente has failed. "Neither today nor tomorrow can we get along without cooperation in Europe and Germany," Genscher said on Sunday in an interview with BILD ZEITUNG (Monday edition). The events in Poland are an expression of the desire for more freedom. That is not inconsistent with the policy of detente, but rather a demand for the realization of the Helsinki accords. In view of the events in Poland circumspection by Western politicians is necessary. Whenever the West is able to help with economic problems, it should not hesitate, Genscher said. Noninterference in the internal affairs of Poland is a consequence deriving from the Helsinki Final Act.

Reasons for Cancellation

[Text] It has been learned from government circles that the decision by the chancellor and the Hamburg ministers' meeting to postpone the visit evolves from Bonn's impression that the GDR sees itself as no longer being in a position to go through with the originally planned program of visits by Schmidt. East Berlin wanted at short notice to stop Schmidt's visit to Rostock, on the Baltic coast. It is assumed that the GDR leadership thought it possible that the unrest in Polish Baltic cities could spread to its territory, especially in Rostock.

Because of the planned cancellation of the visit to Rostock--which the federal chancellor wanted to carry out following his return journey from Werbellinsee and a visit to the town of Guestrow in Mecklenburg--it is assumed in the Federal Government that there was increasing insecurity in the GDR leadership concerning the overall development of the visit, and that it became convinced that the chancellor's visit next week would not be appropriate for progress in relations, which seem attainable at a more favorable, that is a later date.

Government spokesman Boelling expressed the Federal Government's conviction that GDR citizens would understand the cancellation of the visit, which had been "very hard" for the chancellor. GDR citizens should know that the Federal Government would not under any circumstances give up the idea of a meeting.

Franke Explanation

LD231720 Hamburg DPA in German 1511 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Text] Hamburg, 23 Aug--In an interview with BILD AM SONNTAG, Egon Franke (SPD), the federal minister for inner-German affairs, said that the "critical situation" after the Polish strikes and "last minute information that the other side wanted a change of program" had led to the cancellation of the proposed meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and party and state leader Erich Honecker. Franke confirmed that this information from the GDR had arrived in Hamburg Thursday night.

Franke, who attended the crucial discussion in Hamburg regarding the cancellation, said the GDR had given no official reason for striking Rostock from Schmidt's program for the visit. "But consider," Franke said, "the vast crowd outside the hotel when Willy Brandt visited Erfurt. Cheers for 'Helmut, Helmut' could have sparked off emotions."

Franke does not believe that there will be a setback in inter-German relations. "The situation has taken such a critical turn that it might well make more sense, from the GDR's perspective as well, not to meet now." But the chancellor would make the visit eventually. "Things must first calm down and stabilize over there. That will certainly take some time," Franke added.

Federal Manager Bahr Reaction

ID250156 Hamburg DPA in German 1523 GMT 24 Aug 80

[Text] Hamburg--During his proposed visit to the GDR Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt did not want to drop a trip to Rostock and contacts with the local populace. But he did not wish to do anything which might have tended to aggravate the Polish situation, a contingency which could not have been ruled out. This was stated by SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr at an SPD meeting today in Kappeln, Schleswig-Holstein. He was commenting on the reasons which led Schmidt to cancel the meeting. Bahr was hoping for talks between Schmidt and Honecker to be arranged at an early date because, as Bahr said, both German states bear a special responsibility for peace in Europe.

SPD's Wischnewski Suggestion

[Text] Bonn, 25 Aug (DPA)--Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski has expressed the hope that Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will go to the GDR for his meeting with SED chief Erich Honecker immediately after the Bundestag elections on 5 October. The meeting with Honecker continues to be urgently necessary, Wischnewski said today in a Deutschlandfunk interview, which the station reported as a news item.

On the question of a new date for the meeting Wischnewski said that it is not yet known how long the efforts in Poland to find a way out of the present difficulties will continue. It has at least become clear that the leadership in Warsaw wants Poland to go its own way. With regard to the conflicts between the striking workers and the Polish leadership, whose effects on relations between the two German states caused Schmidt to cancel the meeting, the SPD politician said that the decision to postpone the meeting was the right one.

Strauss Speech

[Text] Frankfurt--The CDU/CSU contender for the chancellorship, Franz Josef Strauss, regards Schmidt's notice of cancellation of [th visit with] Honecker as proof that he was right in his criticism of the chancellor's plans for the trip. Addressing almost 25,000 participants at a CDU election meeting in Frankfurt today, Strauss called Schmidt's planned meetings with Polish party leader Gierek and Honecker "electioneering appearances" which would have allowed the "state actor" Schmidt to appear before the television cameras. Strauss said that he was in favor of all forms of negotiations with the GDR, but that "people must get something out of them: more freedom."

In Strauss' view, unrest in Poland should not become a major election issue. He was not opposed to economic aid for Poland, but a "bankrupt and done-for system" should not be allowed to solve its problems with money from the West. It was not the task of the free world to stabilize planned economies and communist regimes so that their "insane efforts to arm" could be made easier or be furthered.

Kohl Remarks

LD221534 Hamburg DPA in German 1449 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 22 Aug (DPA)--CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl has described the cancellation of the Schmidt-Honecker meeting as a "long overdue step" by the Federal Government. "In view of the critical situation in Poland and the new increasingly evident bankruptcy of the Polish system of government, a meeting between Schmidt and Honecker would not have been possible and would have been extremely embarrassing," the CDU leader said in a statement published in Bonn. It is very depressing that Schmidt as SPD chairman has so far uttered no word of understanding or sympathy for the striking Polish workers.

Press Review

DW250803 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Press review on Polish situation, cancellation of Chancellor Schmidt's GDR visit]

[Text] RHEINISCHE POST writes: After 10 days of uncertainty it seems to be certain now that at least all those involved in Poland do not want to use force, and that they are patiently looking for solutions which would at least take into consideration the social demands of the workers. The question is what the Soviet Union--not to forget the GDR--will demand from Poland, and how long the battered mother country of socialism will be able to stand the recalcitrance of the Polish workers.

SUEDKURIER of Konstanz points out: The search for scapegoats to be decapitated later on proved to be the proper means in past years of distracting attention from the actual difficulties and linking shortcomings of the system with the names of individuals. In contrast to 1970 the Central Committee has advocated a "small solution" which--at least so far--reaches only to the premier, sparing party chief Gierek. But even with new names the Warsaw government cannot ignore August 1980: The leadership of an East bloc country dependent on Moscow is talking and even negotiating with striking people. In the future the workers in all of Poland and not merely in Gdansk will be oriented by that.

DIE WELT writes the following: Is the regime negotiating honestly with the aim of achieving a compromise, or is it all just a prearranged game to make the striking people feel secure in order to make a violent strike when everyone is tired and exhausted? The Polish communists cannot hold it against anybody if memories of the past come up now: In Hungary there was also a central workers council in 1956. The regime negotiated with it as a pretext, but one day the council's spokesmen were arrested and brought to court. In 1968 the Soviets were also negotiating with Dubcek--and then they struck. Should politicians of the Polish regime try something similar today, they would have to accept the responsibility that the disappointed hopes and dammed-up fury of the masses could lead to an explosion.

Frankfurter ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG asks in a commentary: If this is not an evil trick, how can the conflict be solved? The Politburo cannot expect the workers to be distracted by the Byzantine ritual speech on changes in the insignificant state labor union; the protest movement feels too strongly.

However, it has not succeeded so far in extending its demands to include the whole country. But the crumbling away, which the Politburo was hoping for, has not taken place either. The strikers know that they have the church on their side. The so far regionally limited strike movement is thus achieving a general political base.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG states: One can predict without any great gift of prophecy what would happen should negotiations in Gdansk fail, should the conflict aggravate and should the Soviets become openly involved. Helmut Schmidt and French President Giscard d'Estaing would only too quickly find a confirmation of their sentence in the Afghanistan communique: Detente policy will not stand a second strike of this kind. Return to cold war would be unavoidable. Detente, balance and disarmament policies could be written off. The Helsinki conference would turn out retroactively to have been a great error. At the moment, however, a peaceful solution seems to be more likely than dramatic developments.

NEUE RUHR ZEITUNG stresses: New people will have to take over the serious burden of seeking and safeguarding a compromise wiht the strikers. A key role could be played by the former Foreign Minister Stefan Olszowski, who so far is ambassador to East Berlin and who is well known in Bonn. Some people already consider him a possible successor to Gierek, who had commissioned him years ago to introduce economic reforms which have subsequently gotten stuck in the bureaucracy. New people in the top echelon will not suffice any more--the cure must involve the head and the body, the party and the state, industry and agriculture.

WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: The governments in the West, including Bonn, cannot adopt any other position than that of government contacts, economic assistance, and strict noninterference in the event of emergency. Any other concept would be adventurous. For a few days one could have gained the impression that the West was speechless, that nothing was to be said concerning events in Poland for fear that something might get out of hand. But surely it would mean turning things upside down if one were to be concerned exclusively with having nothing happen to the Polish Government--as much as this, too, must be taken into consideration because of all the potentially serious consequences. SPD Chairman Brandt has now said about this what needed to be said. It was high time.

The LEUTKIRCH SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG stresses this point: Unlike the Americans the Soviet Union does not want to be loved but feared. The Soviet silence is menacing and probably is intended to be. It would be fatal if the French president and the German chancellor have to be reminded so soon of their joint statement according to which another Afghanistan would destroy detente policy. It would be fatal for the Poles who are venturing an attempt at freedom without a disruption of the system; it would likewise be fatal for a policy which regarded the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan as an operational mishap of Soviet security requirements. This pauper's oath would spell this out: Afghanistan was not the exception but the rule.

Bonn's GENERAL-ANZEIGER emphasizes: In Poland, too, the truly existing socialism primarily serves Soviet imperialism which, in turn, concedes privileges to a native stratum of functionaries. It [Soviet imperialism] could be plunged into danger. This is why the chances for the strikers' cause are none too good. A success for them would be tantamount to another miracle on the Vistula. The Poles, strikers and government alike, are convinced that they will find a compromise somewhere in the middle, without foreign assistance. The statement in an interview by the Polish ambassador in Washington that he does not believe in an intervention on the part of the USSR rather sounded like a pleading request addressed to Moscow.

The following excerpt comes from NEUE HANNOVERSCHE PRESSE: Federal Minister Egon Franke has now confirmed that the inter-German Rostock summit has also been postponed under this affair which has assumed prairie-fire aspects. The GDR is already fearing supply bottlenecks in the event East Berlin has to help the Poles materially.

Is this a reason for malicious glee in domestic policy? The pope exercised gentle solidarity, Washington is reserved, as are the European neighbors, because any false step might spoil everything. Only in our country do voices of unreasonableness keep cropping up. The refusal of Western aid which they demand at odds with the strikers' appeal might prevent Gierek from making good the promissory notes and lead Poland completely into economic chaos but definitely not one inch closer to the freedom of which they have been dreaming, for which they strike and pray with a desperate courage which would have greatly befitted ourselves in our own history. What kind of solidarity would it be that speculates on misery and blood and tears? In that case, true enough, Poland would be doomed.

In conclusion, a quotation from NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG which writes: There would be little sense in harping in the election campaign on the postponement of the chancellor's visit with GDR State Council chairman and SED chief Honecker. The suggestion that Bonn now ignore the East is not particularly helpful because it does not offer any practical alternative. Fundamental interests, the highly sensitive political stands, and essential economic interlocking do not allow such a policy. It would be foolish, besides, to regard the events in Poland as a purely Polish affair. More than any other member of the Warsaw Pact the GDR is exposed to the radiating force of the mass strikes in the neighbor country with all their political, economic, and social consequences.

FRANKFURTER ALLEGMEINE Editorial

[Ernst-Otto Maetzke editorial: "Lasting Error"]

[Text] The debacle of the cancellation of the chancellor's visit to the GDR 5 days prior to its deadline and 6 weeks prior to the Bundestag elections will have to be thoroughly analyzed for a long time. The worst exposure of Bonn's policy for more than a decade was based on two mistakes which moreover are repeated ones. The first is the linkage of an important project in the field of Ostpolitik with an election date. As in 1972 when the basic treaty with the GDR was first of all to be completed in time for the Bundestag elections, causing hasty and careless negotiations, the first spectacular visit of a German federal chancellor to the other partial German state was most of all to fall in line with the positions of the election campaign. Every other idea was to stand back.

As a consequence the concept was not well founded, preparatory work was negligent, the illusion complete and the final defeat devastating. The Federal Government put its negotiation concessions on the table first--the financing of urgent economic modernization projects in the GDR--and the East Berlin leadership noticed that it did not have to make concessions in return. In the end the GDR leadership, considering the explosive events in Poland, was able to react quickly, coolly and purposefully--changing the travel route of the chancellor and forbidding the desired stopover in Rostock--while he, with a rigid view to the election date, had to cling much too long to the travel plan which became increasingly more uncertain. The impression of unrealistic planning in Bonn with incompetent handling could not be more complete.

The second mistake leading to the debacle is more difficult to describe because it does not involve methods but principles. The error of thinking that totalitarian state leaderships, particularly in East Berlin, must be dealt with as factually, normally and "sensibly" as with others has backfired. After the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan the eyes of the American President were opened after all with regard to the absurdity of such a premise. [paragraph continues]

But the federal chancellor, who considers himself much wiser, was not helped to this insight by the much nearer events in Poland. Bonn is clinging as before to the opinion that communist leaders are normal statesmen with whom one can deal in a trustful and normal fashion, if not in a confidental and casual way. The statement of the Bonn government spokesman after the unavoidable cancellation of the visit demonstrates sentence the desperate clinging to that assumption. It will lead to continually worse mistakes and to an always more visible exposure of German Ostpolitik.

Dealing with communist party and state leaderships is naturally unavoidable, as well as agreements and accords with them. But as soon as a Federal Government does not take into consideration that in so doing it is entering a strange world, it will have to give up more principles, motivations and impulses, so that in the end it will be surrendered to a foreign will. The worst error of German Ostpolitik since 1969 was not the far-reaching unnecessary concessions and their overhasty negotiations, but the lack of knowledge of, nor the intention of wanting to know with whom one was dealing. The same applies to the chancellor's visit in these exciting days of August.

But with regard to these repeated mistakes the Federal Government can claim an extenuating cause which is not an excuse: The Germans in the Federal Republic wanted it that way a decade ago, and they still seem to want it now. They encourage their governments to act wrongly vis-a-vis communist governments, frightened by their threatening power. They want to preserve and safeguard the quiet and pleasant circumstances in which they live. Therefore they vote for everybody who assures them that he knows how to keep communist rulers--be they Brezhnev, Gierek or Honecker--from making threatening gestures, regardless with what concessions. The fact that this legitimates, stabilizes and strengthens the feared communist regimes does not seem to have much convincing power as a counterargument. The continuation of this basic attitude in the country is demonstrated by the election results in Rhineland-Westphalia half a year after the invasion in Afghanistan, as well as by the widespread belief in the "divisibility of detente."

The Federal Government therefore will probably be able to downplay the consequences of the debacle of last week with regard to the election result in October. The opposition will hardly be in a position to exploit in great style the obvious mistakes of the chancellor. Nobody can tell the voters that the worst they must fear is fear itself; they do not want to hear anything of that. The change in thinking will be a long and painful process, but the Polish workers who these days have abandoned such fears may have inserted a prick in some hearts in this country speeding up that process.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Comment

[Hans-Herbert Gaebel editorial: "Not Going Far"]

[Text] They just cannot get together, these two Germans, Schmidt and Honecker. Conditions just are not right for the second time this year. First it was Afghanistan, now it is the Poles who do not allow politics according to plan. The chancellor did not have any alternative but to cancel his trip to Werbellinsee. The situation in Poland does not look good even though the rebelling workers and the cornered leadership are endeavoring to prevent the worst. Nevertheless, we cannot rule out the possibility that the state power will use force after all because it sees no other way. Schmidt would have been plunged into a precarious situation if host Honecker had to acclaim this use of force publicly perhaps during his very visit.

The trip had become superfluous anyway as the other side is not prepared to make any serious concessions at this time. Above all it does not see itself in any position to grant its citizens more freedom to travel to the West. A communique already under preparation remained unfinished. Traveling under these circumstances would have burdened the relationship between the two German states and definitely would not have improved it any further.

Honecker's course of a limited but long-term cooperation with mutual concessions--the counterpart to Schmidt's strategy--had been controversial but now probably met with greater resistance than usual in the SED Politburo. External compulsion always helps such antagonists. In any event, Honecker's leeway has shrunk. Obviously he was veritably relieved when the chancellor informed him by telephone that he intended to stay home. As usual the GDR had already given the whole matter an unmistakable push. Deleting Rostock from the program, quarreling over the transportation facilities, not providing for any Schmidt/Honecker dinner--such accumulated rudeness at least creates clarity. For the time being the inter-German meeting has been adjourned.

Even though both sides would like to await a better opportunity for having this meeting after all, they do not know when this might be. It will definitely no longer be this year; for if the chancellor and other Western statesmen are looking toward Poland with uneasy feelings they see that the East bloc leaders, and above all Honecker and his team, have been seized by nearly undisguised fear. It tells us more than enough that the GDR elite did not even want to run the presumably minor risk that the chancellor during his Rostock visit could have sprayed too many sparks and ignited a Gdansk fire.

Honecker as well as his Moscow protectors, who have been watching the inter-German contacts with rather mixed feelings for some time, thus are not harboring any illusions that Poland is more than just an accident in a shipyard. Anyone being haunted by such serious anxieties is not a satisfactory partner. All one can do is wait for more favorable times.

The hitch to this is that a sort of basic law has emerged in the relations between East and West. It says that business of all kinds is possible only under somewhat stable conditions which guarantee an undisturbed balance. The Polish workers are meeting with sympathy everywhere, on the part of the Bonn government also, of course. But it would be insincere to deny the fact that their justified struggle for a better life and more freedom is bound to make even more difficult the central European act on the balancing beam which already is quite a strain anyway. The loss for answers as to where all this will end up in Poland--where the leadership is not allowed to grant real liberties and cannot provide more food--probably is just as general here as it is beyond the ideological borders.

Hence it is realistic to reckon that in view of the desperate situation of Poland and the Poles, which even in the most favorable case will last for quite some time, the other Europeans cannot go very far either. This does not make wrong the decision of the Federal Government to stick unconditionally to its principle of seeking European cooperation wherever and whenever this is feasible. But the Federal Government does not determine the options alone.

EAST, WEST OBSERVERS INVITED TO BUNDESWEHR MANEUVERS

LD221240 Hamburg DPA in German 0936 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--Bonn will again invite observers from the East and West to this year's autumn maneuvers. Following the stipulations of the Helsinki Final Acts, the Foreign Ministry today advised all participants of the CSCE of the Bundeswehr maneuvers codenamed "St Georg" on 15-19 September in the Dillenburg-Eschwege-Heilbronn-Bamberg area. The notification took place through diplomatic channels.

MITTERRAND DENIES EXPRESSING INTENTION TO RUN FOR PRESIDENCY

LD221023 Paris LE FIGARO in French 20 Aug 80 pp 1,4

[Edmond Berghaud report: "Mitterrand on all Fronts"]

[Excerpts] PS First Secretary Francois Mitterrand stated during a 19 August television interview: "I have never expressed either the desire or the intention to become a candidate in the 1981 presidential election," but he added: "The opposition and the Socialist Party in particular can and must win the presidential election, that is defeat Mr Giscard d'Estaing. I will be the man who will do everything in his power to ensure that this election is won."

The Socialist Party will have to nominate the man who is to represent it in a few months' time since, according to Francois Mitterrand, "We are approaching the starting line." It is on 19 October that an internal, not necessarily long, procedure will start with a view to nominating the candidate.

Discussing the present trouble spots, the Socialist Party leader obviously wanted to give the impression of a statesman who could one day be asked to assume the duties of the highest office in the republic. And the warnings which he directed at Valery Giscard d'Estaing meant that there was an alternative to the present policy. However, he also talked with the kind of freedom which people have when they are members of the opposition and do not have to assume the daily burden of power.

These warnings are related to a situation stemming from an "accumulation of misfortunes and worries, from increasingly frequent social conflicts and from a deterioration in the economic situation. We witness the destruction of France's social and economic fabric. The situation is dangerous."

Referring to the conflict involving fishermen, Francois Mitterrand expressed the view that the government "is not doing its duty. It can be seen that it is shirking its obligations. Only the state can unfreeze the situation. I wonder whether the government does not expect that as a result of a deterioration in the situation, a new political situation is emerging which will enable it to again play upon reflexes governed by fear."

However, even though he wants to see the state strong, the Socialist Party first secretary does not want it to use certain methods since he is afraid that the navy could be used to break the blockade of the ports. Nor did foreign policy get any better treatment on his part since, in the opinion of the Nievre deputy, it "shows inconsistency, weakness and submissiveness" and is "nonexistent."

Discussing defense problems, Francois Mitterrand again recalled that the Soviet SS-20 missiles "represent a danger for the entire West European military system and, therefore, for France. Now the European countries which belong to the Atlantic alliance are in complete disarray." It is, therefore, necessary to reexamine "the content of this alliance which no political party calls in question any longer anyway."

As all political organizations now do, the first secretary seasoned his remarks with a pinch of Gaullism: "Obviously," he said, "France's defense is primarily and always based on the French people themselves."

Poland? "This is one of the most important events in recent years. The Polish people's national aspiration is called freedom." As for PCF criticisms, the Socialist leader believes that they "are connected with the system's spirit and that this is not serious." Everything seems to indicate that the Socialist Party has shelved any possibility of discussion with the PCF leadership and was appealing only to its [presumably PCF]--

In short, Francois Mitterrand is not a candidate for the presidency. However, he remains a potential candidate. He is anxious to appeal to a broader electorate than only that of the Socialist Party. He accuses the president of perhaps playing on the French people's fear. The first secretary counts on their concern. Undoubtedly there is no escaping the gravity of the crisis.

L'HUMANITE REBUTS PS ATTACK ON PCF STANCE ON POLAND

[Jose Fort article: "Abuse"]

[Text] Socialist Party National Secretary Gerard Delfau had an article published in yesterday's LE MONDE in which, using the strikes in Poland as a pretext, he makes "three observations" on the situation in that country and concludes: "Nothing...can be expected from the PCF...except slanders and abuse. After betraying the cause of the people of the left in 1977, the PCF leaders are now betraying internationalist solidarity in Afghanistan and working class solidarity in Poland."

Why such a volley of abuse and why now? Throughout the summer the Socialist Party has made itself conspicuous only by its complete nonparticipation in the struggles waged by the French working class and its lack of internationalist solidarity.

What has the Socialist Party done in support of the Ladrecht miners who have been occupying the Destival mines at Ales?

What has the Socialist Party done to prevent the dismantling of Renault plants at Billancourt and the dismissal of Michel Certano, the enterprise's CGT secretary general?

Nothing, except some furtive appearances of some of its representatives seeking cheap photographic publicity.

Since Gerard Delfau is apparently ignorant of these things, let us enlighten him.

In August 1980 it is not in Poland that police have been occupying plants and beating up strikers and that trade union activists have been arrested. It is in France! And it is not in the country where the human rights declaration was born that negotiations between strikers and management have been broadcast direct to all the personnel. It is in Gdansk!

The Socialist Party national secretary has headlined his article on Poland "Solidarity." But what has the Socialist Party done to forcefully express its anger at Israeli bombing of Palestinian refugee camps and at massacres of workers committed in the name of the "free" world. At best, a short communique and that was all....

In fact, by means of the pen of one of its national secretaries, the Socialist Party has just indulged in one of those despicable political maneuvers in which it is expert. By attacking the PCF with respect to events which are taking place elsewhere, it is trying to occupy--at least for a moment--the ground of the working class and solidarity. A ground alien to it...in France.

At a time when French Communists devote all their efforts to the support and intensification of the struggles waged by French workers and when they feel confident that the Polish people are capable of resolving their own problems by themselves, the Socialist Party is again showing what it is really like--more extremist than Giscard!

VATICAN CITES IMPORTANCE OF RADIO PROGRAMS TO POLAND

LD221925 Vatican City in Serbo-Croatian to Yugoslavia 1715 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Since a Polish pope occupies the seat of St Peter, Vatican Radio in Polish is listened to a lot and with pleasure throughout Poland. This transpires from (?studies) of public opinion polls in Poland.

Since in Poland the Communist authorities are pursuing toward the church and religious communities the strictest censorship, the Polish program of Vatican Radio also carries regularly Cardinal Wyszynski's speeches or the decisions of the Polish Episcopate from [word indistinct] conferences. Thus it was this program which also made it possible for the Polish masses to recently hear the content of the important speech made by the Polish Primate Cardinal Wyszynski last Sunday on the critical social situation in Poland and to which we too have given extensive coverage.

As foreign correspondents report from Poland, strikers look to the church with strength and confidence, in particular to their primate, Cardinal Wyszynski. Many strikers carry on their chests small crosses or the picture of Our Lady of Czestochowa. At meetings they very often sing religious songs. At entrances to many factories and shipyards they have publicly displayed the picture of John Paul II. Thus, none of the police nor any of the authorities dares to remove the picture of John Paul II from the tower of the communist Lenin Shipyard. The Polish Church--and as we saw last Wednesday during the general audience even the Holy Father himself--is very cautious and discreet when it speaks of the situation in Poland in order that the Polish authorities or the Communist Party may not misinterpret anything and in order not to make the strikers' already difficult situation even more difficult.

FOREIGN MINISTER COLOMBO COMMENTS ON POLISH CRISIS

LD232042 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo has made a speech on the Polish crisis. Speaking in Rimini, the minister first of all underlined the great feeling of responsibility with which the Italian Government expressed its attitude in order to avoid the ambiguity of any intervention or interference in Poland's internal affairs. This line also belongs to the other eight EEC countries which have decided to abstain for the time being from taking a stance or making individual or joint decisions. However Italy is firmly resolved to participate in any likely initiative which could contribute or improve the living conditions of the Polish population.

SOCIALIST PARTY COMMUNIQUE SCORES RULING COALITION

LD250846 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 24 Aug 80

[Excerpts] In a communique released yesterday at the end of a joint session of its National Secretariat and Executive Committee, the Socialist Party [PS] comments on the crisis in Poland, expresses solidarity with the Polish workers and state that it is possible to live in peace, freedom and progress only under democratic socialism. This meeting of the PS leading bodies was arguably the day's most significant political event. I hand you over to Pedro Cid:

The Portuguese political scene may be about to see new developments, possibly surprising ones, some of which, I am told, on matters of some--not to say the utmost--delicacy. The powers of decision still rest on the current president of the republic in accordance with a legitimacy which some people are doing their utmost to question but which in fact will only come to an end when his mandate expires in January 1981.

A source that I regard as unimpeachable has told me that important developments may occur within the next few days which will be, or may be, prompted by decisions to be taken by President Eanes backed by the full weight of his legitimacy as sole sovereign figure.

Professional secrecy and the journalist's code of ethical conduct allow me to say no more. For the same reasons I have sketched out the scenario just as it was described to me. It only remains for us to await developments and, as soon as possible, to go deeper into the matter. I am told that the meeting of the PS leadership was one of the best attended ever. The few absentees, such as Antonio Arnaut, Antonio Macedo and Antonio Esteves, were people traveling abroad.

Mario Soares gave his colleagues a major in-depth analysis of the national political situation. He highlighted the contradictions which, in his opinion, exist within the government coalition and expressed great optimism over the performance of the Republican and Socialist Front [FRS] in the coming elections. Soares reported in detail on the results of his negotiations and meetings with the current president of the republic, which had conclusive results and a successful outcome. Thus Mario Soares asked the PS National Secretariat and Executive Committee to support his own conclusions, that Ramalho Eanes is, in the present circumstances, the presidential candidate who would best serve democracy, and that therefore the PS should support him in the event of his deciding to stand again for office.

There were some dissenting voices but the overwhelming majority supported Mario Soares' proposals. A vote was taken, and although the result was not unanimously in Eanes's favor, the support he has in the PS was made unequivocally clear.

Later in the evening Mario Soares read the meeting's final communique to the waiting reporters. It started with an attack on the government.

[Begin recording] To the dissatisfaction caused by the bankruptcy of its government the Democratic Alliance is replying with electioneering which makes it clearer with every passing day that the present executive is behaving more as a partisan force than as the government of all Portuguese people. [end recording]

The communique then goes on to refer to today's session of the Standing Committee of the assembly of the republic. After reading the communique Mario Soares had a talk with the reporters during which he said that if the Standing Committee votes against convening an extraordinary session of parliament the PS will act with all the means at its disposal. He refused to elaborate when I asked him to what means he proposed to resort. With regard to the investigation into Sa Carneiro's affairs, this is how the Socialists define their stand in the meeting's final communique:

[Begin Soares recording] As far as the PS is concerned, the important thing is the transparency of the actions of those holding office in the organs of sovereinty. This transparency is the indispensable guarantee of the democratic functioning of the institutions.

Different political sectors, from both the left and the right, have made the same demand. The courts have their own jurisdiction which is not affected by the holding of such a [parliamentary] enquiry. It is strange, therefore, that Dr Francisco Sa Carneiro should refuse to accept the ethical and political judgement of the most representative body of the Portuguese people, a body upon which he depends politically, and that he should seek to issue a mere general statement, devoid of any explanation, with the government seated silently around him, as a substitute for the judgment of the courts and parliament. [end recording]

In this connection it should be said that during the audience granted the day before yesterday by the president of the republic to a delegation of the Communist Party of the Portuguese Workers the latter is reported to have vehemently put to General Ramalho Eanes its opinion that the president of the republic should dismiss the Sa Carneiro government. But to return to the PS communique, after referring to the government in such critical terms and mentioning the question of the parliamentary inquiry, Mario Soares went on to disclose the meeting's main conclusion:

[Begin recording] With regard to the presidential elections a decision has been made. The executive committee has mandated the secretary general to convey this decision to the party's partners in the republican and socialist front and to the presient of the republic. [end recording]

A further qualitative step has thus been taken in this question of the presidential elections. The PS decision has been made but the PS is keeping its secret, basically out of mere courtesy, that is to say, the Socialist leaders wish to acquaint their front partners with the decision before making it public.

A meeting has already been set for this morning at 1000 between Mario Soares and President Ramalho Eanes.

In the final section of the communique the PS expresses its opinion of the situation in the mass media.

[Begin Soares recording] The executive committee expresses its profound concern over the atmosphere of crisis that exists in the state-owned mass media, especially in RDP [Portuguese Radio] and RTP [Portuguese Television Service]. This atmosphere is due to the appointments which have been made and the changes which have been introduced in order to secure control of these media and manipulating the news.

In expressing its repudiation of the contemptible policy pursued by the Democratic Alliance in the mass media, the executive committee draws the attention of the Portuguese people to the biased nature of the daily news conveyed to them, and to the gravity of this circumstance, especially before important elections. [end recording]

Curiously--and I am adding this as a reporter's footnote--during the meeting of the PS leadership bodies those present were vehemently urged not to leak any information so as to prevent the mass media from disclosing any details before Mario Soares makes his announcement later today after his visit to the presidential palace.

UNKNOWN GUNMEN ATTACK LISSARIDHIS' HOME; NO OCCUPANTS HURT

NC241931 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 24 Aug 80

[Text] Around 2000 tonight in Prodhromos, unknown gunmen attacked the summer home of Vasos Lissaridhis, chairman of the socialist party EDEK. Mr Lissaridhis, who was inside the house, was not hurt, nor were any of his guards. The attack was reported to the police, who sent reinforcements to the area and began a search and an investigation. According to information from the area, the gunmen fired at Mr Lissaridhis' house from two directions. The guards fired back, and the exchange of fire lasted for about 10 minutes. Meanwhile, the EDEK chairman, whom we telephoned, made the following statement to us:

I believe that only enemies of Cyprus without Cypriot blood could do such an act. I call on the people to remain absolutely calm. I continue to believe that the finger that triggered the gun must be outside Cyprus. Mr Lissaridhis adds: If assassination was the aim of the attack, it is foolish. For the second time I state that ideas are neither assassinated nor intimidated. It is ironic, he added, because the attack falls at precisely the same time of the year that Dhoros Loizou [former EDEK cadre shot in August 1974] was assasinated during another attempt that was made against my life.

Mr Lissaridhis concluded: I declare that if anyone believes that theirconspiratoral plans could achieve success with this method they are disillusioned.

KHARAVYI: U.S. PREPARING FOR IRAN INVASION AT AKROTIRI

NC230628 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 23 Aug 80 pp 1, 7

[Excerpts] It appears that Cyprus is getting involved in the adventurous plans of American imperialism for the Middle East and particularly in President Carter's preparations for intervention in Iran.

According to absolutely authoritative reports, great activity involving Hercules transport planes has been noted at the Akrotiri base during the last few nights. These planes are escorted by (Vulkan) bombers. The only planes that move during daytime are Lightning fighters which are continuously in the air.

According to our reports, during the last two nights four Hercules planes carried out 30 flights over the Akrotiri base carrying American military personnel and war materiel. The American military personnel are housed in a separate camp and their number is unknown.

It is obvious that these activities are connected with the U.S. Pentagon's general preparations in the region for aggression against Iran. Carter's intentions for an American invasion of Iran by mid-October have been disclosed by the well-known journalist Jack Anderson and have now been confirmed by other sources as well.

It is recalled that it has recently become known that the United States and Britain are discussing a plan for the partitioning of Iran. This plan will be implemented with the assistance of armed forces stationed near this country. The unusual activity of military aircraft at Akrotiri confirms in an undeniable way the crafty machinations of British-American imperialism and increases the fears about Cyprus' involvement in a wider military conflict in the Middle East area.

Political observers in Nicosia have pointed out that a very serious situation might be created if Cyprus is ultimately used as an American springboard for aggression. It is again pointed out that the Americanization of the British bases, which is no longer concealed, is fully opposed to the treaty of establishment.

The Cyprus Government must not remain idle in view of what is going on at the bases and it should not take lightly the British "assurances" that no other country is using the bases. It can and must seek the truth about the real role of these British carcinomas before we find ourselves involved in situations that would be disastrous for our existence as an independent and nonaligned state.

Pan-Cypriot Peace Council Statement

[Statement by the pan-Cypriot Peace Council--presumably released on 23 Aug]

[Text] The press reports dealing with the noted increase of activity at the British base of Akrotiri, along with the disclosures of the Pentagon's plans about a military intervention in Iran, can only cause concern to the Cypriot people over the direct involvement of our country in a terrible adventure with inestimable consequences.

The pan-Cypriot Peace Council [PPC] has never ceased to warn the people about the agonizing dangers entailed by the presence of the sovereign British bases on Cyprus territory--dangers that have increased considerably recently because of the noted direct interest of the U.S. war machine in these bases and the settlement of U.S. military personnel within these bases. Actually, the bases were converted a long time ago into American bases and this--even formally--constitutes a flagrant violation of the treaty of establishment that rules the status of the bases. During last year's PPC mobilizations--the peace march and the disarmament week--the demand for the denunciation of this treaty, which was imposed on the Cypriot people, and for the general demilitarization of Cyprus as a basic element for a definite Cyprus solution was most categorically raised.

This demand, which is supported by all the people, must be promoted by the government of the republic in all directions because, among other things, it most vividly emphasizes the linking of Cyprus' struggle for justice and freedom with all mankind's struggle for the consolidation of peace and against the warlike imperialist forces. No one must forget that the root of Cyprus' sufferings is in the strategic importance that the imperialist centers attach to the island.

The PPC will continue in the future the struggle for the abolition of the British bases. During the forthcoming people's world assembly for peace to be held in Sofia from 23 to 27 September it will again denounce the growing imperialist machinations against Cyprus, machinations which aim at using Cyprus as a bridgehead for their aggressive operations being planned for the region, and will ask for the escalation of international solidarity for our island.

Government Spokesman's Comments

[Text] Yesterday the government spokesman was requested to comment on a report that the Americans are using the British air base at Akrotiri for preparations to invade Iran. The spokesman made the following statement:

The government does not possess such information, but when such reports are published it is natural that the state should hold pertinent investigations.

The government's position on the use of the British bases is well known. These bases must be used for the purposes stipulated by the treaty of establishment.

SOCIALIST PARTY LEADERS OF SOUTHERN EUROPE ISSUE COMMUNIQUE

NC221713 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 22 Aug 80 p 6

[Apparent text of 21 August joint communique on the meeting in Kerkira among the five Socialist Party leaders of southern Europe]

[Text] At the invitation of PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou, a meeting was held in Kerkira of the leaders of the socialist parties of Portugal, Mario Soares; Spain, Felipe Gonzales; Italy, Bettino Craxi; and Charles Hernu, a member of the political bureau of the Socialist Party of France, who represented PS First Secretary Francois Mitterrand.

Each of those present explained the problems and situation in his country. A long discussion on the common problems of the five countries followed. Noting the common points in their policies, the five decided to hold such meetings periodically--the next meeting will be in Portugal in September--so that there may be permanent cooperation among the socialist parties of southern Europe. Among other things, the five leaders explained the probelm of the rightwing and of the extreme rightwing in Europe and stressed their determination to join efforts to jointly combat it--the first goal being the forthcoming elections in Portugal, Greece and France.

They also expressed their concern over and analyzed the serious problem resulting from the existence of terrorism in some of their countries.

They also analyzed the conflict spots existing today in the world (Afghanistan), particularly the Mediterranean (Middle East, Cyprus, the other national issues of our country, etc). They also occupied themselves with their countries' participation in the efforts for detente and for peace in the world, particularly in the area of the Mediterranean in connection with the Madrid conference, which they hope will succeed despite the adverse world situation.

If the North-South dialogue is to be accepted on a worldwide scale, it must take place first in Europe.

Analyzing the international situation the leaders of the socialist parties emphasized recent events in Latin America.

They condemned the military coup in Bolivia, which overthrew the democratically elected President Siles Zuazo.

They condemned as a political farce Pinochet's referendum, which will be held in Chile on 11 September.

They stressed their support for the people of El Salvador.

Firally, in connection with events in Poland, they stressed their support for the working people and the intellectuals of this country, who are claiming collective freedoms, and expressed the hope that the answer to these claims would not be oppression.

The Kerkira meeting ended with the leaders of the five socialist parties having noted that socialism for Europe was no longer a remote vision but an approaching reality.

SPOE DECIDES AGAINST TANK EXPORTS TO CHILE

AU211242 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 21 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] Vienna--After intensive discussions in the cabinet and in the presidium of the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] it is now certain that the Steyr Corporation's tank deal with Chile has blown up. Today, Thursday, the four cabinet members in charge will make the formal decision. Interior Mirister Erwin Lanc, who is to announce the decision, declared as early as on Wednesday, however, that on the basis of the legal situation in Austria and the current situation in Chile only a negative decision is possible.

The law regulating arms exports and its explanatory comment expressly states that humanitarian reasons, especially the possibility that weapons might be used to oppress human rights, are to be considered as objections stemming from the policy of neutrality, Interior Minister Lanc declared afterwards.

All the defense minister has to do, he said, is to judge whether the weapons to be exported could be used against Austria. The foreign minister, while having no objections from the point of view of neutrality, in his assessment left the humanitarian aspect undecided. Therefore he would announce a negative decision in line with the legal situation, Lanc said.

He also referred to the latest report to the UN General Assembly on Chile which indicates increasing oppression. He added that the situation in Argentina was assessed somewhat differently.

Arms exports will continue to pose problems beyond the case in question. In each case they will require discretionary decisions for which the existing law is adequate, Lanc said.

Chancellor Kreisky declares after the SPOe presidium session that the argument of safeguarding jobs had played an important role in the discussion. However, there was consensus in principle that arms exports are not desirable. In the particular case concerned, the objections outweighed other considerations, Kreisky said, adding that there is no incolination to intensify arms production. Another factor which contributed to the negative decision was the developments in Bolivia and the deterioration of the situation in Chile. In those circumstances a promise not to use the tanks against the Chilean people was not adequate, he said.

Ministers Confirm Decision

[Excerpts] Yesterday [21 August] Chancellor Kreisky informed the cabinet about the discussion held in the enlarged presidium of the Austrian Socialist Party on the question of tank exports to Chile.

Subsequently the cabinet members in charge of making the decision on this issue outlined their views, the minister of the interior stating that he intended to announce a negative decision.

Interior Minister Lanc declared that in consensus with the foreign minister and the defense minister and after consulting with the chancellor--who, in the light of all juridical and human rights considerations also rejected the deal--he would now have to draft a negative reply [to the Steyr Corporation's request for an export license]. This reply will be presented once more to the cabinet for review, and then will be sent to the Steyr corporation, presumably in the first half of September.

SCHMIDT, NORWAY'S NORDLI DISCUSS POLAND, NATO

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 25 Aug (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has called for restraint by governments "outside Poland" in assessing present developments in Poland. After a meeting with Norwegian Prime Minister Odvar Nordli in Hamburg, Schmidt said today that the available information on the personnel changes in the Polish party leadership does not permit an accurate assessment. In his talks with Nordli there was agreement on this question. Both he and Nordli observed developments in Poland with "great sympathy."

Referring to the so-called dual NATO decision last December Schmidt said that he and Nordli agreed that both countries have to make a contribution to the defense capability of the alliance in accordance with their capacity. Simultaneously the great powers have to engage in talks on arms limitation on the basis of the balance of power. Judging by a letter he has received recently from the Soviet leadership he feels that the Soviet side is most willing to start such negotiations. The letter was evidently designed to underline the seriousness of the Soviet efforts.

Foreign Ministers Confer

[Text] Hamburg, 24 Aug (DPA)--Norwegian Prime Minister Odvar Nordli met Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on Sunday afternoon for political talks at the latter's holiday home on Lake Prahm. (Schleswig-Holstein). Meanwhile Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher received his Norwegian opposite number, Knut Frydenlund in Bremen. The heads of government and their foreign ministers will be continuing their talks on Monday at the guest house of the Hamburg Senat.

The exchange of views concerns Norwegian oil supplies to the Federal Republic and other matters. Observers expect that the international crises and above all the situation in the Eastern bloc will be discussed. Concerning the foreign ministers' meeting the Bonn Foreign Ministry said that Genscher and Frydenlund intend to discuss all international questions and their effects on the NATO alliance, on whose northern flank Norway is playing an important part. A reception by Bremen's Mayor Hans Koschnick is planned for the foreign ministers tonight. Nordli was welcomed by Schmidt this afternoon at Hohn military airport near Rendsburg. Subsequently the two flew by helicopter to Lake Brahm where Schmidt has a holiday home.

Talks Continue

LD251702 Hamburg DPA in German 0925 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 25 Aug (DPA)--The Norwegian prime minister, Odvar Nordli, and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt continued their talks in Hamburg today. Also present at the meeting in the Hamburg Senat's guest residence are Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Norwegian counterpart Knut Frydenlund.

INTER-GERMAN SUMMIT SEEN AS 'HIGHLY UNLIKELY' THIS YEAR

LD251504 Hamburg DPA in German 1418 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government has affirmed its interest in holding the postponed meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED chief Erich Honecker as soon as possible.

Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling told the press in Bonn today that the government hopes that a more suitable time, named as a prerequisite on Friday when the chancellor's visit to the GDR was canceled, will not be delayed too long. No one, however, not even the chancellor, can say today whether this will be before the end of the year.

Meanwhile it has been learned from the Federal Government that it is regarded as highly unlikely that Schmidt's visit to the GDR will take place this year. The reasons given for this are expected continuing side effects from the conflicts in Poland on the GDR's scope of action in its relations with the Federal Republic, particularly in the easing of personal restrictions desired by Bonn.

BRANDT ON SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING, POLAND

LD251206 Hamburg DPA in German 1102 25 Aug 80

[Text] Hamburg--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt belives that talks must continue between Bonn and East Berlin. In an interview with STERN magazine, Brandt said that the summit meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED leader Honecker should be held later at a mutually suitable time. The meeting is still important because there is unchanged interest in practical cooperation and in traffic alleviations between the two parts of Germany. In the SPD chairman's opinion, Bonn's policy of detente is not yet at an end since it is guided mainly by efforts to reduce the gulf between East and West and thus make peace more secure. "To an important extent this has been achieved," Brandt said. The GDR and Federal Republic had a special duty to help secure peace in Europe.

Comments on Poland

LD251048 Hamburg DPA in German 1023 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] Hamburg--In the view of SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, the events in Poland are catastrophic for communists in Europe. In an interview with the Hamburg magazine STERN, Brandt said that interference from outside could not help. The Federal Government, however, should--as the U.S. Government is apparently prepared to do--examine the question of how Poland's economic difficulties could be overcome through understanding and cooperation. The SPD politician warned against making the events in Poland the subject of election debates in the Federal Republic.

GERMAN BANKS STAND BY CREDIT OFFER TO POLAND

[Text] Frankfurt, 26 Aug (DPA)--The German banks stand by their offer to grant Poland credits of over DM1.2 billion in order to balance its 1980 balance of payments. This assurance was given last night by Hans Friderich, spokesman of the board of the Dresdner bank, which is part of the consortium of banks. Friderichs spoke to the Frankfurt club of economic journalists and underlined that so far Poland has punctually and correctly fulfilled its repayment and interest obligations. Towards the Dresdner bank, which for many years has been active in commercial business with Poland, it has always proven itself to be a "pleasant business partner." The Dresdner bank's share of the promised credits was DM100 million and is totally justifiable.

According to Friderichs the assessment of the long-term prospects for economic policy was fundamentally "not bad." As an important supplier of coal and raw materials the country would in future profit considerably from rising energy and raw material prices. However, nobody could know today how the development in Poland would continue following the latest strike wave.

FRG WILL NOT ISSUE OFFICIAL STATEMENT ON ARRESTS IN POLAND

LD221229 Hamburg DPA in German 1121 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 22 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government evidently does not intend to call for the release of arrested dissidents in Poland in an official statement. Government Spokesman Gruenewald told a new conference in Bonn today that the Federal Government has the highest respect for the statement by the U.S. State Department spokesman expressing "concern" over the arrest of the dissidents and calling for their early release. If Bonn has not proceeded in the same way, Gruenewald said, this is because for years it has worked "quietly" to help people under arrest and the dissidents. The Federal Government uses a different approach in this respect.

GDR NOT WILLING TO LOWER AGE OF TRAVELERS TO WEST

LD232038 Hamburg DPA in German 1601 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Text] Berlin, 23 Aug--According to a report in BERLINER MORGENPOST, the GDR had signalled before Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's cancellation of the proposed inter-German summit meeting at Werbellinsee that a lowering of the age limit for GDR citizens allowed to travel to the West was out of the question. The paper reports in its Sunday edition that the draft communiques for the meeting, exchanged and discussed by both sides, had made no mention of easing the lot of the people. If agreements on minor technical alleviations in travel and visiting arrangements could have been reached at all they would have been announced only later.

CDU CALLS FOR GOVERNMENT TO RETHINK 'FAILED OSTPOLITIK'

[Excerpts] Bonn, 25 Aug (DPA)--The CDU National Executive has called on the SPD/FDP government to rethink its "failed Ostpolitik." The executive agreed today at a meeting in Bonn with CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl when he pointed out, with reference to the cancelled meetings between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Edward Gierek and Erich Honecker, the contradictions between what was said by the government and the actual situation. Kohl stressed: The reality in Europe remains the contradiction between the euphoria of detente in the SPD and its leadership and the totalitarian power interests of communist party leaders."

The political realities in the GDR and the whole of Eastern Europe have caught up with Federal Chancellor Schmidt, said Kohl. his talks with Gierek and Honecker had originally been intended to give the impression during the election campaign of a chancellor who not only mediates between the United States and the Soviet Union but, in addition, guarantees the whole of Europe as a peaceful refuge of detente regardless of Afghanistan. Confronted with reality Schmidt has now cancelled his trip to the GDR. He was not able to exclude the possibility that he might have been exchanging words of detente with Honecker while Polish workers at the same time were possibly being put down by force with the public approval of the SED leadership.

Alluding to FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher's appeal over the weekend for a community of interests, Kohl said that appeals for common interests with regard to Ostpolitik and inter-German policy would only make sense if the SPD and FDP stopped "disparaging the CDU/CSU as an enemy of peace." Another conditions would have to be that a community of interests be sought before government decisions and measures were made and not only after they had failed. The democratic parties should also reestablish a common line in assessing communist systems.

In Kohl's view, the situation in Poland exposes a crisis in communism. After 35 years of communist rule it had not been possible to secure for the Polish people either the material basis for existence or a dignified life. He said it was a sign of hope for all of Europe that the human and civil rights ideals lived on in Poland even after decades of rule by communists and socialists. This was proved by the political demands of the striking workers who were demanding free trade unions and the abolition of censorship.

Kohl said that his party was hoping, along with the Polish workers, that the communist leadership in Warsaw and Moscow would realize that economic and social problems can only be solved in the long term by reforms and more freedom and not by terror from above or outside. The CDU executive stressed the demand for a release of imprisoned representatives of the Polish civil rights movement.

PAPERS COMMENT ON POLISH SITUATION, OSTPOLITIK

DW260748 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Press Review]

[Text] The Freiburg BADISCHE ZEITUNG writes: It was a black Sunday for Edward Gierek. Never before has the party boss of an East block country come out with self-criticism to this degree in public, never before has a communist party leader in the Moscow power sphere been forced to go to the limit of what is justifiable under communist auspices, of what is nearly no longer justifiable, to find contact again with is people who are protesting without violence but quite eloquently. Even if Gierek avoided mentioning free trade unions, everybody knows what is meant. This concession to the workers, which is probably the most far-reaching and might spell a sort of Polish spring under the control of the Warsaw leadership, probably was made with the approval of Moscow.

BERLINER MORGENPOST stresses: The ice on which Polish party chief Gierek has been balancing in search of a mainstay is cracking everywhere. The breathing spell turns out to be a gasp for air. The personnel reshuffle at the top of the party and government as well as the announced reforms have slightly reduced the agitation along the front of the striking workers, to be sure, but they failed to end the walkouts. The striking workers wonder justly, of course, what the promises are worth of a man from whose hands the power is slipping away. Gierek naturally realized quite properly that what is at stake in agitated Poland by far is no longer the mere elimination of social dissatisfaction but a political change in both the party and the state. Gierek's argumentation is veritably impregnated with concern about a Soviet intervention. No doubt the Soviets are standing by. Lament it as we may--there will not be a communism with human features in Poland, either.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG argues: Even if we do not put it past Gierek to make the best of the leeway granted him by the Kremlin in tacit collusion, who will give the strikers the guarantee that Moscow won't tighten the reins again at the next opportunity? Today the party leadership is weak, and the Soviets seem to be inclined to dodge an intrusion if possible. This is the temptation of the movement in Poland where the lack of confidence could have such a fatal effect.

Bremen's WESERKURIER makes the following comment: The crisis cannot be managed with publicly demonstrated repentance and empty promises. What is needed is a democratization which no doubt will find its limits where the system or Poland's pact commitments are called into question. Anyone hoping for anything else is dreaming and quite different from the strikers who have raised steep, albeit not excessive, demands, since they are aware of the geopolitical situation of their country.

HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG stresses this point: A Polish model would be bound to entail profound effects on the power and economic structures of other communist states. Will the Moscow leadership allow this to happen? The conflict in Poland is approaching a new climax which will conjure up the danger of violent clashes at the very moment when both sides are no longer prepared to compromise for fear of loss in prestige. At that point the state power will restore law and order.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU notes: The people obviously do not believe in personnel alternatives among the ruling communists, so they probably are no longer prepared to listen to the contents of the recent promises. The striking people must find out whether Gierek's offer is really the utter limit to the compromise. If this is the case, the attempt to surpass these limits could still maneuver the country into a catastrophe in light of the international situation.

KIELER NACHRICHTEN writes: The government and the party in Warsaw had to pay considerably in a grave emergency by admitting gross negligence on their part. Personnel changes and concessions with regard to "free trade unions" make one prick up one's ears, but this did not cause wantonness on the part of the strikers. They do not think they have reached the end of a long way yet, and they do not want to be irritated by a regime that is up to its neck in hot water. But after all, only the final results will count.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG maintains: The problem is insoluble. The ruling class, including Gierek, can accept such reforms only at the expense of its own decline: either by peaceful transition to a new, democratically legitimated elite, or by expulsion with the help of Russian tanks. It will defend itself against that in every way possible. So what will Gierek and his people do in such a situation? They will play for time; they may make further formal concessions such as the election of trade union leaders, whom one could easily dispose of later on when the basic structure of the dictatorial apparatus is working again.

In this connection a few commentaries on the new orientation demanded by the CDU/CSU of Bonn's foreign policy, namely detente policy and the policy toward the East:

An excerpt from a commentary in WESTFAELISCHE RUNDSCHAU of Dortmund: It is absurd to depict the Polish events and the postponement of the German-German summit in this context as a disaster, but the opposition is trying to do it. Regardless of which Western government negotiates with Moscow or the other East Europeans, none of them ever would want to fraternize with the ruling people there or guarantee their political survival. This would be too gross a misunderstanding. Detente policy is nothing but the attempt to establish sensible mutual relations without the pressure of threats, and without giving up mutual hopes for a change of systems or conditions. The communists expect that from us, and we from them. Political conditions show that we are right, writes WESTFAELISCHE RUNDSCHAU.

SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE notes: The basic dispute about Ostpolitik demands an examination and new orientation of foreign policy. It is certainly correct that the Federal Government is keeping itself guarded with regard to the Polish affair. It is indisputable, however, that this cannot and may not be a reason for keeping these issues out of the election campaign. Making peace more secure and achieving improvements for the people in the West and in the East was the declared aim of detente policy of the social-liberal coalition. The revolt of the workers in Poland demonstrates that this project has failed at least in some fields and this can and must be discussed.

KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER writes: It is not new that the Union parties reject the policy toward the East and the policy on Germany. It is not understandable, however, that the CDU/CSU holds Bonn's Ostpolitik responsible for the events in Poland. Should the Federal Government not have supported economically the country for which the Union has repeatedly expressed sympathies--out of fear of the risks entailed by detente and economic cooperation? Is the policy vis-a-vis the GDR wrong because it is not free of setbacks?

GENSCHER TO URGE UN ACTION ON LISTING ARMS, AID EXPENDITURES

LD231415 Hamburg DPA in German 1350 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 23 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher intends to brief the world more thoroughly on the peaceful actions and arms expenditures of individual countries. Only a few days before the UN General Assembly meeting in New York where Genscher is to expound the Federal Republic's attitude concerning North-South relations, he said in an interview on Bavarian Radio today: "World public opinion must be able to visualize which states are primarily pursuing peaceful deeds and which are spending their resources primarily on arms." To this end the United Nations ought to keep a register which shows how many dollars per capita are spent by each industrial state on development aid and on arms. A second register ought to show arms imports and exports. Genscher said that if his advice is taken, it will show that the Federal Republic is in an exemplary position. Last year Bonn gave nearly twice as much development aid as all communist industrial states put together. In terms of GNP the Federal Republic in fact spent four times as much.

COMMENTATORS EXAMINE BROWN SPEECH, 'CARTER DOCTRINE'

[Commentary signed HVB: "No World Policeman But..."]

[Text] The Carter doctrine is beginning to take shape. Following similar agreements with Kenya and Oman, the United States has now concluded a treaty with Somalia, permitting the use of naval ports and bases, although permanent bases have intentionally been renounced. The United States wants to be a credible presence in the regions of the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean, but it does not want to relapse into the role of a world policeman. Washington is now pursuing a power policy more freely than since the fall of Vietnam in 1975.

The Carter doctrine indicates that every "foreign threat" against friendly regimes along the oil routes "will be repulsed with all means, including military means." It would be an empty threat if it were not supported by military instruments: the rapid deployment force with its reserve of army divisions, marines, air and naval forces. In continental America this amounts to a total of about 150,000 men who will be available--however, hardly prior to 1982. Since logistic positions are necessary for their mobility, ships will be permanently present in the region as floating arms depots, and military rights are being negotiated as in Somalia, where Berbera holds a dominating position in the entry to the Persian Gulf.

As regards the two interpretations of the Soviet invasion--strengthening of the rule over Afghanistan or the intention to expand toward the south--the White House tends toward the latter idea. The filling of the American power vacuum together with American preparedness to intervene is supposed to deter the Soviet Union in this respect. [paragraph continues]

It is the horror vacui that makes the United States show imperial activity after the fall of the shah and the extended Brezhnev doctrine. Concern for the Western allies and Japan is also involved. According to the plain words of Secretary of Defense Brown, they "threaten to become Soviet satellites rather than U.S. allies," should Moscow dominate at some time in the Persian Gulf.

Aim of Speech Examined

[Commentary signed -TY-: "Moscow's Nuclear Strategy From Brown's Point of View"]

[Text] For U.S. Secretary of Defense Harold Brown, his appearance at the Naval War College in Newport was a welcome pretext. The secretary with his speech was not addressing the officers in the hall so much as the world public--and particularly two groups in it: the NATO allies and the Kremlin. To them Jimmy Carters' Presidential Directive 59 was supposed to be explained once more, the directive outlining Washington's nuclear strategy. The "new" doctrine, which will pick its targets not so much in populated centers as among military objects, so far has touched off skeptical, critical and polemical reactions of a manifold character. (Naturally there were also positive reactions, but they pose no problem for Brown and the United States.)

Since the Americans with their deterrence calculations between the East and the West count on the highest rationality, they want first of all to make sure that their intentions are correctly understood everywhere, particularly in Moscow. So Brown was repeating in Newport that they are betting on deterrence as before, that they are not aiming for an offensive "first strike capability" and that they are interested in arms control as before. But in making preparations for Presidential Directive 59 one is forced to "view the new doctrine in the light of what we know about Soviet military power strategy and planning."

According to Brown the Soviet leadership in the event of war "seems to take into consideration at least the possibility of a relatively long exchange of missiles." The secretary went on to say that "at least some circles seem to take seriously the theoretical possibility of gaining a victory in such a war." America may not ignore this, even if it thinks differently. Hence the warning language vis-a-vis Moscow. But is Washington assessing the Soviet way of thinking correctly?

DIE WELT VIEWS OPTIONS OF NEW 'STEALTH' SYSTEM

[Dispatch on Secretary Harold Brown's press conference in Washington, signed RTR.: "The U.S. Air Force Is Flying 'Invisibly'"]

[Excerpt] Washington/Los Angeles--Brown refused to divulge details. The flight test of an "invisible" plane that cannot be discovered by enemy radar, which was confirmed by the secretary, is based on the secret development of an electronic "magic hood." Experts are aware that this does not involve the development of a completely new airplane but the test of a complicated installation of electronic countermeasures.

Radar-guided enemy weapons are misled by this installation in such a way that the U.S. plane seemingly does not exist.

The "magic hood" can be spread not only over airplanes but also and just as easily over other metal military objects such as warships, for instance. In the apparently endless struggle between electronic weapons and electonic counterweapons this represents, for the time being, the latest step at the present technical level. Installed in a bomber the system would work approximately as follows: Upon reception of a radar signal the system automatically measures the transmitted frequency. Then computers aboard the plane quickly select the electronic "magic hood" tailored for this particular frequency spectrum. Following its radar beam the enemy weapon flies toward an electronically created image which does not exist at all. The consequence: The enemy missile misses the bomber at a great distance.

Experts assume that the U.S. Air Force experimentally at first made one of the eight-jet B-52 bombers of the Strategic Air Command "invisible" and carried out test flights over the Nevada desert. Many Soviet radar-guided air defense systems have been set up there for the constant "Red Flag" maneuvers.

Equipped with the "magic hood" the 30-year-old B-52 long-range bombers could go on flying up to the year 2000. Besides, the cruise missiles for which President Carter had opted in 1977 instead of the development of the new B-1 bomber generation and of which every B-52 bomber can carry 20 units each, likewise could be equipped with "magic hoods."

FOOD MINISTER URGES INCREASED FRG-HUNGARIAN TRADE

LD231112 Hamburg DPA in German 0832 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn/Budapest, 23 Aug (DPA)--Federal Food Minister Josef Ertl has spoken out in favor of more intensive trade relations between the Federal Republic and Hungary. At the opening of the German-Hungarian food meeting in Budapest on Saturday, Ertl said that the objective of this planned intensification was to safeguard supplies and raise the prosperity of the two countries.

According to his ministry in Bonn, Ertl underlined the important task of agriculture and the food industry. Even if cooperation between German firms and Hungary is predominantly in the industrial sector, there are nevertheless already about 60 German-Hungarian cooperation agreements in the agricultural sector. Thus Hungary takes first place in the agricultural and food sectors regarding cooperation between German and East European enterprises.

LIBYAN MISSILE SHIP THREATENS ENI OIL PLATFORM OFF MALTA

LD251926 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Clarifications are awaited regarding the fate of the ENI [National Hydrocarbon Corporation] oil platform Titan-2 which, as was learned yesterday, was in risk of being bombed by a missile-carrying frigate of the Libyan Navy. As is known, the platform was carrying out oil exploration on behalf of Texaco 60 miles southeast of Malta, in international waters. The zone is believed to be extremely rich in "black gold." Malta has its eye on it, but so does Al-Qadhdhafi. Four days ago, Titan-2 was approached by a Libyan warship, whose commander delivered an official note to the ENI technicians asserting that the zone fell inside Libyan, not Maltese, jurisdiction. After consultations with ENI officials, and with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Italians preferred to abandon operations rather than allow an international incident.

PAJETTA: POLISH EVENTS POSE PROBLEMS FOR 'ALL WORKERS'

LD260705 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 21 Aug 80 pp 1, 13

[Unattributed report on PCI Directorate member Gian Carlo Pajetta 20 August speech in Siena: "How To Answer Questions Coming From Poland"]

[Excerpt] "The news reaching us from Poland, which prompts serious concern, poses--not only for communists in countries where they are in power, but also for us and for all workers--problems concerning more through study and boldness in seeking satisfactory answers to the objective difficulties and demands presented by the struggling workers, problems concerning a bold regeneration and prompt correction of errors."

This was said by Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta as he discussed the Polish issue during a speech delivered yesterday in Siena.

The most essential thing, Pajetta said, is to guarantee the broadest possible participation to those who work, produce and live in society and must therefore participate more and more extensively in its government and organization. If socialist building is more arduous than expected by the men who stormed the Winter Palace and who wanted it; if our hopes and simplifications must make way for further reflection which accompanies the historical process and which will make us capable of playing a leading role, certainly no exhortation for us to become converts to social democracy can constitute a solution.

We would not reply to the Gdansk workers while failing to reply to the unemployed, the poor and the underprivileged of capitalist societies. We live in a world in a state of crisis and we have learned from this crisis and from our experience that democracy, national independence and the quest for more and more active and extensive consensus are needed to wage the class struggle and defend workers' rights. We agree with Christian Association of Italian Workers Chairman Rosati, Pajetta continued, when he expressed his good wishes and solidarity to the Polish workers by saying that "there is no room for propaganda; only for the honesty of a quest which embraces knowledge, resources and wisdom."

But of course we cannot contradict him when he adds that "authoritative representatives of the Italian political world who have always fought to limit the right to strike in Italy have suddenly become converted to the strenuous defense of trade union freedoms as an essential element of political democracy."

We wish to state unequivocally that if such freedoms must be defended here to be able to wage the class struggle, in a socialist society that has abolished classes and in which privileges should not exist and corporate interests should not make themselves felt, all freedoms, including trade union freedoms and the freedom to strike, must steadfastly prevail to guarantee the rational development of society, to enable errors to be corrected, to make it possible to secure from everyone his own share of work and shared responsibility.

Some people are still asking, Pajetta added, against whom the workers can strike after several decades without bosses. The answer lies in the facts, in the strike, in the workers who decided that they had to use this weapon. They must find someone to heed them, to answer them. If you trust in the working class and acknowledge its historical role, you must regard it as a valid interlocutor. If you want your people's trust you must be regarded as their valid interlocutor. We Italian Communists have debated and put forward hypotheses and proposals over the years.

UNIONS, POLITICIANS EXPRESS SUPPORT FOR POLISH WORKERS

[Excerpts] Rome, August 22 (ANSA)--The twelfth anniversary of the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia heightened emotions in Italian public opinion which is closely following the growing labor unrest in Poland where hundreds of thousands of workers are on strike.

The National Federation of Farmers issued a statement yesterday stressing that "Polish peasants have already demonstrated their alignment and vigilant participation in the workers' struggle. The walkouts in Gdansk and other industrial cities in Poland are the nth proof of the failure of the collectivist system which has prevented free unions for decades".

Social Democrat Party official for labor relations Lino Ravecca said in an article appearing in today's issue of the party daily L'UMANITA that Italian unions "must face one and for all the problem of effective political solidarity" and that the three federated unions "must overcome their internal contradictions which include compromise on international problems. Italian labor unions must not only support spontaneous movements of the kind which have developed in Gdansk but also promote their formation under framework of dissent".

Republican Party Secretary Giovanni Spadolini said that the arrest of Jacek Kuron and other leading Polish dissidents "is the first worrying sign that the line of prudence and caution Polish authorities have followed thus far is being abandoned. The beginning of repression could lead to Czech-type 'normalization' in the backdrop of a sinister shadow--the shadow of Prague in August 1968".

Liberal Party Secretary Valerio Zanone announced that his party is promoting an initiative by the liberal international to establish direct contacts with the Polish workers' strike committees.

Socialist Party Senator Roberto Spano, in charge of the party's labor department, said that "it seems necessary that progressive forces move from statements of solidarity to concrete initiatives which must develop speedily at the political, social and government levels, starting with Italy".

Members of the Radical Party staged demonstrations yesterday outside the Polish and American embassies in Rome in sign of solidarity with Polish workers. The demonstrators carried placards with protest slogans such as "civil and union rights for Polish workers", "Budapest, Berlin, Prague, Kabul, the Italian left stands still to watch", "Carter, is this your civil rights policy?". Radical Party leader Marco Panella said that the protest was also directed against United States silence on the Polish crisis.

FREITAS DO AMARAL ON EXPULSION OF USSR DIPLOMATS

LD221738 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Portuguese Foreign Minister Freitas do Amaral has said that the expulsion from Portugal of four Soviet diplomats attached to the USSR's Embassy in Lisbon is due to unacceptable acts of interference in Portuguese internal affairs in certain sensitive areas of the territory. He added that situations of this type were not acceptable because they not only affect national independence but state security as well. Freitas do Amaral added that the government will not allow the foreign enemy to act as an internal enemy.

SOCIALIST PARTY TO SUPPORT EANES FOR REELECTION

LD251422 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1200 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Excerpts] The Socialist Party today officially confirmed its backing for General Ramalho Eanes' reelection to the presidency of the republic. This is not exactly a piece of unexpected news since yesterday all signs pointed to this decision already having been reached. It only remained for Mario Soares to confirm it officially, which he did this morning after calling on General Eanes: [Begin recording] [Soares] Please note that I am not announcing that General Ramalho Eanes is standing for reelection. What I am saying is that the Socialist Party has decided to support the recandidacy of General Ramalho Eanes, assuming that he decides to stand for reelection. It will be up to him in due course to convey his decision to the news media. [sentence indistinct] You journalists always like to jump to conclusions. [passage indistinct] [end recording]

Soares on Eanes Candidacy

LD252332 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] Socialist Party officials today declared their support for the candidacy of General Ramalho Eanes for a second presidential term. This morning Mario Soares went to Belem Palace to convey personally to General Ramalho Eanes the decision reached at a joint meeting yesterday of his party's Secretariat and Executive Committee. On leaving the palace Mario Soares told journalists that it is a choice between a candidacy defending the democratic system and another against it, of Sa Carneiro backed by the Democratic Alliance. Eanes is not a Socialist Party candidate but an independent one, Soares said, adding that the support which the Socialists have just decided to give him is decisive for Ramalho Eanes's reelection. The Socialist leader revealed that there has been a clear political understanding between the Socialist Party and Ramalho Eanes but refused to elaborate. He said Ramalho Eanes will be a guarantee of the democratic and constitutional regime and represents stability, democratic continuity and security for the Portuguese people. He said Eanes' renewed candidacy offers the prospects of defeating the right's adventurism and consolidating the democratic regime.

Referring to remarks in a Lisbon newspaper interview today by Leonardo de Ribeiro, the Socialist Party chairman who is also the speaker in the assembly, that the Democratic Alliance would refuse to form a government if Eanes was reelected, the Socialist leader said this threat to cause a constitutional deadlock and intimidation of the electorate is extremely grave. Mario Soares said the situation in Portugal today gives cause for concern. He said the right and extreme rightwing circles for whom Sa Carneiro serves a purpose have now reached the conclusion that he is a nuisance and should therefore be burned out. He said Sa Carneiro, who is the leader of a major party, should have himself taken the responsible initiative of resigning if he wanted to save his prestige and avoid being burned out, [words indistinct], the Socialist leader concluded.

OFFICIALS REACT TO DEVELOPMENTS IN POLAND

Felipe Gonzalez Remarks

LD222216 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] The secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], Felipe Gonzalez, this afternoon returned to Madrid after attending a conference of European socialist leaders for the past 2 days on the Greek island of Corfu. At Barbajas Airport the Socialist leader told newsmen that during the meetings they had discussed subjects relating to the international political situation, Cyprus, the Middle East and the Aegean Sea, as well as Iran and Afghanistan. He said: During one of the meetings we analyzed the problems of European cooperation and security with a reception which is spreading every day [as heard]--you cannot talk about security and cooperation in Europe without considering the Mediterranean as a link with another world rather than as a frontier.

The PSOE secretary general also referred to events in Poland. He said that the grievance of the Polish workers are not only socioeconomic. They have a political background which seems to us to be highly important. We have drawn up a communique in which we show our solidarity with the Polish workers and we draw attention to something which seems to us to be fundamental: that a conflict of such magnitude is not going to be resolved with aggression.

CCOO's Camacho Comments

LD222236 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] The secretary general of the Workers' Commissions [CCOO], Marcelino Camacho, has today returned from Poland, where he spent 2 days studying the situation. Mr Camacho said at Barajas Airport that Polish trade union leaders have assured him that there have not been arrests and that force was not being considered against the strikers. The leader of the CCOO also said that the Polish trade unions were waiting for regulation of the strike via a law which might be passed next November. On a possible Soviet intervention, Mr Camacho said that the Polish trade unions do not think that it will happen: We think that, if things develop in a normal way, there is no risk of intervention by the Soviet Union.

FELIPE GONZALEZ VIEWS NATO, SOCIALIST, EUROPEAN ISSUES

AT231420 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 23 Aug 80 p 9

["Exclusive" interview by Louis Dhanos with Secretary General of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party Felipe Gonzalez on Corfu--date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: On many issues, particularly on their positions toward NATO and the EEC, the parties of the "group" [group of southern European socialist leaders meeting in Corfu] have many and significant differences. What kind of practical compromise will be reached on these differences? How will a common denominator be found?

Gonzalez: For the moment at least, the problem of a common denominator is nonexistent. We maintain our positions and we cultivate an atmosphere of solidarity in the hope that this will be useful. We also try to put ourselves in each other's position. For instance, the PASOK chairman made us understand why Greece cannot base its security on a NATO alliance that has proven itself unable to protect Greece from the expansionist intentions of a member-state of the alliance itself.

We Spanish Socialists do not want our country to join NATO. You see we believe that everything which disturbs the "status quo" makes the return to detente, to peaceful co-existence, more difficult. Naturally our final aim is the abolition of both alliances--NATO and the Warsaw alliance.

Portugal, France, Italy also seek detente but belong to NATO and will remain in it until the prerequisites have been created for a general disarmament that will lead to firm peace. This position also has its logic and consistency. Now let us move on to the EEC.

All Spanish parties, including the Socialist Party, want the country to accede to the EEC. The same is true for Portugal. Therefore Papandreou, who would rather conclude a special relationship between Greece and the EEC, last June in Madrid promised that if Greece finally is to remain in the EEC, PASOK will support the accession of the Iberian countries to it. This is how it is possible to have differing positions and, at the same time, solidarity among the socialist parties of southern Europe.

Question: Frequently Papandreou refers to the general gap between the North and the South and to the specific gap separating the northern European countries from the southern ones. What do you have to say about this gap?

Gonzalez: Undoubtedly one exists! But particularly for Europe and, more specifically, for the EEC, I do not think this is the symptom of an organic ailment. It stems from the economic crisis and will cease to exist when that crisis has passed. For the time being, the danger that they will have to tighten the belts of their people and deal with a terrifying wave of unemployment has created introverted, selfish tendencies in northern societies. For the same reasons, the attitude of southern Europe toward the Third World is similar, for instance, toward northern Africa or Latin America. We know how terrible the problems of the Third World are, but we are more occupied with our own problems.

Question: Papandreou has noted the danger of the creation of a Bonn-Paris axis. Do you believe such a danger exists?

Gonzalez: I believe that it is natural for West Germany and France to try to deal jointly with certain situations and especially--as Papandreou has stressed--with the situation created by the arms race which tends to transform Europe into the stage for a nuclear war. I believe, however, that this effort is not leading toward an "axis." For historical, psychological, ethnographical reasons, such a development seems rather improbable to me. On the contrary, the extension and expansion of the intra-European dialogue in all directions seems to me possible and welcome.

Question: In connection with the positions which Papandreou put forth to you concerning Greece's national problems--for instance, the Cyprus problem and the bases issue--what are your observations?

Gonzalez: It was a very interesting report. We all learned things we did not know. We put these problems within their Greek framework. Naturally I agree with everything he said about the Cyprus question although I am afraid that if PASOK leads the government it will be forced to follow a somewhat more conciliatory policy toward the Cyprus question.

Regarding the bases, there is no doubt that no country desires them. No people who respect their independence want foreign bases on their soil but, in this instance too, reality sometimes dictates that a country follow a policy that will be temporarily tolerant toward established situations.

Question: How do you explain Ecevit's nonparticipation in the meeting?

Gonzalez: In recent years we had not dealt with this possibility. When we finally linked up with PASOK we ascertained that, at least for the time being, it is not feasible to expand the "group" in that direction.

Question: In the last 6 years, since the overthrow of dictatorial regimes in Greece, Portugal and Spain, many decisive developments have taken place in the world. Do you believe that these developments support the orientation of southern European toward the Third World and their adoption of a nonaligned policy?

Gonzalez: I believe that such a line would not produce immediate results. The danger which currently threatens Europe and the entire world is nuclear disaster. Specifically Western Europe, without excluding southwestern Europe, is facing the danger of finding itself between the crossfire of the great powers. Compared to it, all other dangers come second.

Comments on Common Market

LD221358 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0900 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] Felipe Gonzalez, PSOE secretary general, has said that the triumph of socialism in a southern European country would help to break the historic burden which weighs on that part of the continent. Felipe Gonzalez was speaking on the Greek island of Corfu where he is attending the meeting of socialist and social-democratic leaders from Europe. He was referring to the more or less conservative regimes that have been in power during the past decades in southern Europe and the dictatorships through which Spain, Greece and Portugal have lived.

The Spanish Socialist leader said that the aim of the Corfu meeting was not a Socialist International for southern Europe, but rather to stress the need for parties to understand each other better and to get to know one another better. With reference to Spain's entry into the Common Market, Felipe Gonzalez said that in spite of the possible difficulties that might be encountered initially in the economic sphere, it will in fact strengthen the entire political and socioeconomic fabric in Spain.

Regarding NATO, the Socialist leader said that this party will not support Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance since it would be necessary to prove that joining would benefit Spain and detente, and this, Felipe Gonzalez stressed, is not something that can be done with ease.

Speaking then about foreign bases, Felipe Gonzalez said that these are unacceptable to the citizens of any country, except in very exceptional circumstances or for political reasons. In the case of Spain, he said, if the PSOE attains power, then it will negotiate hard over the American bases to secure greater sovereignty and power over them, and it will demand their demnclearization since, he said, Spain is not a nuclear power.

After saying that the UCD has been incapable of exploiting the expectations created after Franco's death, Felipe Gonzalez added that the PSOE has found itself obliged to carry out political activity outside its country. He himself maintains personal relations with leaders in different countries, among them those of Latin America.

TRADE UNION GROUP SUPPORTS POLISH WORKERS' DEMANDS

LD221024 Helsinki International Service in English 0930 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] The Organization for Cooperation Between Nordic Central Trade Unions, the NFS, has expressed support for Polish workers and their demands related to trade union matters. This was noted in a statement given after the organization's executive committee meeting in Visby, Sweden. The NFS incorporates Danish, Finnish, Swedish, Norwegian and Icelandic central organizations of trade unions and the Swedish, Danish and Finnish white collar organizations.

The chairman of the Swedish central organization of trade unions, Mr Gunnar Nilsson, noted meanwhile that some of the demands by the Polish workers are political in nature. Mr Nilsson went on to say that it is not up to the NFS to review the political demands of the Polish workers. The NFS has urged the Polish central organization of trade unions to contribute toward a peaceful and constructive solution to the present situation in Poland. The chairman of the NFS, Mr Oso Laakso, of a white collar organization from Finland, stressed the need for bringing about a neg .iation contact between the Polish Government and the strikers to avoid the danger of clashes.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE RETURNS FROM POLISH VISIT

LD231735 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Text] The Foreign Affairs Committee of the Finnish Parliament this afternoon returned from Poland. During its week-long visit the committee met Polish parliamentarians. The six-member delegation acquainted itself with Gdansk, Krakow and Warsaw. During its visit the committee also discussed the Polish strike situation with its Polish hosts. The Poles stressed the need for a moderate settlement of the situation without violence. The Poles thought that the most difficult problem was the political demands of the strikers. The group was led by Jutta Zilliacus, deputy chairman of the parliament's foreign affairs committee.

CARRINGTON COMMENTS ON INTERNATIONAL ISSUES, MEETS LEADERS

Comments on CSCE

LD221244 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] In the opinion of British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, it would be a mistake to go to the second followup conference of the CSCE, opening in Madrid in the autumn, pretending that nothing has gone wrong with the process of detente. The hopes which were prevailing at the time of the Helsinki CSCE conference 5 years ago have not been fulfilled, and this fact should be admitted, Lord Carrington said at a press conference today on the last day of his visit to Finland.

Lord Carrington said that he had extensive discussions with his host, Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen, on current international issues. Foreign Secretary Carrington said that he hopes that Finnish-British trade might be balanced from the present situation where there is a clear predomination of Finnish exports. However, he was unable to say of which goods the British should export more to Finland. Before the end of his visit Carrington met Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto and Speaker Johannes Virolainen this afternoon. During his visit he also had talks with the Chairman of the Coalition Party Liikka Suominen. President Urho Kekkonen received Lord Carrington yesterday.

Additional Comments

LD221906 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Excerpts] In the opinion of the British secretary of state for foreign affairs, Lord Carrington, the CSCE followup conference in Madrid in the autumn should concentrate on concrete issues which divide East and West. Lord Carrington, who today concluded his 2-day visit to Finland, talked about the foreign policy of his country at a press conference in Helsinki this morning. Hannu Reime reports:

[Reime] The talks between Lord Carrington and the Finnish foreign political leadership primarily dealt with the CSCE followup conference in Madrid, the preparations for which will begin next month, with the meeting itself in November. But other international issues were also discussed.

In Carrington's view, the most important thing in Madrid is to concentrate on concrete issues, dividing East and West and to try to make progress on them. There are several matters which could be subjected to this treatment. All of them are not necessarily connected with the CSCE. Some are connected with the current talks on reduction of armaments. Particularly in this sector, progress should be made in a way which is profitable to both East and West. Measures to increase trust agreed on in connection with the CSCE could provide the basis from which it would be possible to proceed to the European Disarmament Conference proposed by France. In Carrington's view, it is essential to concentrate on specific issues and to avoid verbal declarations which have no counterpart in reality.

In my view, the Helsinki Final Act is not a perfect document. It is only a compromise. But I would suggest that the worst thing about it is that it is not observed, Lord Carrington points out.

I do not want to mention any names, but have a look at the wording of the final act concerning interstate relations, human rights, free pursuit of science, and after that note what is taking place in the world. Even if the worst possible thing would be to abandon wholly the efforts for European detente and security, it would be equally wrong to go to Madrid pretending that no mistakes have been committed. I do not want clashes and accusations, but I think that it is necessary to admit that the 5-year-old hopes have not been fulfilled, Lord Carrington says.

Concerning the events of the last few weeks in Poland, Lord Carrington said that according to the viewpoint of the British Government, the crisis is a Polish internal matter and it must be settled by Poland itself. Lord Carrington was also asked about the plan proposed by Britain to solve the crisis in Afghanistan so that the independence and neutrality of the country would be internationally guaranteed. Lord Carrington expressed the view that such a solution would benefit all sides of the conflict and the neighbors of Afghanistan as well, including the Soviet Union, which defended its invasion on grounds of security.

The situation in the Middle East and the development after the Venice summit of the Western powers in June were regarded by Lord Carrington as very grave.

Interview on International Issues

LD260741 Helsinki HELSINGIN SANOMAT in Finnish 22 Aug 80 p 11

[Erkki Arni interview with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington: "Detente Produces Disappointment"]

[Text] "I want especially to talk with your foreign minister about the approaching Madrid conference," British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington told HELSINGIN SANOMAT in an exclusive interview while traveling by sea from Sweden on his way to his visit to Finland.

Carrington also mentioned the situation in Poland and gave a veiled warning: "Events in Poland could end up as a danger to Europe's future if there is outside interference in Poland's affairs."

The followup European Security and Cooperation Conference, detente and the European balance were the main topics of which Carrington spoke.

Britain is generally somewhat restrained in its approach to the concept of detente, but Carrington stressed: "Detente must be kept alive. We live close together, and no one with even a little sense wants to see the disagreements between East and West continuing forever."

"On the other hand it would be unrealistic not to take notice of the incidents that have taken place last year and especially this, because of which the Helsinki agreement has become a source of disappointment. If you look at the 10 articles in the final document and then look at the Soviet Union's actions in Afghanistan and on human rights issues, it is clear that the Soviet Union has violated every one of these 10 articles in the course of the last 18 months."

"It would be of little use to pretend that these things have not happened," Carrington went on. "It is quite useless to try to paper over the cracks and claim that they are not there. But we must not make continual accusations in Madrid and end up in a dispute. Instead we must announce quite clearly our condemnation of and disappointment with the direction of events. And when we have done this we must then strive for concrete and visible actions, which would be effective in advancing toward the goals and hopes established in Helsinki--disarmament, confidence-building, the protection of human rights."

Since Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's conservative government came to power British foreign policy has given the impression of being quite hard-line, but Carrington disputes the claim that there has been any significant change because of the conservative government:

"If you mean by hard-line that the British Government condemns the Soviet Union's attack on Afghanistan, then this is quite true. Indeed we do condemn it. Our conservative government condemns it, and I am quite sure that the labor party government which preceded us would have condemned it just as strongly. If you are talking about the violations of human rights, I am quite sure that our government condemns them in exactly the same way as our predecessors. In my opinion it is a mistake to think that British Governments representing different parties do not follow a uniform continuous foreign policy. Thus I do not believe that the assumption of a hardening of British foreign policy holds water."

But what about the accompanying decision to site cruise missiles on British territory and in other European countries and the recent decision to acquire Trident nuclear missiles?

"I am convinced that a Labor government would have done the same if it had been in power," Carrington said. "It would quite certainly have approved the modernization of tactical nuclear arms. This is not due to the fact that we want to expand the nuclear arsenal already in existence in Britain or to exacerbate antagonisms, but to the fact that NATO has not modernized its nuclear arms in Europe for the last 15 years. The Warsaw Pact and the Soviet Union have gained a clear lead over us.

"A large number of SS-20 missiles are now threatening Europe, each with three warheads. Thus over 100 three-headed missiles are now in the field and one new missile joins them every week. NATO's European members had no counterforce to this; we were hopelessly weaker in this respect. If we had neglected to modernize our nuclear arms, it would have meant that we would not be able to manage our own defense firmly enough. And if we did not undertake it firmly, then we would endanger the very nuclear arms balance that in my opinion is the safeguard of world peace, both in our own estimation and in that of the leaders of other Western nations.

"He could only begin possible disarmament or arms regulation talks firmly from a position of equality, not of weakness. As far as the Trident is concerned, it is a question of replacing the nuclear arms already at Britain's disposal with new ones, not of adding to them."

Carrington sees the continuing conflict between Israel and the Arab nations as one of the greatest dangers to world peace at the present time. Out of concern over this comes the European Economic Community's initiative, adopted earlier in the summer, for mediation for peace in the Middle East, "not in competition with the United States but as a complement to its efforts at the present time, in a difficult election year." But Carrington confirmed that the process would be time-consuming; the end is still not in sight.

The end is still not in sight for the plan put forward by Carrington for the neutralization of Afghanistan and he does not expect any results in the next few months.

"It would offer security to Iran, Pakistan and the states in the Persian Gulf and also to the West. It would also offer security to the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union has said that it only occupied Afghanistan because the country's affairs were being interfered in from outside, so that the Soviet Union's borders were becoming threatened. If such a threat were removed through the creation of a nonaligned, neutral, independent Afghanistan, which other nations supported, the threat to the Soviet Union would also disappear."

Western pressure to this end would hardly help, Carrington said; instead pressure from nonaligned nations, from the Third World and especially from the Islamic World could one day get the neutrality initiative moving.

SWEDEN

POLISH EVENTS WILL COMPLICATE 'REANIMATION OF DETENTE'

LD260709 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 21 Aug 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Moscow's Dilemma"]

[Text] Reports of how the workers' revolt in Poland is developing are not clear-cut. At the same time, as reports are coming in that the protest strikes are spreading, the Polish State Radio is broadcasting vague reports that strikers and authorities have been able to reach an agreement on certain questions. But the gulf between the workers and the party in sole control is still wide and the regime still does not seem prepared to go to meet the strikers on any important points as far as their calls for political changes are concerned.

We can expect the conflict to be protracted. But even if it turns out to be soluble within Poland's borders, there is still the question of what effect the events in Poland will have on relations between East and West.

British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, who was a guest of Sweden for 2 days and is now on a visit to Finland, said in Stockholm that there is not much room for diplomacy if Moscow should resort to military intervention to restore calm in Poland.

"We would not be able to do much more than express our disapproval, "the foreign secretary said.

Even if the Polish leadership succeeds in calming today's unrest unaided, the protests against the communist system as it has been shaped in Poland on directives from Moscow will have repercussions far beyond the country's borders. And the risks are obvious that what is happening in Poland will make more difficult a reanimation of the relaxation between East and West that was shattered by the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan.

The chances of building up new confidence between the Soviet-led Communist bloc and the Western world will be put to the test when representatives of 35 countries meet in Madrid in the fall to examine at a second followup conference the way in which the signatory powers have lived up to the principles they agreed on at the Helsinki Conference.

Lord Carrington passed a harsh judgement on the Soviet Union in the candid speech he made in Stockholm. He claimed that Moscow had broken all the 10 principles that were fixed in the final document in Helsinki and said that in the future Europe would not be able to accept a detente that would give the Soviet Union a free hand to increase its influence in the Third World through subversive activities and through war waged by third parties.

But the chances of creating confidence-building measures in Madrid do not seem promising. Rather there is the risk that the Madrid meeting will develop into a propaganda war.

The greatest obstacle is of course Afghanistan. The prospects of achieving an acceptable solution within a reasonable time have never seemed that promising.

The British have put forward the idea of a neutral Afghanistan, a solution that Lord Carrington thought would be attractive to the Soviet leaders. So far they have not shown much enthusiasm. After the unrest in Poland it ought to be even more difficult for them to make any concessions, since there is the probably justified fear that every concession or retreat would be seen as Russian weakness in a number of other Eastern European countries which are following events in Poland with the greatest attention.

KIPRIANOU DENOUNCES ATTACK AGAINST LISSARIDHIS

NC250826 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0700 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] President Kiprianou has denounced last night's attack by gunmen against the home of EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis at Prodhromos as abhorrent. In a statement which he made over the telephone from Greece, the president said: Such actions are not directed only against political personalities but also against Cyprus which is in absolute need of peace and order in order to continue its struggle for freedom. He added: The government is determined to suppress every terrorist or criminal action of this or of any other kind that might disturb peace and order. Finally, Mr Kiprianou stressed that all necessary instructions have been issued for the most swift and effective police action possible in order to detect the culprits.

EC'S THORN CONCLUDES VISIT WITH MEETINGS, STATEMENTS

Meeting With Denktas

TA221755 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] President Denktas received this afternoon the current chairman of the Ministerial Council of the EEC and foreign minister of Luxembourg, Mr Gaston Thorn. At the meeting which lasted about 2 hours, the minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, and the federated state's representative in relations with EEC, Mr Tatar, were also present.

Speaking to correspondents at the end of the meeting, Mr Thorn said that he had taken advantage of his few hour visit to Cyprus to see President Denktas, who had explained to him the Turkish Cypriot views on the Cyprus problem. He added that he had collected information both from the Greek Cypriot side and from the Turkish Cypriot side. He stated that he was trying to get as much information as possible so as to have a complete picture of the situation. He said that he was happy that the Cyprus intercommunal talks were to be resumed on 16 September. He stated that the 250 million Europeans were keeping their fingers crossed and wished wholeheartedly that the talks would be a success.

Speaking to correspondents, President Denktas said that they had exchanged views with Mr Gaston Thorn on Cyprus' relations with the EEC and the Turkish Cypriot community's relations with the Community as well as the Cyprus problem. He stated that he was pleased with the meeting. He expressed the hope that high-ranking officials of the European community would also visit the island because the Cyprus problem was being wrongly understood as a result of the Greek Cypriot propaganda campaigns and the visits would be beneficial to understand the fact of the problem.

President Dentkas said that the Turkish Cypriot community would continue its contacts with the EEC because the Turkish Cypriot community had very urgent problems and credits and aid were needed to overcome these problems.

He pointed out that the economic imbalance between the Turkish Cypriot community and the Greek Cypriot community was great because the aid being extended to Cyprus was being used only by the Greek Cypriots. He added that this imbalance was also affecting a political solution. He expressed the conviction that this should also be taken into consideration while assessing the Cyprus problem.

Asked to comment on a statement by Mr Kiprianou to a correspondent of THE GUARDIAN newspaper in which he rejected the exchange of population agreement, President Denktas said that Mr Kiprianou, by rejecting this agreement, was rejecting a reconciliation. He said that he did not want to comment any further before he saw the whole of the statement. He stressed that the exchange of population was one of the principles he had reached agreement on during his meeting with Archbishop Makarios and [words indistinct] at the negotiating table. He added that the Turkish Cypriot community's answer to this issue was ready. He reiterated that it was impossible to imagine the (?spreading) once again of Turkish Cypriots among Greek Cypriots and that those who imagined such a move were not realists and peace could not be achieved with unrealistic people.

Comments on EEC's Role

NC231824 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Excerpts] In an interview with Nicosia Radio, Thorn, president of the EEC Council of Ministers and foreign minister of Luxembourg, has expressed his satisfaction over the resumption of the intercommunal talks and his hope for their full success. Thorn also expressed the EEC's readiness to offer any assistance so that the talks might succeed. He called on both sides to show a spirit of goodwill and patience, adding that the EEC had no intention of assuming UN Secretary General Waldheim's role.

Regarding Cypriot-EEC relations, Thorn expressed the conviction that before the end of the year, an association council would be established that would set, as he said, the basis and the principles of the negotiations for Cyprus' association with the Community. Thorn expressed the hope that the negotiations would bring results in the first months of 1981.

Meeting With Rolandhis; Departure

NC231116 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 23 Aug 80

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON MADRID VISIT, CYPRUS PROBLEM

LD260827 London AL-HAWADITH in Arabic 22 Aug 80 pp 35-36

[Interview given to Simon ad-Diri by Cyprus Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis in Madrid--date not given]

[Excerpts] AL-HAWADITH: What is the purpose of your visit to Spain? Has the visit any connection with the forthcoming international conference in Madrid?

Rolandhis: I would like first of all to poing out that relations between Cyprus and Spain have always been good. They are geographically affiliated. The Mediterranean links us in the East and the West. It would be wrong to say that there are no diplomatic relations between Cyprus and Spain. It is true that there is no Cypriot Embassy in Madrid but our ambassador in Paris assumes this task in France, Spain and Portugal.

Regarding my present visit to Spain, it comes on the eve of the preparations for the Madrid Conference on European Security and Cooperation which will convene in October and for which the world has been preparing for almost a year, as a continuation of the Helsinki conference which dealt with independence, sovereignty, human rights and international rights.

AL-HAWADITH: What is Spain's position regarding the Cyprus issue?

Rolandhis: Last Tuesday, I met with Spanish Foreign Minister Marcelino Oreja Aguirre who told me that he believes in the need to bolster by all means the UN resolutions which provide for the withdrawal of the occupation forces from the island. We also discussed the Madrid conference. During the official dinner Oreja Aguirre told me: "Had the solution to the Cyprus problem been in our hands there would have been no problem." Choosing Spain as a venue for an international conference of this kind lends special importance to all the problems in the Mediterranean basin, including, of course, the Cyprus problem.

AL-HAWADITH: What do you expect from the forthcoming Madrid conference?

Rolandhis: I am a realist and I am aware that the Madrid conference will not produce any magical results. All the principles of the Helsinki conference were violated when Turkey invaded Cyprus in 1974. Although we do not expect much from the Madrid conference in practical terms, it can, however, recall sovereign rights, human rights and relations among states. What concerns us is to recall the resolutions or principles of the Helsinki conference. Naturally, the Madrid conference will be held in a tense atmosphere, especially if the issue of Afghanistan is raised. The discussion of the Afghan issue, however, will inevitably bring up the question of the other occupied areas in the world. So far, we do not have many details about the Madrid conference as to who is going to attend it and what subjects it will discuss. I repeat, however, that we do not expect a miraculous solution to the Cyprus problem from the Madrid conference.

AL-HAWADITH: You have come to Spain amid continuous talk about the possibility of Spain joining NATO. Do you have any particular stand on this question?

Rolandhis: Every state has the right to adopt the stand it wants. The question of Spain joining NATO is an internal issue and does not constitute an obstacle in the way of the establishing of good relations between Cyprus and Spain. There are NATO states like Italy and France with which we have relations. Despite being a nonaligned state, our relations are good with both the Soviet Union and the United States.

AL-HAWADITH: Your visit to Spain coincides with the Libyan offer to host negotiations between officials of the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities. How do you view the Libyan offer? Can Spain also play the role of mediator?

Rolandhis: The initiative you are talking about was made during the Libyan foreign minister's visit to my country. Tripoli did not mean to mediate between President Kiprianou and Mr Denktas. It only suggested to the UN secretary general that it be the venue for the dialogue between the two sides. I am aware that Al-Qadhdhafi can influence the Ankara government by virtue of oil (Rauf Denktas is Ankara's man in Cyprus). However, the Libyan offer should not cancel out the continuation of UN Secretary General Waldheim's efforts. Waldheim alone should decide on the venue. As for Spain, we have not asked it to intervene.

AL-HAWADITH: A journalist has stated that when he went to the occupied Turkish sector, he was shown papers and evidence proving that you yourselves do not want to negotiate?

Rolandhis: I have asked this journalist to bring me copies of the alleged papers. I remember that Denktas expressed readiness to negotiate but then withdrew 24 hours later.

AL-HAWADITH: According to information, there are 2,070 missing persons in Turkish prisons.

Rolandhis: In fact we do not have precise information about this matter but a letter has arrived from a missing person. It came from one of the Turkish prisons. Every citizen is saying that the sender must be "my husband, my brother or my relative."

AL-HAWADITH: Do Amnesty International or the Red Cross have no information?

Rolandhis: Efforts are being made at present with regard to the missing persons but the time to reveal these efforts has not yet come.

AL-HAWADITH: How do you assess relations between Cyprus and the Arab world? How do you establish balanced relations with the conflicting Arab sides? Do you intend to sever relations with Israel?

Rolandhis: Israel has an embassy in Nicosia. We do not contemplate severing relations but we want to have good relations with the Arab world. We will not interfere in internal disputes. We support the just Arab causes and we do not side with one side against another. Despite the fact that Saudi Arabia votes against us in the United Nations, we have very strong commercial and economic relations with it. Saudi tourists come to Cyprus in great numbers.

AL-HAWADITH: How do you sum up the situation in Cyprus?

Rolandhis: We are a very hard-working people. We have great business management capabilities. This is recognized even by the developed countries. We emerged from the 1974 catastrophe in a manner that has surprised everybody. As far as the economic and social situation is concerned, we wish to return to confederal coexistence. There has never been any problems between the two communities. I feel that our Turkish Cypriot compatriots are suffering from the Turkish occupation. We are all Cypriot citizens and belong to one homeland.

The UN authorities have informed the authorities of the republic that instructions have been issued that in future such irregularities be avoided.

SAUDI FINANCE MINISTER SIGNS LOAN AGREEMENT, DISCUSSES TIES

Arrival Statement

TA221916 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] The Saudi minister of finance and national economy, Shaykh Muhammad al-Ali Aba al-Khayl, arrived in Ankara this evening to sign an agreement on a $250 million loan his government is to extend to Turkey. During his stay in Ankara he will also hold talks on the development of the economic and commercial relations between the two countries.

He was received at Esenboga Airport by Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin and ministry officials. In a speech at the airport Sezgin said that the visit would make positive contributions to the development of the increasingly developing relations between the two countries. Recalling that an agreement on the $250 million loan Saudi Arabia would extend to Turkey would be signed in Ankara tomorrow, Sezgin said that the further development of the relations would also be discussed at the talks.

The visiting Saudi minister said the talks which had started in Riyadh on the development of the relations between the two countries would be continued in Ankara. He said that Saudi Arabia saw Turkey as a great, powerful and leading Islamic country. He expressed the hope that positive results would be achieved at the end of the talks in Ankara.

Invitation to Demirel

TA221751 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel received the Saudi ambassador to Ankara, Muhammad al-Awadi, at the prime minister's office at 1730 today. The ambassador delivered a message from Crown Prince and Deputy Prime Minister Fahd ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz Al Sa'ud to Prime Minister Demirel.

The Foreign Ministry information directorate general announced that in his message, the crown prince and deputy prime minister repeated his invitation to Prime Minister Demirel to visit Saudi Arabia. He said that he would be pleased if Prime Minister Demirel would visit, which would strengthen the ties of friendship between Turkey and Saudi Arabia and further develop the cooperation between the two countries.

Meeting With Demirel

TA230840 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0800 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Excerpt] In a statement at the end of his meeting with Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel today, Saudi Finance and National Economy Minister Shaykh Muhammad al-Ali Aba al-Khayl said that he exchanged views with Demirel on bilateral relations and world problems. Noting that Demirel and he agreed on developing the relations between the two countries, the Saudi minister said that they decided to increase the mutual visits on the government level. Aba al-Khayl noted that they also discussed the problems of the Islamic world and that they agreed on the importance of solidarity [among the Islamic countries]. The Saudi finance minister and Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin later met at the ministry.

Loan Agreement Signing

TA231146 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Excerpt] The agreement on the $250 million loan to be extended to Turkey by Saudi Arabia was signed in Ankara today. The agreement was signed by Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin and Saudi Finance and National Economy Minister Shaykh Muhammad al-Ali Aba al-Khayl.

In a speech after signing the agreement, Sezgin said that Saudi Arabia's contribution at a time when Turkey is facing economic difficulties strengthened the relations between the two countries. Sezgin noted that, in the development of relations, Turkey will not be a recipient of aid alone, but it will also assist Saudi Arabia's development through various means.

Pointing out that the meetings of the joint Turkish-Saudi economic committee should be continuous, Sezgin noted possibilities have been created for Turkish businessmen to cooperate with Saudi Arabia in numerous fields. The finance minister added that the increased relations between Turkey and Saudi Arabia are important for peace and tranquillity in the Middle East and the world as well as in the two countries.

In his statement, Aba al-Khayl said that the agreement indicates the importance attached to Turkey. He said that Saudi Arabia welcomed Turkish businessmen's increased activities in Saudi Arabia and their contributions to his country's development.

Noting that Israel's decision to declare Jerusalem its capital created a grave situation in the Middle East, the Saudi minister said that, therefore, the Islamic world should achieve solidarity. Aba al-Khayl explained that, as prominent countries in the Middle East, the cooperation between the two countries is important for securing peace in the region and in the Islamic world. Pointing out that Saudi Arabia is ready to cooperate with all Islamic countries in a bid to secure solidarity within the Islamic world, the Saudi finance minister added that Turkey's contribution to this is also necessary. The $250-million Saudi loan will be extended for a period of 15 years with a 5-year grace period in exchange for 5 percent expenditure. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish at 1400 GMT on 22 August reports that "$100 million will be given to Turkey when the agreement is signed, a second $100 million at the beginning of September and $50 million in December.]

Meeting With Erbakan

TA231568 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Saudi Finance Minister Shakyh Muhammad al-Ali Aba al-Khayl met with Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen after the signing of the Turkish-Saudi loan agreement. In a statement after the meeting, which lasted for about an hour, Erkmen said that an agreement has been reached to increase political solidarity within the framework of the Islamic conference and to strengthen this solidarity with economic cooperation. Noting that the Turkish and Saudi views were similar regarding political issues, Erkmen added that it again became apparent that the two countries can cooperate at international forums. Pointing out that various international and regional problems were discussed during the meeting, Erkmen said that they had exchanged views on Turkish-Saudi cooperation at UN meetings. Noting that Turkey and Saudi Arabia shared the same view regarding Israel's decision to declare Jerusalem its capital, Erkmen concluded by saying that Turkey requested that the economic aid to be extended by Saudi Arabia to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus be extended as soon as possible. The Saudi minister, who arrived in Ankara yesterday evening, left Turkey by air for Saudi Arabia at 1600.

TRADE MINISTRY OFFICIAL CITES ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH JORDAN

TA221627 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] A Jordanian trade delegation headed by Minister of Supplies Jawad al-'Anani, which arrived in Turkey 2 days ago, has concluded certain import deals. The delegation will continue its contacts in the coming days.

We asked Ibrahim Unlu, the director general of the Trade Ministry agreements department, to give us some information about the Turkish-Jordanian economic relations.

[Begin recording] We are trying to develop our economic and commercial relations with the Middle Eastern Islamic countries. Meanwhile, we are making continuous efforts to increase our commercial trade with Jordan. In fact, we signed an agreement with Jordan on 17 June 1980 based on the current economic needs of the two countries. This agreement replaces the agreement signed 28 July 1966. I am pleased to say that the volume of trade between Turkey and Jordan was $16 million in 1977, $28 million in 1978 and $48 million in 1979. This volume reached $30 million during the first 6 months of 1980.

The main item we import from Jordan is phosphate rock which is the raw material of our country's fertilizer industry. In return, we export livestock and agricultural goods such as grain, potatoes, onions, lentils, oranges, lemons, tangerines, grapes, apples and watermelons and industrial goods such as refrigerators and fans. The new agreement we signed with Jordan envisages Turkish exports of certain metals such as perlite, magnesium sinter and emery stone, as well as industrial goods such as glass wool, chemical goods, hand tools, power generators, agricultural equipment, automobiles, trucks, motorcycles and bicycles. [end recording]

DELEGATION LEAVES FOR LONDON TO MEET IMF OFFICIALS

TA251015 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] A delegation headed by Turgut Ozal, the Prime Ministry under secretary and the deputy under secretary of the state planning organization, has left for London to hold talks with IMF officials. Ozal will meet with IMF officials in London and discuss latest economic developments.

ECEVIT CLAIMS DEMIREL IN POWER BECAUSE OF 'MURDER GANGS'

TA221910 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Excerpts] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that he is not bargaining to establish a government with anyone. He said: Our problem is not to become a government, but to save Turkey from the present government and to insure the restoration of the state.

In a news conference he held in Ankara, Ecevit commented on Demirel's remarks of yesterday and today. The RPP leader said that he was trying to prevent the implementation of a nazi-fascist plan in Turkey. He added: In any democratic country, if the problems and the crisis reach the dimensions they have reached in Turkey today, then a government is established which reflects and tries to reconcile the majority of the people and various inclinations. That is how nations of democratic countries try to move out of the crisis. That is what we want and that is what we are calling for. However, Mr Demirel prefers to contribute to the implementation of certain plans which, after World War I, brought Nazism to Germany and Fascism to Italy. He rejects our calls of good will.

Pointing out that his remarks on helping prisoners to escape were distorted by Demirel, Ecevit charged that Demirel and his government were in power thanks to the support of the murder gangs that helped prisoners escape. Ecevit said: That is what I say and unless Mr Demirel ends his relations with those circles, unless he saves our state and nation from the aggression of those circles, I will continue to say so.

The RPP leader said that in a speech today, Demirel said: May God not let anyone fall into a position where he escapes from early elections.

Ecevit added: Mr Demirel seems to have forgotten that he rejected early election proposals in 1974 and 1975. We want the assembly to carry out its principal duty before the elections--to elect a president. A conciliation between the two major parties is necessary for that. By evading such a conciliation, Mr Demirel is preventing the election of a president. By preventing the election of a president he is damaging the fundamentals of the state.

ERBAKAN CHARGES DEMIREL WITH BARGAINING TO TRANSFER DEPUTIES

TA221800 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan has said that his party is not bargaining to establish a government with the RPP. Addressing an NSP meeting in Ankara, Erbakan stated that the JP had recently chosen the NSP as a target. He charged that both the JP and the RPP were bankrupt politically and that from now on a party cherishing the national views must come to power.

He added: Actually, it is the JP which is conducting bargaining. During the last few days, the JP has been conducting an early elections campaign on the one hand and on the other going into immoral political negotiations so that deputies transfer into his party. Everybody knows that, in its recent past, the JP managed to bring about several transfers of deputies through bargaining and negotiations or that it at least managed to insure that certain deputies did not participate in important votes. There are no such stains on the history of the NSP, which is clean and pure.

INDEPENDENT UNION LEADER KILLED IN ANKARA

TA221102 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Excerpt] The leader of the independent (Koy-Yt-Is) Union [presumably Village Workers Union], Sadik Ozkan, has been killed by armed terrorists in Ankara. According to information received by a TRT correspondent from security directorate officials and eyewitnesses, the incident occurred as follows:

Ozkan left his house in Cankaya to go to work around 0830. Shots were fired at Ozkan's car from another car following him on Yujari Ayranci Hosdere Street. Ozkan died instantly from head and chest wounds. His car hit two other cars traveling in the opposite direction and stopped on the pavement. Officials said that the three terrorists escaped in the car which is believed to be stolen and carried a counterfeit number plate.

CHINA, CANADA REACH CONSULAR AFFAIRS AGREEMENT

OW251913 Paris AFP in English 1907 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] Ottawa, 25 Aug (AFP)--A new consular affairs agreement has been reached by China and Canada, Industry and Commerce Minister Herb Gray announced today following a meeting here with Chinese Heavy Industry Minister Bo Yibo.

Under the accord, Chinese immigration officials will be more readily admitted to China to interview Chinese who wish to join relatives in Canada. China has authorized Canada to open new consulates in Shanghai and Guangzhou and Ottawa approved a Chinese consulate at Toronto. Following the talks, Mr Yibo said that "relations between our two countries have made satisfactory progress." The Chinese minister is on an official visit to Canada.

FOREIGN OFFICE SUMMONS SOVIET ENVOY TO EXPLAIN JAMMING

LD22232 London Press Association in English 2049 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] London, 22 Aug--The Foreign Office tonight summoned the Soviet Charge d'Affaires in London Mr Vladimir Keline to explain why BBC broadcasts into Russia were being jammed. It is believed that BBC broadcasts are being sabotaged by the Russians because of the possible "contagious" effect on public opinion resulting from news about the strikes in Poland.

Mr Keline was seen by a deputy under secretary and reminded about international agreements regarding freedom of information, and in particular the dissemination of radio broadcasts. Mr Keline "took note" and said he would be in touch when he had any information. The meeting lasted half an hour.

SCHMIDT RECEIVES BREZHNEV LETTER ON EUROSTRATEGIC ARMS

LD262122 Hamburg DPA in German 2013 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn--In the last few days, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has received a letter from Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev on the problems of Eurostrategic weapons. The letter was also recently sent to other heads of state or government. The White House confirmed receiving the letter this evening. There was confusion for a time about the existence of a letter from Brezhnev because Schmidt himself referred on Monday in Hamburg to a letter from Soviet Premier Kosygin. The Federal Press Office, which confirmed the latest letter today, added in explanation that the mistake had resulted from a slip of the tongue by the federal chancellor at his Hamburg press conference. So far little has been made known about the content of the letter or its exact date. The last time Brezhnev commented on this subject in letters to Western heads of government was last March.

GENSCHER LEAVES FOR U.S.; TO ADDRESS UN

LD261232 Hamburg DPA in German 1102 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Summary] Bonn, 26 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher left today for Washington for talks with U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie. The most important topics will be the East-West relationship and developments in Europe including the crisis in Poland, the West's reply to the latest Soviet views on talks on arms limitations, Afghanistan and the situation in the Middle and Near East. The upcoming Madrid meeting will also be discussed. Tomorrow Genscher is due to address the special UN General Assembly on Bonn's view on the relationship between the industrial states and the developing countries.

APEL ADVOCATES 'COOL' RESPONSE TO POLISH EVENTS

LD261526 Hamburg DPA in German 1502 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Itzehoe, 26 Aug (DPA)--Defense Minister Hans Apel, speaking at a public SPD meeting this afternoon in Itzehoe, has warned against any kind of interference in the Polish crisis so as not to give the Soviets an excuse for intervention. "Only coolness and nonviolence can solve the Polish problem," said Apel.

HUONKER BRIEFS CDU/CSU ON CANCELLATION OF SCHMIDT GDR VISIT

LD261220 Hamburg DPA in German 1132 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 26 Aug (DPA)--Gunter Huonker, minister in the chancellor's office, gave a confidential briefing to the CDU/CSU in Bonn today on the circumstances leading to the cancellation of the meeting planned for this week between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED leader Erich Honecker. CDU Deputy Alois Mertes, who together with the CSU Deputy Hans Klein saw Huonker, said later that the opposition sees itself confirmed in its impression that the Federal Government did its utmost in order to allow the meeting to take place on the basis of its political concepts and because of an "inter-German illusion of detente." The Federal Government had been prepared to accept in return considerable demands by the GDR. However, in the end it was forced to recognize that the GDR's scope--also because of the situation in Poland--had been narrowed. Mertes expressed the view that the GDR had primarily seen the Schmidt visit as an increase in the regime's esteem and as an opportunity to get a lot of money from the Federal Government.

Before the meeting in the chancellor's office Mertes had submitted four questions to the Federal Government. One of them, whether the GDR had rejected a dinner with the federal chancellor during the planned visit, according to Mertes had already received an affirmative reply from Huonker. Aside from this the CDU deputy wanted to know from the Federal Government when East Berlin had agreed to Bonn's wish for a visit by the federal chancellor to Rostock and Guestrow and when it was turned down. The CDU deputy also wanted to know why the chancellor did not want to go by air to West Berlin in order to travel to Werbellinsee.

SPD'S WISCHNEWSKI INTERVIEWED ON OSTPOLITIK, POLAND

DW271003 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1920 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Excerpts from correspondents Eser and Albert interview with Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, deputy chairman of the SPD, during the special feature "ZDF Hearing"--presumably in Bonn-live]

[Text] [Question] Of the FRG citizens interviewed by the ZDF Television Network 75 percent deem good relations with the Soviet Union particularly important. How do you explain this? Does this reflect fear of the power of the great Soviet Union rather than confidence in the Soviet Union as a partner for peace policy?

[Answer] I assume that those interviewed kept in mind primarily that the Soviet Union is one of the two great world powers and that one should also be interested in having a good, normal relationship with a power affiliated with a different alliance because this is of great significance for the preservation of peace in Europe and, beyond that, in the world. I suppose that the people who were interviewed proceed from the premise that the alliance is the basis of our security but that good relations with the other world power are just as important for peace and security in Europe.

[Question] Isn't detente policy, contrary to what has been assumed to date, becoming a central election campaign issue, and isn't it true that we have reached a point where a new delineation of Ostpolitik is necessary?

[Answer] To begin with, it is necessary in foreign policy to review at regular intervals all problems and questions at issue. This is necessary particularly when changes take place. I do see changes that have taken place and which we have been facing for some time after the invasion of Afghanistan by Soviet troops. But at the moment I do not see any topical changes here in Europe. We have indeed a dramatic dispute in Poland. But so far this conflict has been waged in the form of a dialogue. This, therefore, is a completely changed policy compared with the situation in 1970. At that time forcible action was taken. Now the dialogue is being conducted. So if the situation remains as it is--but I must add a question mark on this point--then I fail to see why there should be any fundamental change in our policy here in Europe.

[Question] Isn't it true that this detente works only as long as the West waives calling in question the Soviet Union's claim of domination over Eastern Europe?

[Answer] Clear agreements exist. All parties involved must strictly abide by these agreements. What I have in mind, for example, is the bilateral treaties we concluded primarily with respect to the reununciation of force but also on the inviolability of borders.

[Question] The election platform of the Social Democrats says that it is necessary to talk more, not less, in difficult times. This may still have held true for the Schmidt-Brezhnev meeting. Does this concept continue to work after the cancelled meetings with Gierek and Honecker?

[Answer] I believe that this continues to hold true in principle. Only the week involved cast shadows from Poland on the talks. These shadows were bound to influence at least one of the partners. The preconditions did not exist for attaining the results which both sides must attain. And for this reason I think it is appropriate for the dialogue to have been postponed and not called off. And I hope that this dialogue has been postponed for only a short period of time.

PRESS CONTINUES TO DISCUSS DEVELOPMENTS IN POLAND

DW270805 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German 0505 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Press review on strikes in Poland, Bonn reaction]

[Text] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG analyzes Bonn's reaction to the Polish crisis. The paper writes: The Federal Government is also charged in the dispute between the Polish workers and their government. Its representatives must use such words and take such action that the Polish nation is strengthened, a nation whose will is expressed by the striking people, and that the danger does not grow of a grave setback caused by the Warsaw leadership or even directly by the Soviet Union. Our state owes this to the Poles. It owes to its own inhabitants neither to deny its principles in reacting to the Polish crisis, nor to overexert itself. Not only German interests are involved, but also the fate of the Poles. Nobody in the West should urge them to risk continually more and eventually a frontal collision with the Soviet power which could cause a catastrophe for the nation, which would be abandoned by the whole world, as well as by the West. The Western world as early as 1956 lost the moral right to give incentive speeches to the Eastern bloc when it looked on inactively as the Hungarians who were fighting for their freedom were overpowered by the Red Army.

SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE of Oberndorf notes: Political Bonn these days looks more attentively and with more concern to East Berlin, Warsaw and Moscow than most citizens realize. The Federal Government's and the parties' public reserve on commenting on the events in Poland is being justified by the necessity of showing political commonsense and responsibility. Concern is great that the revolt of the workers possibly cannot be settled through negotiations and that it could lead to dramatic escalation. In such a case the political landscape in Europe would have other features than those which have been outlined in past years on the diplomatic blueprints in the East and West.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG writes: The strikes in Poland are spreading. Still this does not necessarily mean that a military intervention by the Soviets, on which the West is even more nervously speculating than Poland itself, is directly forthcoming. For the Polish workers have discovered a form of resistance which has never before been mustered in this dimension against a communist party dictatorship and which confronts the Warsaw regime as well as the Kremlin with entirely new problems: nonuse of violence paired with admirable self-discipline. Gierek knows better than to send his army against his compatriots who are acting as spontaneously as they are acting in a controlled manner, for striking compatriots potentially do not provide an enemy image for the army. And what about theRussians? If they were to dispatch their tanks, what would they do if not one stone is hurled at them anywhere, the Poles--and then perhaps all of them--just sitting there calmly and simply doing nothing at all?

Freiburg's BADISCHE ZEITUNG discusses the demands of the strikers on the Polish Baltic Seacoast and stresses: For well-known reasons the socialist system of Poland must not be shaken. On the other hand, partial reforms in a single-party state of the East bloc variety quickly entail the landslide changes known to us from the era of the Prague spring. This emerges from the details: The Communist Party leadership cannot undo the fact that the workers in the plants themselves have organized in trade unions, just as it ultimately could not dodge the dialogue with the Supra plant strike committee.

And yet it is leaving no stone unturned to limit this movement to the lower levels and to prevent the establishment of a nationwide trade union movement removed from direct control by the Communist Party. Such an organization would not only have the power of appearing as a wage-rate partner but would gain besides the right to have a say on national social and economic policies. Thereby the power monopoly of the Communist Party would be broken and a counterweight created in the state which would be bound to become the natural rallying point and center for the entire political opposition. Gierek will make very effort to prevent such a development.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU on Background

[Commentary signed HHG: "Self-Destruction"]

[Text] The Soviet discovery had to come that the West is interfering in the internal affairs of Poland and that it is exploiting the situation there for its own sinister purposes. The reproach that the whole misery was the work of antisocialist forces wire-pulled from abroad actually is expected to follow soon. If things do not work in the countries of socialism, it must be the fault of an external enemy.

The inability of finding fault in their own system, their own leadership, was hardened into stone in Byzantine Russia, into becoming the highest virtue. It was forced on the "brother countries," and it was one of the reasons for the Gdansk revolt. We are fed up with being permanently lied to, say the Polish workers, lied to by the functionaries who are ruling in the name of Marxism which 100 years ago began to attack the hypocrisy of the bourgeoisie. Now the workers in a socialist state demand free trade unions of a Western kind and less hypocrisy, and party chief Gierek promises "honesty." What was there before?

The sweet dishonesty which has become an end in itself is eating away the East European regime all on its own. There is no need for anybody to assist from without.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE on Soviet Reactions

[Commentary signed ME.: "Defeat in the Airwaves"]

[Text] The first Moscow reaction to events in Poland last week was the jamming of British, American and West German radio broadcasts beamed to the Soviet Union. It could be considered a defensive measure: Undesired information was to be withheld from their own populace. But the second Soviet reaction has an offensive character and involves again the information policy aspect of the great socialist strike. The Soviet Union now calls it "psychological warfare," namely that the West is as intensely interested in Polish affairs as warranted, and that it reports on them thoroughly over the radio and television. In doing this the Soviet leadership--so far indirectly--is also addressing its reproach to the Polish leadership because it has so far not effectively prohibited Western reportage from the scene of events.

Nobody ought erroneously to assume that it is a good sign that the Soviet leadership is limiting its activities "only" to outbursts of rage vis-a-vis the effects on policy of informative reports on the Polish mass strikes. [paragraph continues]

The daily reports on events on the east coast beamed to all the socialist states do not involve only socialism in Poland, but the Soviet power position in all of Europe. What feelings might the Soviet ambassador to East Berlin have or his consul in Chemnitz when they see West German television newsreels every night, and what feelings might their colleagues in Budapest or Bratislava have when they see Austrian television? The eating away of Soviet positions in "middle Europe" ["zwischeneuropa"] is currently taking place on its own quite normally through the dissemination of interesting information through the airwaves. Not even Moscow can say that an aggressive plot with other than peaceful machinations is under way. The West is even playing matters down.

And yet the Soviet Union is so hard hit by every night's demonstration of its loss of power that it may possibly not stand it much longer. Even Marx knew--and he was right--that whatever takes possession of the masses will turn into power. If the Soviet leadership now complains about "psychological warfare" and the "subversive clamor" of allegedly gigantic propaganda machines in the West, this reproach can overnight become a motive for massive intervention in Poland. Too much is at stake for the Soviet leadership, and too many people know this who should not.

CHINA AFFAIR SHOWS REAGAN FOREIGN POLICY 'NAIVETE'

[Horst Schreitter-Schwarzenfeld Washington dispatch: "Reagan's Chinese Blunder"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan is not even president yet (and many people doubt that he ever will be) but he has already offended a great power allied with the United States in new friendship. What is meant is China, the People's Republic officially recognized by the United States for nearly 2 years now, where people harbor hard feelings against the Californian movie actor because he wants to restore normal diplomatic relations with Taiwan. George Bush, as Reagan's "running mate" the candidate for the office of vice president, felt the Chinese displeasure during a trip from which he just returned to the United States. Bush's attempt to explain the attitude of his master: "Out of habit." Ronald Reagan has always been a loyal friend of Taiwan which until recently had been called the "Republic of China" in the United States. The change in U.S. policy on China initiated already under Republican Richard Nixon was not followed up by Reagan. Actually it ought to be very much to the liking of Reagan, this great "hawk" of East-West policy, that in the Washington-Beijing friendship axis a power has emerged which is highly unpleasant to the Soviet Union but Reagan does not like it at all that the relations with Taiwan had to be sacrificed for this purpose.

There is something touching in this sort of consistency in foreign policy, and at the same time something naive, almost simple-minded. So far candidate Reagan has failed to produce proof that he has even a vague idea about the complexity of world problems (a characteristic feature which he probably shares with many persons in the history of U.S. presidential elections). Compared with Jimmy Carter Reagan looks like the great simplifier. In other words: Compared with Ronald Reagan President Carter appears to be a diplomatic genius of nearly Talleyrand's stature.

Ronald Reagan, the foreign policy maker, had not committed any too great blunders before he got into hot water because of his China policy. He had made the big talk of strong America and demanded new billions for armament, things not meaning much concretely and stemming from the standard repertoire of Republican Sunday speakers. Not only the Republicans permanently want to "make America strong," the Democrats now also say that they pursue the same aims. They even seem to want to demonstrate that nobody can surpass them with regard to patriotism.

A change of military political thinking had set in long before the election campaign (and long before the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan): an abandonment of the policy of intentional noninterventionism, for example, the attitude of keeping out of it which had followed the Vietnam War. The decision to set up a "rapid deployment force" was evidence of that change.

In this election campaign and the climate dominated by uncertainty with regard to the role America should play in the world, a candidate has now in the person of Ronald Reagan who gives simple and not complicated answers. In a situation where a President (Jimmy Carter) has turned from being a declared advocate of disarmament into an advocate of military interests, Ronald Reagan voices the reproach: Treason and sellout. The established forces must demonstrate now that they can do it, namely defend America. Other voices, those who call for disarmament, restraint and keeping out of it, do not seem to be popular at present. At least one does not believe that this could win votes.

Yet the government camp does not have much hope of defeating Ronald Reagan in matters of defense as long as the quarrel is limited generally to "America's strength" and "America's honor." Carter's camp hopes that Reagan will become confused when the questions become concrete. That is exactly what happened with regard to the Chinese issue. The Republican top people made a desolate demonstration of contradictions, attempted corrections or plain incompetence. This is where the White House "experts" become active. Here the President with his expertise enters the game. One registers with satisfaction that Reagan's lead in opinion polls has deteriorated to as little as nothing.

POSSIBLE ELECTION AID TO CARTER SEEN IN STEALTH DISCLOSURE

[Commentary signed Ty.: "Flying a la Alberich"]

[Text] Being invisible or at least disappearing without a trace whenever one is fed up or when the situation becomes dangerous--these are childroom dreams, even dreams of mankind. Fairytales and sagas tell about them. Our Germanic ancestors dreamed up the smoke screen or magic hood and drew attention early on to the military utilization of this "weapons system": Viewed from this angle the conflict between Siegfried and Alberich, the wearer of the classical magic hood, was also a struggle over the latest military hardware. As far in the future as this very nuclear age strategic planners are bound to be delighted by the idea that it is possible to operate in enemy territory invisibly.

What has now come from the United States is news on a defense project called Stealth. This involves primarily military aircraft intended to be "practically invisible" to Soviet radar. The magic hood effect is achieved in "manifold ways," as Secretary of Defense Brown and his under secretary [of defense for research and engineering] for armaments, Perry, divulged to newsmen in Washington with great secrecy about details. Allegedly they have commented on the project only because they were forced to by premature press reports. So there was again a "leak" at the right time, as in connection with the "new" nuclear strategy. Hidden behind this is election assistance for Carter--or a really epoch-making breakthrough in arms technology. The daydream with fairytale features will become a nightmare in the dead earnest deterrence chess game between East and West. The "invisible" planes would indeed "improve the survival ability vis-a-vis ground-to-air missiles and interceptor planes," as the Pentagon says.

The Stealth project demonstrates in addition the still existing technological superiority of American armament. But such a lead only exists for a period of time. The Soviet Union will try to catch up. The issue between Siegfried and Alberich was not a blessed affair either.

PCF PRAISES POLISH LEADERS' HANDLING OF CRISIS

Gremetz Comment

LD252030 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] The Communist Party in France seems much less skeptical than the Poles themselves: The Communist Party applauds what is happening in Poland with both hands. Maxime Gremetz, member of the Communist Party Political Bureau, speaking to (Francois Vicard), expresses satisfaction with what he calls an example of socialist democracy as you will hear:

[Begin recording] The way of tackling issues, the criticism and self-criticism made by Edward Gierek and by the PZPR show that they are tackling issues frankly. And the criticism and self-criticism on listening more attentively to the needs and aspirations of the masses is in fact a criticism in front of the whole country and this is not without interest. You would admit that if you saw Mr Giscard d'Estaing saying here in France: Well, there is a problem with the fishermen, things are not going well, they are making demands, they are forced to express this by blockading the ports and the national navy is sent to unblock these famous ports. Well, if there was a government listening to them and saying to itself: I should have listened more and taken more account of the demands, everyone would express satisfaction. We would be the first to do so. But things do not happen like that. Well, in Poland that is how things do happen. [end recording]

L'HUMANITE Editorial

[Jose Fort editorial: "Yes, Poland"]

[Text] Self-criticism, tolerance, desire for dialogue and democracy, and determination to preserve the Polish socialist path were solemnly reaffirmed by Edward Gierek in his speech to the nation Monday night.

Self-criticism: "I would like to tell you frankly that errors in the sphere of economic policy have been made since what has been done in practice has been inconsistent with the orientation adopted after 1970."

Tolerance: "The atmosphere should be conducive to criticism and free wide-ranging discussion." discussion."

Dialogue: "We must jointly find solutions to the problems. Even in a conflict situation we are seeking a solution through discussion and compromise."

Democracy? "We can see that there is an urgent need to develop working class democracy in depth on the basis of an extension of self-management in places of work and, in particular, to extend the rights of workers' self-management conferences not only as far as their views on enterprise managers are concerned but also in other spheres."

Most major information media refrained from publishing these important passages of the Polish leaders' speech, emphasizing only one of its aspects, namely Edward Gierek's and his comrades' determination to tolerate "no action threatening the bases of the social and political order."

A very revealing reaction. The hope entertained by some people--not just in France but in Poland also--that socialism would be challenged and the old capitalist order restored by devious methods is bound to come to nothing.

They are full of hatred; we are confident. And doesn't the determination shown by Edward Gierek to overcome difficulties, correct mistakes, ensure changes and do away with anything that hinders progress toward direct and responsible participation in the country's political, economic and social life, especially as far as the role of trade unions and the Polish workers' desire for improved living standards within a democratic system are concerned, deserve our clearheaded understanding and mindful solidarity?

Poland has definitely put an end to its past of dead people, hunger and neglect.

Until quite recently Poland lagged far behind industrialized European countries; poverty was such that millions of Polish people were forced to emigrate. At that time who could eat meat apart from the rich?

And how can we overlook the fact that about one-fourth of the population was annihilated during the occupation?

Today Poland is in the forefront of the world economic power. It is no longer tyrannized, exploited and tossed about at the mercy of events and desires for domination. Poland is united; it has achieved dignity and honor. It owes this to its people and socialism.

By building socialism the new Poland has also achieved the dream of all Polish people--ensuring the country's independence. Poland's prestige is now unchallenged and its role in major international negotiations has been appreciated and commands respect.

Edward Gierek and his comrades are determined to strengthen socialism in their country. This is in Poland's interest. But isn't this also in the interest of France and peace?

All the most inveterate enemies of the struggles of the working class in France have become vociferous. They demand for the Polish workers what they refuse to give to the French workers. Yesterday Francois Mitterrand joined this pack live on French television's Channel One from his Landes residence.

Using the situation in Poland as a pretext, the Socialist Party first secretary has merely tried to divert the workers' and the French people's attention from the struggle for socialism. Francois Mitterrand is a defeatist.

However, the first secretary acted rashly when he mentioned "trade union freedom," the "right to strike" and just "freedom." Obviously he was referring to Poland. During the April 1957 strikes in France, Francois Mitterrand was a minister in Guy Mollet's government. On 18 April 1957, a government led by a socialist had a procession of strikers beaten up on Saint-Germain Boulevard in Paris.

LE MONDE VIEWS POLISH EVENTS, CONSTRAINTS ON GIEREK

[Editorial: "A Bitter Lesson"]

[Text] For the third time--following 1956 and 1970--the Polish workers have asserted themselves in the face of a theoretically omnipotent party. Mr Babiuch, who is picking up the tab for this setback, has undoubtedly neither the past nor the weight of a Gomulka, and Mr Gierek, the regime's number one, seems to have succeeded in diverting the storm which threatened him also. But the lesson for the hierarchs is bitter and hard for rulers who are Poland's allies or are clinging to the Soviet concept of socialism.

Under their system political crises smolder behind closed doors. They come out into the open only once the victors have defeated their adversaries. It is then that the people ratify through habit or indifference whatever has been done or undone. But the Polish people are obviously unwilling to put up with such practices. They want to have their say and they have found out how they can make themselves heard. Why is what is taking place in Warsaw still inconceivable in Sofia, Bucharest or Moscow?

The existence of an independent intelligentsia more numberous and more influential than other communist countries must be taken into account. A working class of which many members are familiar with struggles waged by free trade unions in a democracy must be reckoned with. And, above all, there is the fact that in that country party monopoly is recognized practically by no one even though it has been proclaimed as an article of faith. It is the Communist Party which is in charge of the wheels of government but as far as the nation is concerned it undoubtedly counts for much less than the Catholic Church whose vitality it is unnecessary to recall. Supporters of a pure and simple dictatorship of the proletariat have always come up against this reality: Many Polish proletarians obviously prefer the chapel to the [party] cell. They are more inclined to listen to statements by the pope--now their pope--than to the party leader's speeches.

Mr Gierek was wise enough to recognize that it is futile and dangerous to govern Poland against the Polish people. His problem is how to govern in with the Polish people. Will he be able to improve the situation? In 1956 Gomulka asserted, obviously completely sincerely, that he would always tell the truth and that he would never fight against the people. He ended discredited almost as much as his predecessors because he was unable to do what he had said he would. When he assumed power, Gierek stated that the Polish people would henceforth have a say in matters. It must be admitted 10 years later that this still is wide of the mark.

And yet the price increases which led to the present crisis were not unreasonable. Sooner or later the Polish leaders, who have to face up to crushing debts, will have to ensure that prices reflect economic realities more effectively. But how can you make people accept increased austerity? It is not enought to explain the troubles which have arisen in recent weeks by blunders. There must be some other reasons for a crisis on such a scale. Considerably transcending an economic malaise, this crisis throws light on the regime's inadequacies.

Has Gierek understood that people under his administration want to be citizens in every sense of the word? And if he has understood this, can he draw appropriate conclusions from this diagnosis? It is advisable to entrust the trade unions again, as he seems determined to do, with the task of protecting the workers' interests. One may wonder, however, what will be the use of trade unions as long as they appear to be a party agency. Now the first secretary, who is anxious not to accept any alternate powers which are, after all, necessary in any balanced society, does not seem at all prepared to really innovate. In any case, is he in a position to innovate? He also has heard of a certain doctrine of the limited sovereignty of socialist countries.

TRADE UNIONS CLOSELY MONITORING EVENTS IN POLAND

Delegation To Visit 28 Aug

LD270152 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0600 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Excerpt] The Polish Government has granted an entry visa to the delegation of the CGIL-CISL-UIL [Italian General Confederation of Labor-Italian Confederation of Workers Unions-Italian Union of Labor] Federation, which will leave for Poland on Thursday. The decision on the date was communicated yesterday at the end of a meeting held at the CGIL after a meeting at the Polish Embassy. "Cordial" was how the trade unions described their talk with the ambassador, who confirmed the absolute willingness of the Polish side to receive the Italian trade union delegation in such a way as to enable it to meet, as requested, the militant workers, the trade unions and the authorities.

The Federation, stresses a communique, believes that the decisions adopted in recent hours, together with the measures proposed in Gierek's speech, represent a significant step forward toward a renewal of trade union life and worker participation in Poland.

Leaders' Comments

[Excerpts] Rome, August 26 (ANSA)--The Italian trade-unions are monitoring closely the development of events in Poland as the politicians too maintain their attention on the situation in the East European state.

Interviewed by the RAI Radio-Television Network yesterday evening, a leading member of the Communist-led CGIL labor federation Agostino Marianetti noted that "things are moving in a concrete fashion on the path of seeking positive solutions". According to Marianetti, the announcement that the Polish workers will have the chance for free trade-union elections was linked to the "most significant demand" advanced by the strikers. "This is a positive step, even if by itself it does not resolve.... the problem of the unions' role," he added.

In an article to be published by the daily, IL GIORNO, today, CISL Secretary-General Pierre Carniti called the start of government-strike committee talks "an important political result". "But it regards procedure, not substance," he claimed, adding that despite the government reshuffle, "the Polish crisis, even if frozen by the negotiations, has not been resolved".

For UIL's secretary, Larizza, this was the "first significant step ahead which recognizes the value of the workers' participation and expresses a strongly critical evaluation of the limits of official trade-union's managerial centralism".

The small right-of-center Liberal Party, in the meantime, tabled an urgent parliamentary question asking the Italian Government to state its position on the Polish situation and to report on moves planned by the other EEC countries.

Meanwhile, at the Christian Democrat-promoted meeting of friendship among the peoples in Rimini, a leading Soviet exile Vladimir Maximov forecast that the events in Poland may find a repeat performance in the Soviet Union, but not immediately. "Dissent in the Soviet Union is very widespread", he told the meeting, "but it is not an opposition culture as in Poland...we'll need time for the formation of a solid movement like the Polish one, but all the premises are there for this to happen". "However it finishes, the strike in Poland will condition the future of Eastern Europe," he added. Maximov also ruled out a "bloodbath" in Poland and said the Catholic Church "can play an important role in avoiding one".

PCE's CARRILLO SEES NEED FOR 'SERIOUS REFORM' IN POLAND

LD261243 Madrid ABC in Spanish 21 Aug 80 p 10

[Excerpt] Madrid--With respect to the situation in Poland, the PCE secretary general has stated that "it is grave and could be dangerous, even for peace."

"It seems to me that the cause of this situation is the economic crisis, which is affecting Poland very severely, and also, perhaps, the existence of a political system which makes the people of Poland not feel fully heeded by their leaders."

"In short," he told the SER network, "it seems to me that in Poland, together with the economic issue there is another very important issue, which is that of democracy. I reiterate that the political system is not fully in keeping with what a large section of the Polish working class wishes, and the situation ["Situacion", presumably misprint of "solucion"--"solution"]--must lie, I believe, in a serious reform of the economic and political system which will make socialism in Poland a socialism which will be more indigenous and more closely linked with the Polish people's own personality."

The Workers Commissions have also released a communique expressing their solidarity with the Polish workers' just demands.

"The breadth of the Polish strike movement, with the participation of tens of thousands of workers in various sectors, ranging from industry through transport to mining, demonstrates the open and mass nature of the phenomenon, and makes clear the economic and social difficulties which are affecting the Polish workers, like those of the rest of Europe," the communique states.

The Workers Commissions express solidarity with the Polish workers' just demands and urge that it be possible at all times to exercise the right to strike, as well as the freedoms of association and expression and to demonstrate, as the Polish workers demand.

INTERIOR MINISTER COMMENTS ON BASQUE SECURITY SITUATION

LD222256 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 22 Aug 80

[Text] Spanish Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson this morning met the civil governors of the Basque Country and Gen Saenz de Santa Maria, the government's delegate in the Basque Country for security affairs. The Spanish interior minister later met the Basque government counselors for justice and the interior. ETA has a head [en eta hay cabeza] but negotiation is not possible because there is one thing which is not negotiable and that is the integrity of people, Juan Jose Roson later said at a press conference given in Bilbao. On this subject the minister added that the solution to terrorism in Spain lies in its disappearance. He said: I would like it to disappear in a peaceful way, but I do not think that this will happen. So it has to be approached from a policing point of view and not along violent lines.

He also expressed his determination and that of the government to bring the continual escalation in deaths to a halt. (?It seems) [words indistince] of governors in these autonomous territories as the principal instrument of defense [words indistinct] of the public and its freedoms as well as the coordinator of the different state representatives in those districts. And, finally, he alluded to the establishment of a series of points for his relations with the provincial corporations [word indistinct]. The minister of the interior added that the date on which the Security Council would begin to function depends on the first transfers [of powers] and on the conditions which constitute its establishment. With regard to government representatives on the council, Roson said that it will correspond to the different representatives of the central government in the Basque Country.

CYPRUS PRESIDENT MEETS WITH POLITICAL PARTY LEADERS

Meeting With Papandreou

[Press release on 25 August Kiprianou-Papandreou meetings in Athens]

[Text] The president of the republic, Mr Spiros Kiprianou, this evening had a meeting in Athens with the president of PASOK Socialist Party and main opposition leader, Mr Papandreou, whom he briefed on the latest developments in the Cyprus problem in view of the forthcoming resumption of the intercommunal talks.

In a statement after the meeting, which lasted for more than an hour, the president of the republic expressed the hope that the intercommunal dialogue will make progress. We have no indications, he added, we have no data. It is simply an expression of hope. President Kiprianou stressed that the targets for the establishment of a truly and absolutely free Cyprus state, independent, sovereign, territorially integral and federal but united state, where all the citizens, regardless of origin, will enjoy without restrictions their inalienable rights and their basic freedoms remain unchanged.

If of course this time too the dialogue does not produce results, he continued, then there will be a reassessment of the situation and the necessary decisions on the further handling of the question will be taken. Mr Kiprianou stressed that the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side are going to the dialogue with all goodwill and expressed the wish that the other side too will show similar goodwill. Needless to repeat, he added, that both in this phase and all the other phases, the countries which are in a position to exert pressures on Turkey, can play an important role.

Concluding the president of the republic repeated that Cyprus' mainstay in its struggle is Greece, the government, the political parties and the entire Greek people.

In a statement for his part, Mr Papandreou said that it has been established once more that the assessments on the prospects are common and so are the hopes for a final outcome of the Cyprus problem vindicating the struggles of the Cyprus people and at the same time the hopes and the visions of the Greek people. PASOK president expressed the conviction that it will be possible, after a relatively short time, to make an assessment of the course of the Cyprus problem in the new phase it has entered.

Mr Papandreou gave the assurance, through President Kiprianou, about the firm support of all the Greeks, without exception to the struggle for Cyprus is at the same time a struggle for the independence and sovereignty of Greece.

Additional Talks

AT261850 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1800 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Text] President of the Cyprus Republic Kiprianou continued his meetings with the leaders of political parties today. In the morning he received EDIK [Democratic Center Union] Chairman Zigdhis and Secretary General of the KKE-Exterior Florakis. In the evening he was visited by KODISO [Democratic Socialist Party] Chairman Pesmazoglou and representatives of the KKE-Interior, Dhrakopoulos and Kirkos. Kiprianou briefed them on the current phase of the Cyprus problem in view of the intercommunal talks.

Comments After Meetings

NC262029 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Text] Tonight President Kiprianou concluded in Athens his meetings with various political leaders. He met KKE-Interior Secretary General Dhrakopoulos and KODISO [Democratic Socialist Party] Chairman Pesmazoglou.

In a statement following these last meetings, President Kiprianou said that with the conclusion of his contacts with the party leaders he feels fully satisfied, because he has noted that there is great interest in Cyprus. Mr Kiprianou added that this time he noted that the interest in the Cyprus problem on the part of the political parties and of the Greek people is greater than at any other time, and that the same goes for the Cypriot people's struggle. Mr Kiprianou further added: The argument that the Cyprus problem has dropped to second place in Greece is not valid. This is my impression from my various contacts with the political leaders and the government as well as with representatives of the press and other mass media.

President Kiprianou said that during his meeting with political leaders he had the opportunity to brief them on the latest Cyprus developments and to explain the positions of the Cyprus Government, as well as the absolute sincerity of the Greek Cypriot side, in connection with the new phase of the talks which will serve to determine future developments. He added: Our goal is intense negotiations on the substance of the Cyprus problem so that we may be able to secure some progress. He said: The Greek Cypriot side will do everything possible, with the goal a biregional federation within the framework of the summit agreements.

Asked whether Cyprus will again appeal to the United Nations this year, Mr Kiprianou stated: There is no question of including the Cyprus problem on the UN General Assembly agenda because the question is already included. Therefore, in case the talks fail, the Cyprus problem will probably be debated either in November or December at the UN General Assembly. President Kiprianou added: However, I do not want to anticipate a failure of the talks. On the contrary, he said, we are going to the talks with goodwill so that they may succeed, and then if they succeed prospects will be very different.

After his meeting with President Kiprianou, Mr Dhrakopoulos stated that Mr Kiprianou analyzed for him the new phase of the Cyprus problem. He stressed that the KKE-Interior is on the Cypriot people's side. Mr Dhrakopoulos expressed the wish that during the current phase which, he said, is quite difficult, there should be the greatest possible unity around the national goals that have been stipulated, as well as the rallying of the Cypriots around their lawful government--the Kiprianou government--so that it may be able to face the current conditions. Finally, Mr Dhrakopoulos said that he stressed to Mr Kiprianou his party's militant support for Cyprus.

Mr Pesmazoglou stated that everyone is inspired by similar thoughts for the vindication of Cypriot Hellenism and the restoration of normal conditions in Cyprus. He added: This vindication is a matter that concerns all Greeks. Mr Pesmazoglou said: On this occasion I wish to stress how great the importance of the Cypriot people's unity around their president is because the securing of unity strengthens the negotiating power that is necessary in order to demand the rights of Cypriot Hellenism.

Mr Pesmazoglou also said that he is sure that Mr Kiprianou is returning to Nicosia with the certainty that all the Greek people and all the political forces are on the side of the president of Cyprus who is negotiating the Cyprus problem.

JOINT EXERCISES TO BE HELD WITH U.S. FORCES

AT251805 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] From 1-20 September an exercise will be held in western and central Macedonia by parachute commando units; other units from the three branches of the armed forces will also participate. A unit of paratroops from the United States will also join in the exercise in order to brief officers of the three branches of the armed forces on developments concerning the tactics and techniques for using modern equipment which the country has been supplied with.

Papandreou Denunciation

[Excerpts] A large exercise of commando units and paratroops with the participation of a U.S. parachute unit will be held from 1 to 20 October [dates as published] in the area of central and western Macedonia. Referring to the exercise PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou made the following statement:

"I ask Prime Minister G. Rallis if the government is mocking the Greek people when it talks about 'negotiations' with the alliance regarding Greece's return to the NATO military wing. It is clear that the exercise in central and western Macedonia in which U.S. armed forces will participate already constitutes, in practice, a return to the NATO military wing. The fact that these exercises will be held in central and western Macedonia undermines the atmosphere of good neighborliness which has developed in the Balkan area. We expect an explanation from the prime minister.

KKE-Exterior Criticism

[Excerpts] Joint Greek-American exercises were recently planned and will be held in northern Greece in the first 20 days of September. Yesterday the KKE-Exterior denounced the substance and broader political dimensions of this dangerous government decision, stressing that the U.S.-Greek exercises constitute "a serious, provocative action against the country's security and peace in the Balkans":

"The joint exercise of Greek commando units, paratroops and other units from the three branches of the armed forces together with a U.S. paratroop unit, which today the national Defense Ministry announced would be held next month, constitutes a serious, provocative action against the country's security and peace in the Balkans. The talk about training and briefing the Greek Armed Forces on new developments is only a fig leaf for deceiving the Greek people. The government has accepted the organization of joint military exercises with U.S.forces at a time when it is claiming that U.S. military 'facilities' fall within the framework of the military wing of NATO and, at least formally, our country continues to be outside it.

"In addition to that fact, the site which has been chosen for the exercises--that is, the section of the country which is adjacent to the Balkan socialist countries--is of particular concern since, at the same time, the government is declaring a 'multidimensional' foreign policy and support of detente in the Balkans. Thus, once again the government has given a measure of its consistency and of its true resistance to the dangerous demands of the U.S.-NATO imperialists. In fact, this matter involves a further change in government policy to the cold war strategy of the United States and to sit aggressive military preparations in the area, something which may lead the country into extremely dangerous adventures."

ASSEMBLY SUBCOMMITTEE RULES EARLY ELECTIONS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

TA251509 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] The subcommittee formed by the National Assembly Constitution Committee has decided that a decision for early elections would be against the constitution. The report on this subject will be discussed at the Assembly Constitution Committee tomorrow.

The chairman of the constitution committee, Deputy Sener Batttal from Konya, chaired the subcommittee as well. The meeting, which began at 1100, lasted around 4 hours. A 90-page text prepared by the RPP members of the subcommittee was discussed during the meeting. The three RPP members of the subcommittee voted in favor and one NAP and one NSP member voted against the text, which stated the reasons why an early election decision would be unconstitutional. In other words, the decision was approved by three votes to two.

The National Assembly Constitution Committee will discuss this report tomorrow. The subcommittee report consists of 94 pages, including an opposition [word indistinct]. The committee meeting will begin at 1100 tomorrow. Battal said that the report will be read during tomorrow's meeting, however, no debate will be opened on the report.

ERBAKAN CALLS FOR ISLAMIC UNITY AGAINST WESTERN WORLD

TA260547 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan said that Islamic countries should unite against the Western world as soon as possible. Speaking at a conference at the World Islamic Youth camp organized by the youth and sports ministry in Canakkale's Intepe District, Erbakan said that Islamic countries have five joint goals. He continued: These goals are the establishment of an Islamic united nations, the realization of an Islamic organization of culture and cooperation, the acceptance of the Islamic dinar as the valid currency among Islamic countries and the establishment of an Islamic military alliance and an Islamic common market.

Erbakan said that the interest rate system should be abolished and that the economy should be readjusted accordingly. Noting that it is Turkey's duty to defend the Islamic world against communism, imperialism and Zionism, Erbakan concluded by saying that Turkey was awakening to the need for unity with the Islamic world.

SCHMIDT TO ANSWER BREZHNEV MESSAGE 'IN DUE COURSE'

LD271530 Hamburg DPA in German 1458 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 27 Aug (DPA)--Chancellor Schmidt will answer the letter from Soviet head of state and party Brezhnev on arms limitation negotiations "in due course." This assurance was given by Government Spokesman Boelling at a news conference in Bonn today. After a careful analysis of the letter the Western allies will be consulted. In the letter which was received last Friday Brezhnev is reported to have affirmed his proposal for early negotiations on nuclear medium-range missiles. U.S. President Carter and other NATO countries' heads of government have received similar letters.

NORDLI, SCHMIDT PRESS CONFERENCE ON BREZHNEV PROPOSAL, TALKS

LD271523 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 26 Aug 80 p 9

[Morten Fyhn report: "Brezhnev To Nordli and Schmidt: Negotiations on New Nuclear Arms"]

[Text] Hamburg, 25 August--Soviet Union head of state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev has assured Norwegian Prime Minister Odvar Hordli and West German Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in a personal letter that Moscow is ready for negotiations on disarmament in Europe soon. The letter containing Brezhnev's unexpected initiative on negotiations was made public at a joint press conference in Hamburg on Monday at the end of Nordli's visit to West Germany. Soviet Ambassador to Oslo Yuriy A. Kirichenko delivered the letter to Nordli on Sunday, just before the prime minister left for West Germany. Neither Schmidt nor Nordli knows if Brezhnev has also written to other Western nations.

Nordli told AFTENPOSTEN that the letter principally contains a runthrough of the development in relations between East and West in recent months and discusses the possibilities for negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on nuclear arms in Europe. According to Nordli this part of the letter does not contain anything that was not known before.

In the prime minister's view the most important thing in the letter is that Brezhnev advocates making use of the time at our disposal in concrete and realistic negotiations before last December's NATO resolution on the deployment of new missiles in Europe is implemented. As is well known the NATO nations approved not only the production and deployment of the new cruise missiles in Europe within 3 years but also efforts to open negotiations with the Soviet Union in the meantime. The intention behind the negotiations is to reach agreement on disarmament so that the Soviet SS-20 missiles would be withdrawn, and that the deployment of the new missiles in Western Europe would thus no longer be necessary. In the letter to Schmidt and Nordli, Brezhnev makes the claim that the United States has not reached to the latest Soviet proposals for negotiations.

"I am glad I received this orientation from the Soviet Union before I left Norway," said Nordli, who hopes that negotiations can begin as soon as possible. He describes Brezhnev's letter as moderate in tone. The prime minister also hopes that the Soviet Union will fix a date for Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund's visit to Moscow as soon as possible. Nordli would like to see the visit out of the way before Frydenlund goes to the UN General Assembly on 20 September.

Federal Chancellor Schmidt, who visited Moscow in early summer this year, told AFTENPOSTEN that he was not surprised to receive a message from Brezhnev on a Soviet willingness to as much importance to the part of the NATO resolution that dealt with negotiations as to the part that involved the deployment of new missiles.

At the press conference Schmidt stressed strongly the broad agreement between Nordli and himself on all questions and said that the two of them have a close personal working relationship after having met each other several times in recent years. In their talks on international questions the uncertain situation in Poland was also discussed, but neither of them wanted to go into detail here. Schmidt said that it is necessary to be "extremely cautious" in the West when commenting on the situation in Poland. Nordli told the press conference that he briefed Schmidt on the plans for the contingency stockpiling of military equipment in northern Norway, but that the matter was not discussed in any depth.

Nordli stressed how highly the Norwegian Government values Schmidt's initiatives and efforts to ensure good NATO defenses, and especially the chancellor's attempts to bring about negotiations with the Soviet Union. "We give Schmidt our full support and hope for realistic solutions," Nordli said. The prime minister also pointed to the importance of the industrial and energy cooperation that is going on between Norway and West Germany. During their talks the two reached agreement to involve the two countries' trade union movements in the discussions going on between authorities and industry intended to find concrete cooperation projects.

Helmut Schmidt also attached great importance to cooperation in this field. "Even though Norway is not a member of the EEC, it is important that none of us forgets that Norway is an important and integrated factor in Europe," the federal chancellor said.

Nordli and his entourage left Hamburg in the afternoon bound for Oslo, while Foreign Minister Frydenlund traveled directly to New York to be present at the UN special session on the situation of the developing countries.

BOELLING CITED ON POLAND, SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING

LD271653 Hamburg DPA in German 1517 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--The Federal Republic continues to exhibit restraint in its public comments on events in Poland. Government Spokesman Boelling today agin declined to offer any comment because "no pretext for intervention" should be given. He also refused to answer a question about the nature of the "well-considered reasons" for Bonn's attitude.

The government spokesman affirmed once again the Chancellor Schmidt's visit to Rostock which he intended to make on his return from his meeting with Honecker and which the GDR wanted to cancel on short notice had been "clearly agreed" during the preliminary talks. As a further detail he disclosed that East Berlin had also gone back on its consent for the chancellor to visit Guestrow. According to Boelling the Federal Government was not guided in its preparations for the Schmidt-Honecker meeting by the Honecker interview of which excerpts linking the issue of citizenship with the relaxation of some conditions were publised on 5 July. Bonn had studied the interview carefully. He rejected conjectures voiced in the press that the interview had contributed to Bonn's decision to postpone the chancellor's visit.

GDR Citizenship Issue

LD271524 Hamburg DPA in German 1443 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 27 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government continues to refuse to recognize individual GDR state citizenship which SED leader Erich Honecker named as a prerequisite for improvements in inter-German relations and in particular for more trips to the West by GDR citizens.

Despite these continuing difficulties, however, Bonn still sees progress in relations with the GDR as feasible and is presuming that the GDR leadership has a corresponding attitude. This was learned from remarks by Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling to the press in Bonn today. Berlin's Governing Mayor Dietrich Stobbe, and Berlin's CDU chairman, Peter Lorenz, also rejected Honecker's demand today which the SED leader made in an interview published on Monday but given at the beginning of July, in other words before the chancellor's planned visit to the GDR.

Boelling said that the Federal Government has not altered its position on the question of GDR state citizenship "by one iota." This had been known to the GDR leadership for a long time and yet the Federal Government had still been interested in the meeting between the SED leader and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt until the point when its scope with regard to the contents of the talks and additional activities for the chancellor's visit had been restricted. According to Boelling the government was prepared at the meeting between Schmidt and Honecker for the fact that the GDR leadership occupied basic positions which Bonn was not expecting to be able to storm, as it were, in an assault on the Werbellinsee. At the same time he stressed that after its preparatory talks with the GDR the government had the impression that progress in relations would be possible at the meeting. "This was not wishful thinking."

FRG, GDR TO EXCHANGE INFORMATION ON NUCLEAR SAFETY

ID 272054 Hamburg DPA in German 1627 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Summary] Bonn--The Federal Republic and the GDR will extend the exchange of information on the safety of nuclear installations, including on emergencies. This was announced by the Federal Government in reply to a question from the opposition which was published in the Bundestag on Wednesday. Existing agreements with the GDR and other neighboring states lay down the principles for dealing with damage at the common border which includes notification of damage which had or is about to occur, the answer says.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON U.S. VISIT

Talks With Muskie

DW280715 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0311 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Correspondent Koar 26 August interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Washington--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Following your rather long talk with your U.S. counterpart Muskie you issued a joint press release. This release expresses a conformity of views on various issues which include the developments in Poland, the occupation of Afghanistan by Soviet troops, the North-South dialogue and specifically the special UN General Assembly in progress today, the CSCE followup conference in Madrid, and the tactical nuclear weapons, that is to say the NATO decision of December on the closure of the arms gap. Why was a joint press statement issued after a foreign ministers meeting? This is unusual.

[Answer] Yes indeed. But both of us agreed that especially in the present difficult international situation it is particularly significant to express by means of such joint statements that the Federal Government and the U.S. Government are in full harmony with respect to all important international questions and that they are determined to act jointly. For we are convinced that concerted actions by the Eruopeans and Americans, in this particular case between Germans and Americans, are decisive for the stability in the work of safeguarding peace.

[Question] What specifically characterizes the common attitude and the harmony of views regarding events in Poland?

[Answer] It was expressed here once again, and quite clearly, that we expect everybody to exercise the greatest restraint vis-a-vis the events in Poland and that we hope that the Polish people and the Polish Government can solve their problems. After all, it is no secret that what transpires in Poland is being watched with emotion and profound sympathy by the citizens of our countries.

[Question] But isn't the idea bound to come up that it is necessary to help more rather than exercise more restraint, for instance by coordinating the economic aid to Poland?

[Answer] It is generally known that in the Federal Republic a consortium of banks has been endeavoring for quite some time, and absolutely without any connection with the latest events in the People's Republic of Poland, to grant Poland a credit. In this respect it is the common German and American view that economic assistance of any nature should be granted if it can contribute toward alleviating the troublesome situation in Poland. We should not hesitate in this respect.

[Question] Is it true that depending on the further development of events in Poland conclusions for the CSCE will have to be drawn?

[Answer] It is my opinion that the restraint which we are asking applies to us as well, and this thus applies to the answer to your question.

[Question] The joint statement to the press mentions the intention to discuss the nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe in connection with NATO's decision on the closure of the arms gap, and that preliminary talks to this end are to be held between the United States and the Soviet Union. When will that happen?

[Answer] Legal experts might say: Immediately, that is without any culpable delay.

On UN General Assembly

DW280708 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Cornelius Bormann interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in New York--date not given--recorded]

[Text] How binding for the Federal Republic are the decisions adopted here?

[Answer] To begin with, these meetings as a result of the dialogue time and again have ensued in harmonious views on quite a few issues. On the other hand, we advocate the view that individual governments really should promise only what they can fulfill as well. What I mean to say is that those promising something should themselves advocate the binding character of such a promise.

[Question] Hence approval on principle is not enough. These verbal acrobatics which are characteristic of such meetings really should not be emulated.

[Answer] No, they should not. I am absolutely opposed to decisions which do not make it definite that those expected to do something really are capable of doing it. This is why we talk frankly here about what we want, what we can do, but also about the limits of our potential.

[Question] Hence no 0.7 percent [in aid to developing countries] by 1984?

[Answer] I do not anticipate the possibility of this occurring.

POLITICIANS INTERVIEWED ON U.S.-FRG RELATIONS, DETENTE ISSUES

SPD's Wischnewski

DW271129 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1920 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Excerpts from reporters R. Eser and Hans Albert interview with Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski during the special feature "ZDF Hearing," apparently in Bonn--live]

[Text] [Question] Afghanistan is at present one of the sore points in Bonn-Washington relations. Didn't we in the German Republic really pretend for too long that Afghanistan was a problem of the Americans, and that we only had to see to it that there was peace in Europe?

[Answer] No, I cannot share that attitude at all. The Federal Government recommended not taking part in the Olympic games because of Afghanistan. The German sportsmen adhered to that request. Others, such as the Italians, Belgians and the English discussed this matter, but they did the opposite. We do not give state credits to the Soviet Union, just to name another example. We have said that we are prepared to discuss the COCOM list containing restrictions or prohibitions regarding the shipment of military-strategic goods to the Soviet Union, but not a general trade boycott.

These are problems wherein the interests of the Federal Republic of Germany are considerably different from those of the United States. The Americans have said with regard to all these issues that they have understanding for the special problems of the Federal Republic of Germany, for West Berlin, transit routes, transit waterways, air corridors and efforts to maintain human contacts. We have naturally included all this in our considerations.

[Question] To what extent does trade with the East belong to the special interests of the Federal Republic? Trade with the East is particularly extensive, which is something America has complained about. We have argued that our dislike of economic boycott measures in connection with Afghanistan was caused by the fact that we considered them as ineffectual.

[Answer] First of all, the United States did the following: It said that economic measures should be taken only vis-a-vis the Soviet Union and not its allies. Everybody knows that this contains a mostly theoretical point. Naturally there exists the potential within CEMA to move everything across the border.

Second, I am opposed to economic boycotts regardless of where they take place, whether against South Africa or the Soviet Union. I do not think that this is a current option. The world economy is interlaced in such a way that there is a great danger that one could hurt oneself more than hurt. It cannot be a task of German policy to act like that.

[Question] An election campaign is taking place in America also. One gains the impression that we discuss disarmament while people in America do not merely think loudly on intensified armament but that discussions and pertinent decisions are taking place. Doesn't that indicate a new and much more basic conflict?

[Answer] I do not believe that there exists a uniform approach in the United States to this problem. The current President and his administration base their deliberations on the problem of a military balance, while the other candidate, Reagan, is considering throroughly strengthening the position of the United States. Quite a difference exists between these two positions. We will be able to see after 4 November what policy will be pursued by the United States. I hope it will be possible as before to attribute great significance to SALT II, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Vienna negotiations--always under the assumption that these will not be one-sided measures by the West, but that both sides will try to decrease the military potential particularly here in Europe.

FDP's Moellemann

DW271100 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1920 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Excerpts from reporters R. Eser and Hans Albert interview with Juergen W. Moellemann, foreign policy spokesman of the FDP Bundestag group, during the special feature "ZDF Hearing," apparently in Bonn--live]

[Text] [Question] Is the decade of cooperation in Ostpolitik and detente policy drawing to a close? Is a decade of confrontation looming ahead?

[Answer] This would be very bad because I cannot imagine any reasonable options that would then be left to us. We have so many problems in East and West alike, problems which we can solve only if we cooperate reasonably. Therefore it is necessary to make every effort to prevent a phase of confrontation from emerging. On the other hand, we have a gigantic arms potential in both blocs. If this potential is to be prevented from exploding, if it is to be put under control, negotiations are necessary. It is necessary to talk lest a constantly greater portion of the gross national product be used for these rather unproductive expenditures.

And if I think about the distressing situation, of the misery in the Third World while we in the East and West alike waste so much money on armament, then I believe no reasonable person can value an insistence on principles any higher than reasonable talks.

[Question] Actually the federal foreign minister is constantly uttering more criticisms against the Soviet Union's intentions. Does this reflect a certain doubt about his own Ostpolitik?

[Answer] No. As far as we are concerned policies toward the East and toward the West have always been a pair belonging together, a pair of which both pillars must be viewed critically. I think that Genscher in particular represents a guarantee that these two pillars remain tied together. We have coordinated all individual steps of detente policy with our Western partners.

But on the other hand we also see the mistakes made and the weaknesses existing in our own, the Western, camp. After all, we are not perfect. And we see, on the other hand, the differences between the basic lines of detente policy as originally defined and their practical implementation. This is why the foreign minister and the chancellor occasionally remind the interlocutors and treaty partners, and rightly so, that they must abide by their commitments--the commitment, for instance, emanating from the CSCE Final Act, commitments such as must now be observed vis-a-vis Poland, for example, the commitment of noninterference.

[Question] Can this commitment be enforced, say, in connection with German credits?

[Answer] No. I do not think that anybody will say that the observance of rights can be bought; but it can be promoted politically. I am sure that the existence of the CSCE Final Act exerts concrete influence on the present course of events in Poland. Without this Final Act such a high degree of visibility--I am constantly amazed by what is televised, each phase of the strike there--might not have been possible, nor the somewhat broader partnership basis in dealing with each other. When I thought of noninterference, by the way, it was not so much Poland that I had in mind.

[Question] It sometimes seems in the election campaign that the FDP rates the alliance with the Americans higher than its Social Democratic partners. Would you be more prepared to restrain our own interests in the interest of a close relationship with the United States?

[Answer] I cannot speak for the Social Democrats, but as for my faction and my party we indeed consider that partnership between the United States and its European friends as very important. I do not like very much the term leadership role. It sounds as if one is marching ahead and the others have to follow even if the leader is making mistakes. States with equal rights form their opinions in a dialogue. Sensible debates take place within NATO. Helmut Schmidt is not a superman; Carter is not a superman. Why should the one play an absolute leadership role and the others agree in toto? It is important to realize that we must act sensibly together in central political issues such as disarmament, for example, or East-West relations.

[Question] Acting together could mean what the Allies said after Afghanistan that they want to develop their own long-term strategy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union. Where is that strategy? Wouldn't it have been a particular task for the Germans to contribute to such a strategy in cooperation with the United States?

[Answer] I have the feeling that one has very much tried to do that and that concrete steps have been taken. The Western states have drastically intensified their cooperation with all nonaligned states. That is a demonstrative gesture in support of the nonaligned as an important element of foreign policy. We have strengthened NATO by increasing the defense expenditures. We have pointed out in addition in a dialogue with the Warsaw Pact states how we assess the Afghanistan operation.

The most important thing is that 104 UN states--and we with them--have absolutely identically and clearly condemned the Soviet Union. There was no need to change our policy because we have always maintained that the two pillars--security policy, sufficient defense efforts and detente policy--have complemented each other. This is why where is no need to change anything.

[Question] The Free Democrats want to be especially good Europeans. Don't you see a contradiction between efforts made for close and intensified European foreign policy on the one hand and cooperation with America on the other?

[Answer] No. This is demonstrated by the fact that our American and Canadian friends have been incorporated, for example, in the European Conference on Security and Cooperation between the East and the West cannot be practiced if the West is divided. We contribute our most specific interests to NATO and the partnership with the United States. It cannot be denied that we Germans, living in a divided country, consider this problem an urgent one, and that we must point that out occasionally to our American friends.

CDU's Mertes

DW271129 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1920 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Excerpts from reporters R. Eser and Hans Albert interview with Alois Mertes, security expert of the CDU, during the special feature "ZDF Hearing," apparently in Bonn--live]

[Text] [Question] Mr Mertes, you were the one who raised the demand for a new definition of Ostpolitik and detente policy. Does new definition mean that we should start all over again, and if so, from where?

[Answer] No, but it does mean that we must jointly consider, in the alliance as well as in the Federal Republic of Germany, the weaknesses of the detente policy pursued to date. What primarily makes up the weakness of this detente policy is that the East describes its contents entirely differently than the West. As far as the Soviet Union is concerned detente means safeguarding its sphere of rule, if possible even through recognition by the West. To the Soviet Union detente means lulling the West's awareness of the problem to sleep with the drug of detente. This is the way the USSR looks at it. And as far as the Soviet Union is concerned detente simultaneously means setting up a gigantic military superiority, not for waging war against Western Europe but for eliciting fear in Europe and Europe's readiness to make great concessions to the Soviet Union some day in this climate of fear.

The West understands something entirely different by detente. For the West detente means the gradual implemenation of human rights, not only a revocable easing of the people's lot for which new payments must be made constantly but the gradual and irrevocable implementation of human rights and the creation of a military balance on a low military and financial level. To me it is simply dishonest to say detente policy. It is always necessary to ask which detente policy you mean, that of the Soviet Union or that of the West? It is necessary to ponder this point. It must be newly defined if we wish to pursue a clear and honest and not a nebulous foreign policy.

[Question] The CDU proceeds from the premise that the long-term objectives of the Soviet Union continue to aim for a world revolution. Is it at all possible on the basis of such a profound distrust to pursue any detente policy or wouldn't this be a policy of confrontation anyway, for whatever purposes?

[Answer] I believe the word distrust is not the proper term to be used here. I suggest we use the word vigilance instead. After all, the Western alliance also says that vigilance is the price of freedom. We did not talk enough by far in the West during the past 10 years, about the long-term goals of the Soviet Union. A rethinking process in that respect is taking place in the United States. You can accuse the Soviet Union of a lot of things, but you cannot accuse it of one thing, namely failure to have made known its long-term objectives--be it as the executor of the law of history, be it bowing to an insatiable security concept. Only the West shut its eyes and closed its ears, refusing to see this. What we demand is not any greater hostility toward the Soviet Union, any more distrust, but simply that in the future the Soviet Union be taken more seriously in its comprehensive long-term policy and that its discernible, long-term strategy be set off by the West's own long-term strategy. What we need is not only a balance of military power but also a balance of farsightedness and long-term calculation. Only in this way can a lasting peace be secured.

During the past several years, and especially since Afghanistan, the understanding for our appeals for vigilance has increased among our sister parties. Large segments of the Western public had been grasped by the climate of misinterpreted detente. Today we have the impression that we are being properly understood indeed.

[Question] Your party has considered it important lately to point out that the Soviet Union is pursuing a long-term strategy aimed at dominating the world and that the West has nothing tohold against this strategy. Can the basic motive of such a strategy in principle be only mistrust vis-a-vis the Soviet Union? How can one pursue a policy with such mistrust?

[Answer] This is not mistrust or enmity vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, it is only a matter of taking seriously what the Soviet Union says it wants to achieve. It has two pillars, two principles. There is an unsatisfied security outlook tending always toward new acquisitions. It believes it must carry out the rule of history, namely that the world must become communist. I am not slandering the Soviet Union by quoting its basic texts. The West must not develop an ideology like a catechism either. But it must have a policy, a strategy which does not only pragmatically deal with one emergency after the other. The West must have a political approach to such issues as disarmament. Such terms as detente and disarmament cannot be separated from the overall strategy of the Soviet Union. The West, however, and for some time also the Americans, tend to separate disarmament and arms limitation problems from political aims. All these issues must be seriously considered in the alliance. This is not an anticommunist master plan, but an attempt to create a long-term counterbalance with regard to historical clarity and historical determination.

[Question] NATO likes to praise the division of tasks as a general cure. The Americans have new and additional tasks to cope with outside Europe, and we are to take over some more duties. Can we take over much?

[Answer] I think we can take over quite a lot in the field of defense and in the economic field.

[Question] At whose expense?

[Answer] What do you mean by that?

[Question] The taxpayer?

[Answer] Everything costing money will be at the expense of the taxpayer. But decisions must be made here according to political priorities. We believe that preservation of our security and freedom is the prerequisite for everything else. Security is not everything, but without security there will be nothing. Therefore priority must be given to security in a certain sense. As regards the division of duties, I am all for it. It will also involve a political division of labor. We Germans do not have the role in the alliance of playing down the aggressive long-term aims of the Soviet Union in the Western alliance--something that has been done in the past 10 years. We must point out soberly and without agitation the specific problems of German partition and the partition of Europe. The alliance is not merely a military pact, it is not even mainly a pact. It is primarily a community of ideas regarding political values. We as divided Germany have a special function with regard to political vigilance and also with regard to reminding the Americans of the basic significance of human rights issues for the creation of real peace.

CSU's Zimmermann

DW271031 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1920 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Excerpts from reporters R. Eser and Hans Albert interview with Friedrich Zimmermann, chairman of the CSU land group in the Bundestag, during the special feature "ZDF Hearing," apparently in Bonn--live]

[Text] [Zimmerman] Not everything has been fruitless in these 10 years of Ostpolitik and detente policy.

But this policy had been started under an immense time pressure already imposed by the Federal Government itself at the time when the treaties were concluded. Nevertheless not everything has been bad, but detente policy was not realistic enough. It failed to see that the Soviets have interpreted it as something entirely different. Never before has a great power in peacetimes pursued such unheard of, flagrant military policies going beyond all dimensions of what is necessary for its own defense as the Soviet Union has pursued in these very 10 years. And not only the Federal Government but others in the West as well were too lenient, too receptive to dreams about seeing their wishes come true, even though these wishes could not be fulfilled. That has now failed, and the brusque way in which Mr Honecker expressed it only yesterday--easing of travel restrictions are out of the question; lowering of the pension age is out of the question; so-called land groups is what he called our East Germans, our Silesian fellow citizens, revanchists is what he called them, and financed by the Federal Government to boot--demonstrates the manner of speech after the failed dialogue. This is reality.

[Question] I don't think that if we refuse credit aid to a country--a satellite state in your jargon--we drive these states even more into the embrace of the Soviet Union?

[Answer] Credits to East European states is an ambiguous subject. Only what about our credits to Western states? In the case of Italy we justly set up restrictions, saying that this or that must be economically fulfilled in Italy before we help. We did the same think in the case of Turkey, an important Western and NATO ally. Only in the case of the East bloc state do we give, even before the Schmidt-Gierek dialogue has begun, the promise of DM1.2 billion. And as the Federal Government itself has said, what matters is not this credit anymore, its terms and conditions, but other political issues in Europe. I fail to understand that, this is not a reasonable policy.

[Question] Suppose the Union was to be in government--would it grant the incumbent Polish regime a credit?

[Answer] Credits and aid, also to East European states, will be inevitable. But why does not the Soviet Union help, why must we? Alright, we should help but we should do so under specific conditions that need to be negotiated and that will benefit the people, conditions which cannot be broached here in public but which must be negotiated in the samll, secretive talks necessary in such negotiations; without preconditions but also without the advance concessions which the Federal Government has again affirmed in this case without any return concessions.

[Question] Surely it is not true that we are granting credits solely with political motives. Surely we are also thinking of our own economy, sales markets to be exact.

[Answer] Why of course. Only in such an issue and under such conditions as exist today in the case of communist Poland, a great deal of politics is involved already. And politics is more important than trade with the East, separately and selectively.

[Question] We now will deal with the issue of relations with America. What fields are considered most important by the voters? Here is an interesting result: Economic relations with the United States holds first place, then comes the important field of mutual political support, and the third position is held by military cooperation. The key words are economic relations and mutual political support. Don't the answers to the polls show that a most pragmatic and almost a distanced assessment exists with regard to our alliance partner? Particularly if one hears simultaneously that only 11 percent of those questioned by us consider the American leadership role as particularly significant. Doesn't that demonstrate that many federal citizens want to have a more self-assured German policy vis-a-vis America?

[Answer] First of all one must know the questions in order to access opinion polls of this kind, in order to view them in a balanced and objective way. If that is correct--I do not know the questons--it would much rather indicate a lack of information in those questioned. One thing is certain: The point more important by far than economic relations with the United States is our political relations and our relations in the alliance; they must take first place.

[Question] I want to mention briefly for the sake of information that we gave the questioned people examples of German-American relations, asking them to assess their significance in this framework. And the question "American leadership role" was of secondary importance for those questioned.

[Answer] For the CDU/CSU and for me the leadership role of the United States has always played an extremely important role. In these times particularly it plays a primary and most important role, much more important than the other questions.

[Questions] Your candidate for chancellor said literally that the Union demands seamless cohesion with the United States. Doesn't that amount to almost uncritical subordination if one views the size and thus the power of both partners?

[Answer] The Federal Republic of Germany--all other 14 NATO partners say this without envy, jealousy or too much restraint--is the most important partner next to the United States. German-American relations are extremely important viewed from both sides. The United States also views the role of the Federal Republic in this sense, for after all it represents the greatest NATO contingent following the United States. The demand for seamless agreement has nothing to do with dependence. I fully agree with the minister-president of Schleswig-Holstein, Stoltenberg, who said these days that we must again make more Western policy. The security situation in the world and in Europe makes it advisable to rally closer together again, once the United States has achieved more self-assurance and self-confidence after years of weakness and such handicaps as the Vietnam War and the Watergate affair; and since the United States wants the assistance of the Europeans and the Germans, we must fulfill the task of seamless cooperation. People, state chiefs and government chiefs occasionally need friends who pat them on the shoulder and say: I will help you without ifs and whens, and not those such as the German side and the German Government which has said over and over again what it cannot do vis-a-vis the United States.

[Question] In criticizing German policy toward the West shouldn't you consequently say that this criticism is criticism of the state of the alliance and thus also of the way in which the Americans fill out or do not fill out their leadership role?

[Answer] Naturally! My answers to the initial question indicate that already. I also quoted the reasons for it: Vietnam and Watergate. But that belongs to the past. We should all have the feeling that the present President and his opposition candidate will again take seriously the leadership role of the United States--we welcome that.

NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER TO DISCUSS ECONOMIC AID

PA271416 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1938 GMT 25 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 25 Aug (EFE)--Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto will arrive in Bonn Thursday to meet with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. The subject of their talks will be the financial aid the FRG can give Nicaragua to help it overcome some of its current economic difficulties. The Nicaraguan minister had been scheduled to visit in July, but he had to postpone it to participate in an OAS meeting on the Bolivian crisis.

GISCARD ISSUES STATEMENT ON SITUATION IN POLAND

LD271202 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 27 Aug 80

[President Giscard d'Estaing's statement on situation in Poland read by Elysee spokesman Jean-Marie Poirier in Paris on 27 August--recorded]

[Text] [Words indistinct] the Polish and French peoples, a deep friendship resulting from a shared history but which is expressed through the many human ties through which the two countries are attached. The existence and role of Poland are of fundamental importance in the eyes of France for the equilibrium and peace of Europe. These two facts justify the attention with which the events in Poland are being followed in France and the sympathy accorded to any initiative which meets the aspirations of the Polish people.

France follows the constant principle of noninterference in the internal affairs of other states. It hopes that Poland can find within itself the means to overcome its difficulties and to meet the aspirations of its people.

GISCARD RECEIVES BREZHNEV MESSAGE ON ARMS DEPLOYMENT

[Text] A late piece of news which (Jean-Paul Bonami) has communicated to me from the Elysee: Valery Giscard d'Estaing has received a message from Leonid Brezhnev on the redeployment of nuclear arms in Europe. The contents are not yet known. A similar message has been sent to the Americans and West Germans.

'NO CHANGE' IN PCF VERDICT ON 1968 CZECHOSLOVAK INVASION

LD271517 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 21 Aug 80 p 6

[Jose Fort article: "Prague--12 Years Ago"]

[Text] On 21 August 1968 troops from the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, Poland, Hungary and the GDR entered Czechoslovak territory.

Twelve years already. Twelve years during which our disapproval has not wavered. Socialism was in danger, it was said to explain the military intervention. Now this was not and still is not the French Communists' view.

The Czechoslovak Communist Party was at that time engaged in a process aimed at developing socialist democracy, with its imperfections and also with its originality and its hopes. Obviously forces hostile to socialism sought to attack the social system which, despite opposition and obstacles put in its path, engenders freedoms in the end. All freedoms. And the maneuvers which originated in the FRG and elsewhere could not be transformed into direct imperialist intervention.

This being the case, did the Czechoslovak people and their party not have sufficient forces to repel the adversaries of socialism? And was it not up to them and only up to them to act with a view to preserving and consolidating socialist achievements?

We persist in believing that it was!

On 21 August 1968, the French Communists made their disapproval known. On 21 August 1980, their attitude has not changed.

GOVERNMENT SURVIVES CONFIDENCE VOTES BEFORE ECONOMIC DEBATE

LD272126 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Text] The Chamber of Deputies has twice given a vote of confidence in the government and rejected objections raised by the opposition parties, to the economic decrees. Immediately afterwards Aglietta, leader of the Radical Party group, proposed that chamber should go into continuous session in order to exhaustively examine the decrees. The chamber approved the proposal. Those in favor were the Christian Democrats, Socialists, Republicans and Radicals. Those against were the Communists, Liberals and Proletarian Unity Party deputies, while the deputies of the Italian Social Movement Party took no part in the voting. The [word indistinct] session has already begun.

All Night Session

AU280859 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Rome, August 28 (ANSA)--Early this morning the lower house of the Italian Parliament was still in a marathon session in a bid by the opposition parties to defeat the government's package of economic decrees. The all-night session began after two confidence votes were called on objections of unconstitutionality presented by the MSI neofascist, Radical and Communist parties.

Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga (Christian Democrat-DC) had announced Tuesday that a confidence vote would be called as many times as necessary to assure passage of the anti-crisis measures before the deadline. The objections of unconstitutionality of the decrees in general were voted down by 317 against 260, and one abstention. Objections of unconstitutionality on the content of the decrees were defeated with 317 votes against 257 and one abstention.

The two economic decrees--one covering fiscal matters and the other public expenditure--were put on the books in July. The Italian Constitution gives the government the right to issue decrees. But they must be approved by the two houses of Parliament within sixty days if they are not to expire. The Senate has already approved the anti-crisis decrees. The deadline for the fiscal provisions, which were approved by the appropriate lower house commission, is September 1. The deadline for the other decree is September 7.

The neofascist Italian Social Movement has announced more than a thousand amendments, taking a leaf from the book of the small Radical Party which weighed in with the relatively small number of two hundred amendments. Strong opposition, though not a filibuster, was also to be expected from the Proletarian Unity Party (PDUP) to the left of the communists.

Immediately after the second confidence vote, Radical Party M.P. Adelaide Aglietta proposed to "put to a test" the majority's intention to get the decrees approved by proclaiming a marathon session. The proposal was approved with the votes of the Radicals, Christian Democrats, Socialists and Republicans.

Earlier in the day there were a number of statements on the DC-Socialist-Republican coalition's decision to call for confidence votes on the objections of unconstitutionality.

Sud Tyroler Volkspartei (SVP) M.P. Roland Riz came out in favor of the confidence vote, claiming that the opposition's objections of unconstitutionality are "inconsistent". Riz, however, criticized the government's tendency to resort too often to issuing decrees.

Luci Magri, secretary of the PDUP party, announced his party's vote of no-confidence because "the government and the majority are weak and quarrelsome and seek a clash with the leftist opposition." He also said that it was "arrogant" to call for a confidence motion on objections of unconstitutionality.

Liberal Party (PLI) Secretary Valerio Zanone said the confidence vote on the objections indicates the government majority's stubborn intent to shut itself out and take cover. Announcing his party's vote against confidence, Zanone termed the decrees "late, partial and insufficient". Republican (PRI) Party member Gianni Ravaglia justified the confidence motion to counter the neofascists' threatened filibuster. Ravaglia claimed that there is a strategy of specific parties aimed at wearing down institutions and prophesize new republics. Speaking for the Radicals, Adelaide Aglietta underscored the deterioration of political relations. Opposition to the confidence vote came also from the Social Democrats (PSDI). M.P. Carlo Vizzini said that the move was "inappropriate" from the point of view of regulations since it alters the meaning of the debate and implies political assessments of the government's record.

Socialist Party (PSI) M.P. Mauro Seppia announced his party's vote of confidence in the government and warned his colleagues who criticize the government's frequent recourse to decrees to reflect on the frequent use of filibusters. "In any case, the lower house regulations do not rule out the use of confidence motions", Seppia said.

In order to defeat the MSI neofascist filibuster, Communist Party (PCI), M.P. Abdon Alinovi said "the only way was to have a correct parliamentary dialectic, a serious and committed confrontation with the Communist opposition and the other leftist and democratic parties". Alinovi accused the government of not having defended the decrees and of not accelerating the lower house session but fearing only the secret ballot. Christian Democrat Menfredo Manfredi upheld the constitutionality of the decrees and said they are part of a long-term policy to give new stimulus to the economy.

COLOMBO COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC, ENERGY ISSUES AT UN SESSION

AU280918 Rome ANSA in English 0825 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] New York, August 28 (ANSA)--The plight of hundreds of millions of human beings suffering from hunger is in the limelight of the United Nations special session on development which began here Monday. In his speech before the General Assembly Wednesday, Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo started from the premise that at the outset of this decade the international economic picture is dominated by an unprecedented disorder.

Many nations tend to close themselves into a one-sided vision of problems which are on the contrary generalized and since economic interdependence has steadily increased, the behavior of one or few nations can influence the world economic order much more than in the past. A high sense of responsibility is therefore necessary, Colombo said, in order to get out of the rut in which the world finds itself because of a number of erroneous policies (such as those which give priority to controlling inflation with repercussions on economic growth and employment, because of speculative policies and because of hoarding of resources and currency reserves which are often used to purchase armaments, which are dangerously increasing.

The difficulties confronting the international community are innumerable, but Colombo prefered to concentrate on only two issues, claiming that their solution can contribute to improving the general framework of development problems. The two problems are energy and ways of finding the most equitable and effective means to restore a balance between imports and exports. Colombo suggested a concrete plan of action based on the one hand, on a sufficiently substantial fund to finance the deficits of foreign accounts, giving developing countries a greater control power, and, on the other, on an energy policy which assures continuity of energy resources and safeguards producing nations' profits.

AVANTE! CITES 'FACTS' ON POLAND IN DEFENSE OF SOCIALISM

LD271331 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 21 Aug 80 p 11

[Unattributed commentary: "Poland Between Reaction's Campaign and Real Problems"]

[Text] "Gdansk" is the word which is being most frequently repeated on radio and television and in the headlines of the state-owned press and the reactionary newspapers. A target which always been sought--strikes in a socialist country--has now arisen. There is talk of political confrontation and hypotheses of repression are being put forward with the vehemence of those who ardently desire it. Every effort is being made not only to identify socialist reality with that of the capitalist system but also to assert that there is no freedom under socialism.

Between the propaganda and the reality, between reaction's campaign and the real problems experienced in Poland--problems qualitatively different from those of capitalist society, problems of socialism--and in light of this propaganda and this campaign, it is important to discern what the facts are and what is merely slander, enveloped in the silence with which once again today there is a systematic attempt to conceal the reality of socialism.

Increase in Prices

So let us consider some facts of the situation. For this reason it is important to begin at the beginning: The decision to increase the price of meat in Poland on 1 July.

1. Per capita meat consumption in Poland is twice that in our country--over 70 kg per year there. The price is approximately half the price in Portugal.

2. Despite this high meat consumption, Polish socialist society still deems it insufficient, striving to achieve a gradual increase up to 80-90 kg of meat per person per year. To this end, efforts are being made to increase meat and fodder production.

3. In the meantime, the selling price of meat on the market is below production costs, the difference being met by the state budget, with sums which could be earmarked for other purposes (between 1971 and 1979 these sums rose from 12 billion zlotys to 91.4 billion zlotys).

The policy pursued thus reflects, on the one hand, Poland's great concern--as is characteristic of a socialist society--with feeding the population, and, at the same time, both some real difficulties, connected with economic shortcomings and weather problems, and the impact of the increase in prices in the capitalist world, with which trade is increasing.

Problems...

The idea that socialist society is devoid of problems does not bear any relation to practical reality nor to Marxist-Leninist theory itself. The fact is that qualitatively different problems are encountered.

An increase in meat prices under capitalism has a great deal to do with the profits pocketed by middlemen: An increase in prices under socialism means that the central economic support on the part of the state has to be devoted to other sectors, with greater benefit for the national economy, and, as such, for the entire people. Understanding this curcial difference is not always easy and required in particular an extensive campaign of elucidation.

Moreover, the economic problems confronting Poland are not confined to the issue of prices. And they are not being evaded by Poland's people and leaders. There is constant talk of the need to reduce consumption of raw materials, shortcomings in supply, low efficiency in the running of some enterprises, lengthy delays in obtaining homes, difficulties in achieving adequate work discipline, plans not fully implemented, particularly in the countryside, and an irregular rate of production--problems which are normal in building a developing socialist society and which are accompanied by others stemming from the crisis of capitalism: an increase in the prices of energy and raw materials and difficulties in exports in view of the crisis developing in capitalist society.

But none of these problems is insoluble. None of these problems has to do with the exploitation of labor to secure individual profits.

...And Successes

We began with the problems precisely because the successes are the keynote and because it is important to realize whom these successes benefit--the crucial difference between socialism and capitalism--and what creates the close link between what is produced and what is earned, as is the case under socialism.

Some 36 years ago, Poland's national per capita income was about four times lower than that of the West European countries. As a result of its development, Poland now ranks 10th in the world. In 1979 the value of its industrial output was 31 times greater than in 1936. In comparison with the FRG, France, Britain and Italy, the average output of electricity increased from 43 percent in 1950 to 72 percent in 1978, that of fuel from 145 percent to 301 percent, that of steel from 45 percent to 114 percent and that of cement from 56 percent to 120 percent--figures which, as is clear, are only possible under socialism [as published].

But this difference is even clearer and more significant with respect to the population's living conditions. In comparison with 1970, average real earnings have increased by about 50 percent and the sum earmarked for social benefits has increased 3.5 times. The population's needs in monochrome television sets, radios, refrigerators and various electrical domestic appliances are regarded as fully met. Between 1976 and 1979, industrial output increased by 30 percent, while output in light industry increased by over 34 percent. The construction of homes--one of the central problems of socialism's social policy--exceeded the number of marriages, as is essential in order to completely resolve the housing problem, if possible, by the end of the decade.

It is not by chance that FRG Chancellor Schmidt himself publicly acknowledges that the economic problems confronting Poland are more the outcome of world economic pressures than of the economic policy pursued in the country.

Socialism's Response

The response of the Polish Government and of the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] to the recent events--despite the exploitation and the pressures on the part of the reactionary forces at the international level--has been dialogue and careful study of the problems involved, while stressing at the same time the antisocial nature which the strike movement is assuming in this instance and the fact that socialism is the basis of the very building of present-day free and independent Poland.

In his recent radio and television address, PZPR Secretary General Comrade Gierek stated:

"It is difficult at this moment to broach all the causes which underlie the present economic problems and which have caused social discontent. However, I wish to state in all sincerity: We are aware that, together with many objective factors, mistakes made in economic policy have played an important role. In many sectors practice has deviated from the principles laid down by the party in December. We did not notice this in time and we did not succeed in tackling it effectively. But the strikes will improve nothing. Rather, they will increase the difficulties."

Socialism does not fear self-criticism and even bases its constant progress on it. But it has its own ways of surmounting difficulties, which have nothing to do with the methods of struggle used under capitalism.

What is happening in Poland, like the propaganda offensive of reaction which is latching on to this, forms part of the great world class struggle from which socialism will inevitably emerge victorious. The Polish people will be able to surmount their present difficulties and advance resolutely in building developed socialism.

Democratic Alliance Concerned About Price of Beef...in Poland

It is not difficult to discern the aims underlying the prominence given to the events in Poland, together with the ignorance of the situation in that country which is being encouraged. And this is understandable. The Portuguese Government is involved through its prime minister in a scandal which would have led to the resignation of any leader in a country of capitalist Europe. The Portuguese Government is wreaking the destruction of the agrarian reform, stealing land, livestock and machinery, driving many hundreds of agricultural workers into unemployment, brutally repressing protest demonstrations, even killing people, and subjecting areas of the Alentejo to a veritable situation of occupation by militarized forces. The Portuguese Government is causing mass dismissals in ITT [Inspectorate General of Labor Courts], while engaging in an anticonstitutional policy of handing back enterprises to employers. The Portuguese Government is making our people's living conditions worse every day. The Portuguese Government is arrogantly disregarding the demands put forward at demonstrations of hundreds of thousands of people.

It is natural that the Portuguese Government and the forces supporting it should be more concerned about the price of beef in Poland, about strike movements of several tens of thousands of Poles and about marginal demands for trade union pluralism--a policy, moreover, whose repercussions and sponsors are well known here--than about the immense problems which are being experienced in our country. Imperialism's reasons and its involvement in this campaign present no mystery, because in fact it is very important to distract attention from increasing inflation, unstoppable unemployment, repressive methods and the arms race. And it is important, above all, to deprive the working masses of a historical perspective, distort some facts and, in particular, conceal others.

TRADE UNION, CP CHIEFS COMMENT ON POLISH STRIKES

[Text] Danish Trade Union Chairman Thomas Nielsen, on behalf of his 1.2 million Danish members, has called on the Polish Government to secure democratic rights for the striking workers in Poland.

"The Danish Trades Union Federation expresses on behalf of its over 1.2 million members its solidarity with the Polish workers' courageous struggle to assure their living standards and to achieve better working and living conditions," the Trades Union Federation's statement says.

"Workers in all countries, including Poland, have the right to form representative and free trade unions, which can effectively promote the workers' interests in accordance with the conventions of the ILO," Thomas Nielsen writes.

The Trade Union Federation's statement has not won unconditional support from Danish Communists.

Danish Communist Party Chairman Joergen Jensen told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE:

"No one has asked me to give my views on the declaration. If they had, I would have been able to approve everything except the passage containing the Trade Union Federation's call to the Polish Government to negotiate with the workers. Thomas is in no position to make statements on such a matter. According to press reports there are 120,000 workers carrying out what in Denmark is called an illegal strike, and Thomas Nielsen has never supported what he calls an illegal strike. But I agree that there should be negotiatinns to reach an agreement."

[Question] Does the Danish Communist Party consider the strikes in Poland to be illegal?

[Answer] No, I do not. I am only saying that for Thomas Nielsen this sort of strike has always been considered illegal and contrary to agreements. For this reason he has no right to make statements on the matter.

I do not want to explain away the fact that there are problems in Poland, and there must be misunderstandings and mistakes as well. But it is only 120,000 workers out of 16 million and it is a case of distorting proportions so as to turn this into some big affair. Try comparing it with the many strikes we have and have had in Denmark," Joergen Jensen said.

PARTY PAPERS DISCUSS SITUATION IN POLAND

Coalition Paper AAMULEHTI

LD2611236 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0920 GMT 26 Aug 80

[From the press review]

[Text] The National Coalition Party paper AAMULEHTI carries an article headlined "Purge."

The people have given a vote of no confidence to the Polish rulers. As a consequence, some of them had to go. Among those dismissed are the premier, the foreign minister, the propaganda chief and the highest trade union leadership. This was a convenient way to name these responsible for a policy which 2 months ago triggered off a strike wave in the country. But is this enough? AAMULEHTI asks.

Party leader Edward Gierek, the man who indisputably is, in the first place, responsible for the faulty politics of the 1970's, speaks about the moral rebirth of the nation and promises the citizens more power in the management of things. He even goes so far as to offer the workers secret and free trade union elections. But as the workers have learned after bitter experience not to trust in mere verbal promises, we have to ask the key question: How can a far-reaching reform be possible without rocking the very foundations of the system? AAMULEHTI points out. So far it is not clear what the trade union movement would be like as outlined by Gierek. Could it really look after the interests of the workers in an independent manner? In the opinion of AAMULEHTI, at least in the theory of Marxism-Leninism there is no place for a free trade union movement of this kind. The whole idea is impossible for workers should have no need to act against themselves.

But something must be done, because the strikes have shown that the people no longer trust their rulers. A reshuffled Politburo should be ready at least to make fresh winds blow in the powerful bureaucracy of the trade union system. Whether this will quieten the masses is another matter. But it is possible that the chances of a compromise have increased, even if this was not clearly evident on Monday. This article about the situation in Poland is carried in AAMULEHTI.

Communist Paper KANSAN UUTISET

LD261224 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0920 GMT 26 Aug 80

[From the press review]

[Text] The Communist and people's democratic paper KANSAN UUTISET writes as follows.

The strike wave which has shaken Poland for several weeks has grown from day to day into a more serious political crisis. When trying to settle it, the Central Committee of the Polish United Workers Party carried out at the turn of week quite considerable changes in the party leadership, in the government of the country and in the leaderships of other sectors. KANSAN UUTISET goes on to note that in capitalist countries the question concerning the trade union movement has become an essential problem in connection with strike movements. It is being asked continuously how it is possible for the trade union movement to lose much of its original character and be unable to act in the circumstances of a serious crisis which tries the strength of the whole society as a workers' interest organization, but remain an outsider.

Gierek's speech includes a promise concerning trade union reform, a new trade unions act and the election of new trade union movement officials which is to be organized immediately. In the opinion of KANSAN UUTISET, it is clear that above all the question concerning the character of the trade union movement and its task in socialist countries is apt to arouse an extensive international dialogue.

UNION FEDERATION LEADER EXPOUNDS ON POLAND STATEMENT

LD261553 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 23 Aug 80 p 8

[Text] "The statement from the Scandinavian Trade Union Coordination Organization (NFS) on the situation in Poland is intended to help the Poles to extricate themselves from the situation they have gotten into--without any outside interference--in a peaceful and constructive manner," Norwegian Trade Union Federational International Secretary Kaare Sandegren told AFTENPOSTEN.

[Question] Why has the Norwegian Trade Union Federation been so careful with its statements on the situation in Poland?

[Answer] Until the joint Scandinavian statement came, there have been almost no commentaries on the situation from the trade union federation at all. The advantage in waiting until the resolution from the NFS--which comprises the Trade Union Federations of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, plus the public servants' organizations in Denmark, Finland, and Sweden--is that such a joint statement carries much more weight than a Norwegian statement alone, Sandegren pointed out. We also have been very attentive to the problem of the effect foreign statements can have, nevertheless the Scandinavian resolution is clear enough. "The NFS expresses its support for the Polish work and their trade union demands" is really fairly strong.

Sandegren also pointed to the passage in the resolution which says that "Poland has signed and ratified the ILO conventions on free trade union organizations. In the present situation the NFS expects the decisionmaking bodies and the trade union organizations in Poland to live up to the commitments contained in the ILO conventions." "I think it is worth noting that the Polish Trade Union Federation adopted a resolution a few days ago on the softening of the country's trade union," Sandegren pointed out.

[Question] The Polish workers' demands for free trade union organizations may set off certain historical echoes within the ranks of the trade union movement? What has been the reaction from the Trade Union Federation members to events in Poland?

[Answer] There can be no doubt that the many reactions within the trade union federation show that considerable sympathy with and involvement in the Polish workers' demands is on the move, but many people also express their fear and anxiety that the Poles will go further than is possible given their circumstances.

[Question] You are thinking of the possibility of a Soviet intervention?

[Answer] What we fear is that the situation will polarize to the extent that the Polish workers will end up with nothing. We are concerned, but we hope that the Polish authorities will not retaliate with the use of force against the strikers.

The Trade Union Federation international secretary added that the Scandinavian coordination organization has not considered the question of sending a representative to Poland. It is, however, clear that the Norwegian Trade Union Federation will keep in continuous contact with the Foreign Ministry on the matter. Sandegren also thought that it would be natural for the matter to be touched on at a meeting of the Trade Union Federation Secretariat this coming Monday.

COMMUNIST LEFT PARTY EXPRESSES SUPPORT FOR POLISH WORKERS

LD271431 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 23 Aug 80 p 6

[Excerpts] The members of the Communist Left Party support the Polish workers' demands. Party Chairman Lars Werner announced this after the Communist Left Party Central Committee meeting on Friday. In a statement, the party said that the present negotiations with the strikers must be completed. "Free and autonomous trade union movement, independent of both the party apparatus and the authorities, and the free right to strike are inalienable rights for the workers," Lars Werner said at a press conference on Friday. "We in Sweden also back this demand." In their statement the Communist Left Party Central Committee said that it was relying on the announcements from Poland's United Workers Party that no force would be used against the strikers. A strong and democratic trade union movement must play a central role in the development of a socialist pattern, the Central Committee said.

SPOKESMAN SEPARATES NATO ISSUE FROM JOINT EXERCISES

AT271305 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 27 Aug 80 p 10

[Text] In reply to PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou's statement in connection with the holding of exercises by Greek military units and a unit of U.S. paratroops in the area of Macedonia, the government spokesman stated the following yesterday:

"As has been repeatedly stressed, the holding of multinational exercises affords the opportunity to the Greek Armed Forces to improve their military training and learn new developments in military techniques. The holding of these exercises does not have the slightest connection with the negotiations that are going on for Greece's return to the NATO military wing. Also, they do not involve the Balkan countries with which Greece maintains very friendly relations. After all, our Balkan neighbors also hold military exercises on their territories, in fact, sometimes with the participation of units of the Soviet Armed Forces; and no one interprets this as being directed against Greece."

EC GRANTS FUNDS FOR ECONOMIC STUDIES OF EXPORTS, MINERALS

[Text] Minister for EEC Affairs Kondoyioryis said yesterday that EEC will grant Greece 11 million dollars to be used for carrying out of the following studies:

Study for the development of Greek exports to the Arab countries; study to organize the ports that link Europe, Greece and Middle-East; two studies for the exploration of sulphurous ores at the Thassos, Halkidiki and Kerdhilion areas; a technoeconomic study for the exploration of specific ores.

AGRICULTURE MINISTRY PROPOSES BARTER WITH EAST BLOC COUNTRIES

AT231340 Athens I AVYI in Greek 23 Aug 80 p 5

[Text] Minister of Agriculture A. Kanellopoulos and Minister of Commerce S. Dhimas announced that tobacco and cereals will be bartered for agricultural implements and supplies from countries of Eastern Europe.

For this reason, commercial representatives of the Soviet Union, East Germany, Hungary, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Poland and Romania were called to the Ministry of Agriculture yesterday. A proposal was made to them for the barter of 60,000 tons of tobacco, 200,000 tons of soft wheat and 10,000 tons of hard wheat for agricultural implements, supplies and livestock for reproduction. As announced by the Ministry of Agriculture, the representatives of the above mentioned countries showed great interest in the proposal and agreed to further promote the barter.

NO-CONFIDENCE MOTION AGAINST ANDROSCH DEFEATED

[Excerpt] The Nationalrat yesterday held a special session to discuss the Vienna General Hospital affair. The session had been demanded by the Austrian People's Party [OeVP] and had been announced long in advance. At this session the OeVP submitted an urgent inquiry to the chancellor asking him to dismiss the vice chancellor [Hannes Androsch]. Moreover, the OeVP faction presented a motion of no confidence against the Finance Minister [Androsch] which, however, was not supported by the Austrian Freedom Party [FPOe]. The FPOe in turn presented a motion of no confidence against the entire cabinet. Both motions were defeated by a majority vote.

In a comprehensive debate Finance Minister Androsch refuted the charges of the opposition. The speakers of the government party [Austrian Socialist Party (SPOe)], primarily SPOe floor leader Fischer, called for compliance with the constitutional principle that no one must be condemned before his guilt has been established.

PEACE MOVEMENT CABLES SUPPORT TO GDANSK STRIKERS

LD261656 Brussels Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Text] The national office of the Belgian Christian Peace Movement has just sent a telegram of solidarity to the strikers at the Gdansk mineworks. [as heard]. In the telegram it salutes the courageous struggle of the striking workers for a true political and trade union democracy. The Christian Peace Movement has also sent a telegram to Edward Gierek asking him to avoid any recourse to force in the face of the legitimate demands of the workers. It also demands the release of the strikers and dissidents who were arrested recently. In conclusion the Christian Peace Movement considers the strike in this conflict fundamental for the European left. It hopes that broad popular support around this conflict will gather in Belgium.

GOVERNMENT REPORTEDLY TO ANNOUNCE EMBASSY MOVE TO TEL AVIV

NC260715 Paris AFP in English 0710 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Text] The Hague, 26 Aug (AFP)--The Netherlands is to move its embassy from Jerusalem to Tel Aviv, official sources said here today. They added that the official announcement would be made later today. The move follows the Israeli parliament decision to declare an undivided Jerusalem the country's "eternal" capital.

Last week the United Nations Security Council approved a resolution condemning the Israeli decision and calling on countries to remove their missions from Jerusalem. Arab countries have threatened to boycott states maintaining missions in the holy city. The Netherlands was the only European country to have its embassy there.

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON INTER-GERMAN, FOREIGN AFFAIRS

DW290733 Munich ARD Television Network in German 1815 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Interview of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn by Detmar Cramer of the West Berlin Rias Network, Klaus Dreher of the Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG, Matthias Waldon of the Springer Publishing House, and moderator Rudolf Muehlfenzl of the Munich ARD Television Network--live or recorded]

[Excerpts] [Muehlfenzl introduction] The inter-German summit meeting between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the chairman of the GDR State Council, Erich Honecker, originally scheduled for today did not take place. What are the reasons. Does this concellation possibly mark the beginning of a hardening in inter-German relations? Is it the beginning of a new crisis in the relations between East and West? Or does it spell the end of detente policy in Europe? The GDR leadership has called off such planned meetings twice; this time it was you, the German chancellor, who did so. What made you do it, and what makes this cancellation so significant?

[Schmidt] During your introductory remarks for this discussion you just used the term summit meeting. Let me say from the very outset that I cannot stand that term. Nor do I like it as a designation for the world economic conferences of the heads of state and government of the seven most important industrial countries of the world who gather once a year.

The idea that cropped up between myself and Mr Honecker at the end of last year was that we should have a calm heart-to-heart talk about two major issues: first, about the general international, world-political situation which after all cannot leave either the GDR or us, the Federal Republic of Germany, untouched, and secondly, about the future of inter-German relations.

You just raised the question whether the present cancellation of the meeting that had been planned for this week represents a crisis in inter-German relations. The answer clearly and unequivocally is no, not at all. Rather the general circumstances in Europe in my view did not seem to warrant a meeting of the two top representatives of the two German states--the two states are affiliated with two different alliance systems--that would be useful with respect to these two major issues in international and inter-German relations. You recalled that Mr Honecker in the spring of this year asked for a postponement on his part as we had a fixed date for a meeting before. At that time, too it was an event outside the GDR and outside the Federal Republic of Germany, an event in Afghanistan to be exact, which at the time made the overall situation appear unfavorable to him, and I agreed.

No, this is not a crisis of inter-German relations, nor is it a crisis of German policy toward Eastern Europe or toward the Soviet Union, or of German Ostpolitik at large; it rather is the expression of the concern shared everywhere in Europe--and beyond that in other parts of the world--about the developments in a third country which all of us are watching with attention and great internal sympathy. And I might say from the very outset that I shall be very reserved with any comment on that development tonight as well.

[Dreher] You say it is not a crisis, but it is an aggravation nevertheless. You justify it with the general situation in Europe. I think this is a rather vague way of putting it. The general situation in Europe, after all, hardly was the reason for your cancellation of the meeting. Wasn't it true that the long-term developments already suggested to people with commonsense that nothing decisive could be attained for the people in Germany during the talks between you and Mr Honecker?

[Schmidt] The last part is not correct. If, as I assume, the meeting will be held under a changed situation in Eastern Europe I am positive that something will come out of it for the people in our part of the fatherland and in the eastern part of the fatherland, though originally it was not intended to make concrete agreements in this occasion, the purpose rather having been to get negotiations going on these issues. I do not doubt that something will come out of it for the people. But it is true indeed--and I must insist on this--that the general situation made me do it. I made up my mind Thursday night because I could not help but gain the specific impression that events might occur in another country which might considerably curtail the freedom of talk, the leeway of action, of those intending to get together at Werbellinsee. I did not wish to run that risk. What I was interested in was not a spectacular meeting; I would have preferred it to be in February as originally planned. What rather mattered to me was to attain an extra bit of understanding, and this would have been extremely aggravated at this time, to say the least. We cannot know whether it would not have been decisively aggravated.

[Walden] You are referring to the contingencies of the general situation. When you returned from Belgrade you said that you had come to terms with Honecker that we--the two of you--will not be dragged into that matter. What you meant was the Afghanistan crisis. In the case of the developments in Poland it turned out that both of you could not stay aloof. When you returned from Belgrade it sounded as if you hoped for an inter-German detente oasis which would be largely independent of what has already transpired in the way of terrible events. Does what keep saying, namely that the chances and risks of inter-German detente depend on the international climate, still hold true? And this international climate is, after all, absolutely miserable. So if they depended on it they would be bound to be bad.

[Schmidt] The international situation is not good. It has been bad since the end of last year, and I assume that it will continue to be difficult throughout 1980, perhaps even more difficult in 1981. This applies to the smouldering conflict over the U.S. hostages in Tehran which has disappeared from the newspaper headlines for the moment but which continues to represent a highly dangerous situations; this applies to the military intervention of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan which may well turn into a highly dangerous hotbed of critical aggravation; this applies to the intensification in the relations between Israel and its neighbor states; this also applies to the danger of a deepening of the arms race between West and East should SALT II fail for good, should the negotiations on the limitation of medium-range weapons, offered to the Soviet Union by the North Atlantic Council in December last year and accepted in principle by the Soviet side finally on the occasion of my and Mr Genscher's visit to the Soviet Union, fail to materialize. I agree with you, of course, that all this has a bearing on the relations of individual states in East and West and also on the relations of the two German states. Now the Polish crisis with its potential of spreading has been added.

But you quoted incorrectly when you said that Honecker and I had advocated the view in Belgrade, where we had met on the occasion of the impressive funeral ceremony for Tito, that the two of us should not allow ourselves to be dragged into the whole thing. This will not work. Both of us are partners to our respective alliance system; and it goes without saying that we are a party in matters of Afghanistan. Not many states jointly with the United States of America for this reason did not participate in the Olympic games. Apart from the Federal Republic and Norway there were not many more in all of Europe. In such matters we are a party indeed. But it was important to me in Belgrade--as well as elsewhere at the time, including in Venice--to say, and to say jointly with the French president, Giscard d'Estaing, that if the world is in such a state of tension as I again recalled a short while ago, then it is necessary for God's sake to talk with each other, that the great powers in particular must talk with each other. Both of us insisted on this.

And I am pretty sure that not only Honecker but also others in Eastern Europe are guided by the same instinct even though they have not spelled it out so plainly in public. It was important to us to achieve that the great powers--Moscow and Washington--would not spoil their dialogue terms. And we did score success in this respect.

[Cramer] Doesn't the aggravated situation internationally suggest that the canceled visit to the GDR should not be postponed for too long but that it should take place before the end of this year, if possible? Perhaps the entire stage setting might then be kept a bit smaller. I think it had burst at the seams at this time, the Germans having grown too big. Wouldn't it be best for you to go there with your advisers for a private talk, without the big delegation that had been planned for this visit, and as soon as possible?

[Schmidt] I, too, am all for having it as soon as possible, but we cannot decide or make arrangements by unilateral decisionmaking on the options offered by the world and European situations. I believe you are right in advocating the view that the stage setting was a bit large. Quite a few people had worked on this and put in their penny's worth. If I recall what sort of luggage had been compiled in the domestic discussion alone in the way of fantastic suggestions and minimum demands, I can say that this alone would have been enough to negotiate on for weeks. I believe that you are right in saying that this meeting had been very heavily loaded with freight--which was also attributable to the silly season in the summer gap. Maybe this can be avoided next time. But this is not up to the government, this is also somewhat up to the political factors in both countries; it hinges on the media.

[Muehlfenzl] Didn't certain statements by Honecker help build up a barrier, utterances which bar farther-reaching humanitarian improvements such as options in tourist travel from the outset? Do you have any chance at all to gain anything in this respect?

[Schmidt] No, I don't see it that way. I believe that what you are referring to is an interview which Erich Honecker granted to a British publisher or journalist in early July, on 3, 4, or 5 July. In that interview he advocated the view which we have known for years and which the GDR leadership has been advocating for years, namely that they want us to recognize a special GDR citizenship. They have been advocating this view all along. And we have been advocating all along--and want to and must do so--the position which our federal constitutional court in Karlsruhe has expressly forged once again: We solely recognize a common German citizenship. The GDR will continue advocating its view, we will keep advocating ours. This has been the case since the basic treaty was concluded nearly a decade ago.

Nevertheless, a multitude of improvements has been initiated in this decade despite these two fundamentally divergent positions. I am not referring to the doubling and nearly tripling of the economic exchange; I am not even referring to the easing just in the relations with Berlin. I am referring above all to the improvements for the people in the two German states. And if we talk about people we should perhaps say that probably nobody was more disappointed about the present cancellation than many GDR citizens. And this bothers me very much. For this reason I agree with Mr Cramer that this meeting must be held as soon as possible. But we must be careful lest people over here, the politicians, the journalists, as well as the GDR citizens over there build up illusions about the possible results of such a meeting.

[Walden] The meetings with Gierek and Honecker did not get off to a lucky start. This makes the assumption obvious, of course, that until a short while ago you definitely had made wrong predictions, held erroneous expectations, and projected too wide a horizon for expectations. [Walden quotes passages from FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU interview with Schmidt]

But I intended to ask you something else. Your predecessor, Willy Brandt, has always maintained that his detente policy has made peace safer. And you said in view of the Afghanistan invasion that you are reminded of the era prior to the outbreak of World War I. Naturally this was taken as a public contradiction. Can you dissolve the contradiction here and now?

[Schmidt] To begin with I would like to stress once again that the phase of lack of dialogue between Washington and Moscow has been overcome, a phase that had been dominant since the beginning of the year. I consider this, which has made the generally tense world situation discussed a while ago look a bit more friendly, as highly important indeed. The dialogue is continuing. You have read that U.S. Secretary of State Muskie and our Foreign Minister Genscher a few days ago in Washington stated that the West will react to the Soviet readiness to negotiate on the medium-range weapons which was declared on 1 July. A meeting will also take place between Muskie and Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko. I really think this shows great progress. If they were not to talk with each other the world situation surely would become highly dangerous. And even in August 1914 some parties still were talking with each other, though not all governments of the time.

You mentioned erroneous expectations on my part. Some of this is true, some not. I must admit that I failed to foresee the developments in Poland and their potential international effects. If you foresaw them, then you were wiser than I. I did not foresee them. Nor do I see any connection between the developments there and Afghanistan or with the hostage crisis or with the Palestinian crisis, or with the question concerning the arms race or arms control. This situation emerged from other causes. We can understand it today much better than we could have foreseen it.

Finally you asked whether there is a contradiction in what Willy Brandt has said, namely that the treaty policy pursued by the social-liberal coalition toward the states of Eastern Europe, eastern central Europe, has made peace safer, and the realization that a crisis such as the military invasion in Afghanistan can jeopardize world peace. This is not a contradiction, for what Brandt meant was that the treaty policy, the policy of wanting to get along between Germans and their neighbors, has made peace in Europe safer. Naturally this has no effect on other parts of the world, not necessarily, but the situation in earlier decades was such indeed that it was well possible for the conflict situation in Europe to lead to war. In this context it is very interesting to note that if the Communist chairman of the State Council of the German Democratic Republic, Erich Honecker, were sitting here in my place, he might say what I am about to say, namely that today we feel sure that no war will emanate from German soil. This was not so certain during the last decade and in the one before that. To that extent Brandt is right. Something positive has been contributed to the safeguarding of peace in Europe. But Europe alone, let alone the Federal Republic of Germany alone with its treaty partners, does not have the final say about world peace on the whole.

[Walden] Did you really believe 10 years ago that peace in Europe was threatened by an impending danger of war? Isn't this putting out a fire that did not ignite? It was equally absurd 10 years ago as it is today that war could emanate from German territory.

[Schmidt] As regards 10 years ago, I would agree with you, but if you would say 20 years ago, I would like to contradict you sharply. I remind you of August 1961, and since you live in Berlin and since you have experienced this, Mr Walden, you will remember how much fear you had then.

[Walden] I never considered there to be a danger of war.

[Schmidt] Well, you may have been more realistic. At any rate it has not developed into a war, thank God, but the danger was not small. That was just one of the crises. I remind you of the end of the fifties with the Khrushchev ultimatum vis-a-vis Berlin. There have been quite a few situations containing the danger of war. And may I remind you with how much concern we all observed in 1968 the military invasion of the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact states in Czechoslovakia. We feared that matters could have developed more negatively then they have for the Czechs and Slovaks. The danger of war has existed at various times in Europe.

[Muehlfenzl] Mr Federal Chancellor, the remark about the danger of war that could emanate from the Germans or from German territory was made by Mr Honecker some time in the past weeks. Assuming that in case of and aggravation of a certain situation in Poland GDR troops could march in, wouldn't that be a situation containing the danger of war?

[Cramer] May I intervene by asking whether a misunderstanding exists in this country inasfar as the people believe that peace is something static and Ostpolitik since 1970 is basically defensive, a phase in the policy of accepting existing facts. Basically, however, it has had a strong political offensive element which has not been recognized everywhere. One could almost say that the current situation in Poland is a consequence of this policy because external pressure has been eliminated, because border problems have been settled or put aside. This is no problem any more for the Poles, but it has been a considerable problem in this country. The Poles now have some internal freedom and they can take a bit more care of their own problems. Peace has become more secure that way, I would say, but also more complicated. That is clear, but that was intended.

[Schmidt] May I briefly comment on Mr Muehlfenzl's remark before Mr Cramer spoke, very briefly. I do not see such a danger at present. I very much hope, and I believe this applies to all of us here regardless from what political camp we come, that the conflicts in Poland can be solved solely by the Poles themselves. I see very clearly that the Polish leadership is trying to avoid the use of force; and I see equally clearly that the striking workers at the Lenin Shipyard in Danzig and in the three parts of the city of Danzig as well as in Zoppot and Gdingen are trying very hard not to provoke the use of force. I consider this most important.

Please excuse the fact that I am not commenting more extensively on your remark, but I agree indeed with the American President. We fully agree, as Mr Muskie and Mr Genscher clearly stated 2 days ago, that we from the West should not interfere at present in the domestic political process in the People's Republic of Poland. That can only fail. We really must apply to ourselves the principle of noninterference we have agreed to. Beyond that we are prepared to help. We are as prepared to help as the United States.

I have just seen tonight on the news, shortly before we started here, that CDU Chairman Kohl demands that the federal chancellor eventually comment on developments in Poland. This is exatly what the federal chancellor will not do and cannot do. If Mr Kohl repeatedly says that we ought to cooperate more closely with the United States, he should inform himself with regard to that issue. He will find that the government in Bonn and the U.S. Federal Government in Washington maintain the same approach. It ought to remain as it is.

Examples do exist in this respect. In the summer, in June and July 1968 when the Prague spring was in danger--the invasion was in August--the then CDU Federal Chancellor Kiesinger stated several times in public that we should not and could not comment on that and that we must maintain restraint. Kiesinger was absolutely right. Kohl is wrong.

[Dreher] I believe that it is understood that the federal chancellor does not want to interfere in this matter. I ask myself, however--I do not want to say that the federal chancellor has interfered too much--whether a certain danger exists that the small powers, in quotation marks, or the medium-size powers such as the Federal Republic and maybe France, are somewhat overrating the role they play? I cannot believe that they pulled the big powers to the negotiation table who would not have negotiated with each other, otherwise. Isn't it true that what is called the Schmidt doctrine in the meantime, namely a state of security on the basis of a military balance, is not at all being accepted by the two big powers? They do not want that. The American presidential candidate Reagan has said America must become the strongest power. President Carter answered immediately: We will see to it that we will remain the strongest power. The Soviets obviously strive for superiority. The question is whether one does not overrate oneself?

[Schmidt] I believe that the states of a medium stature, you named France and Germany--France has more stature in this respect than we have. France has a permanent seat in the Security Council with a veto power; France is a guarantee power for Berlin; most of all France is itself a military nuclear power and it intends to modernize its military nuclear armament--so France carries somewhat more weight in world politics than we do. Our economic significance is greater, somewhat greater, that is maybe true. But such medium-size states carry considerable weight, Mr Dreher, particularly if they pull on the same rope. Cooperation between Paris and Bonn in this world crisis, cooperation from the very beginning, naturally carries considerable weight with regard to the two world powers as well. We are not alone, we could pull along the whole European Community in matters of foreign political cooperation.

You have asked skeptically about the role of the balance policy. You said that some voices in America--you pointed out one politician in particular--do not accept the idea of a balance; you said that the Soviet Union possibly does not either. I want to say one thing quite clearly in this context: What is generally called detente policy--it is by the way a word that was used internationally long before the social-liberal coalition came about, Federal Chancellor Kiesinger, whom I have mentioned before, used it frequently--what is generally called detente policy can work only on the basis of a maintained balance between both power blocs, particularly, but not only, on a military balance. Without a military balance between the West and the East, however, it is hard to imagine that there could be a policy of cooperation with the East--negotiations, a give-and-take policy. If the balance is destroyed, all that will begin to slide.

The Federal Republic of Germany with the medium weight we carry-such as France--belongs to the Western scale of that balance; otherwise the Western scale would be too light and the balance would tilt. We must maintain our weight in the Western scale. We are doing this. We do this through our Bundeswehr, for example, or the taxpayers money for the advantage of the allies who need temporary help. We do this in many ways.

If there is somebody in the world who believes that the idea of a balance is wrong, I am unable to follow their thinking. I tell you this quite clearly. As long as I carry some political responsibility in our state, we will stick with the balance policy, and we will always add our share to the Western scale so as to maintain the balance. On the basis of a balance one can agree with the other side, one can conclude treaties, negotiate, maintain trade relations and help each other. Most of all one can conclude treaties on the basis of a balance on a mutual limitation and decrease of armament, so that the balance is maintained on a somewhat lower level. I will stick with that regardless of what other capitals might think about it.

I would like to add one more word on Mr Cramer's remark. I think you are right, Mr Cramer.

You said that the treaties of the Federal Republic of Germany are being considered in too static a way, as if a matter has been settled once a treaty has been signed, as if the matter then has been shelved and finished. That is of course nonsense. One will realize immediately that this is nonsense, although the Germans tend to such a static attitude with regard to legal acts. The Germans--some Germans--generally tend to view German Foreign policy as if it were some sort of a lawyer's policy. This becomes quite clear if one takes into consideration that the North Atlantic Treaty, for example, would be of no significance any more if it had not been imbued with new life, contents and decisions over more than a quarter of a century in line with the changing situation. That applies to every treaty, with regard to relations with our Eastern neighbors as well. The signing of a treaty does not solve every problem for the next 25 years, but--and I agree with you, Mr Cramer, if you meant this--it must be taken care of every day and every year. I always like to say: One must take care of peace every day, it cannot be settled once and for all with a treaty.

[Walden] May I return to what you have said about noninterference in Poland. I do not want to do this on a large scale because every responsible and serious person will realize that restraint is called for, carefulness, circumspection and consideration. Consideration not with regard to the Warsaw government but for the people involved. I just want to ask whether that is not the main dilemma of every Western and particularly German detente policy and Ostpolitik. Naturally you are forced to direct this policy to address the East bloc countries, but I assume that you mean the people. In Poland, however, we see again the great contrast between such a government and the people. And you must keep quiet. You have repeatedly stressed your friendly relations with Gierek. It is obviously more difficult for the Polish workers, for they might fail completely in establishing friendly relations with this man, or with every other man of this sort.

Isn't the contradiction between these governments and the people pose a conflict for you? I do not even expect you to nod your head, but journalists can say more than politicians. I take it for granted that your heart beats for the Polish workers who are striving for freedom. But you may not say that, for the sake of the workers or for other reasons. Isn't that contradiction a straitjacket, one that is always there and that erupts as dramatically as it does now, which limits detente policy necessarily or horribly and which in the end could destroy the chances of success?

[Schmidt] I really cannot accept the last sentence, namely that this would destroy the chances of success. But naturally I can say that I am on the side of freedom-loving people everywhere in the world. I have no sympathy for communist doctrines, the communist compulsory economy and communist ideologies, none at all. It does not look as if I could develop such sympathies the rest of my life. But whoever is to rule in Warsaw and whenever that may be--when we begain with the Ostpolitik of the social-liberal coalition it was Mr Gomulka and later on Mr Gierek: None of these persons will rule forever--you are right, it is actually a matter of settling relations between the people. But the people are represented by their states, by their governments. It is better if one manages to talk to other governments in a friendly tone, than to speak to each other in the tone of polemic disputes. That is true not only with a view to the East.

I was defense minister of our state when I met representatives of another state in the councils of the North Atlantic alliance, of a military dictatorship, Portugal. Naturally we did not yell at each other or demonstrate to each other how little we thought of the social or state systems of the alliance partner or neighbor. We much rather tried to discuss the problems with each other in a friendly tone. Thank God that is over. Portugal is a democracy today like Spain. And I am very proud that we could contribute something to this from Germany.

Greece is also a democracy. It had been a military dictatorship in the North Atlantic alliance. One tried in this case also to talk to each other in a friendly way and not to kick each other in the shinbones.

But you are right with your assumption: I feel like everybody else here in Germany and in many other countries of the world. Our sympathies are on the side of those who want to have more freedom. Unfortunately we cannot say what my friend Giscard d'Estaing said 2 days ago. He said: First, we, the French, will not interfere in the Polish process. He is quite right, we can say that also.

Second, he said: We, the French, have been connected with the Poles through generations of a common history. Unfortunately we cannot say that. We Germans have taken part in earlier generations in the division of Poland. The last division agreed between Hitler and Stalin was shortly before the breakout of World War II. We must say that we want to achieve goodneighborly relations with our Polish neighbor people, relations which later on can maybe develop into friendship. That must be true regardless whether Social Democrats, Free Democrats or maybe someday Christian Democrats rule in Bonn--not necessarily on 5 October. It must be true regardless whether this or that or the other rules in Warsaw. It must come from both sides. As regards Mr Gierek, I had the firm impression that he meant it exactly like this--good neighborhood.

[Walden] Yes, but Mr Federal Chancellor, do you really mean what you said now, that the Polish people are represented by their present government? I just want to say what you have added--German guilt--is it so that due to German guilt the German people have a government which now represents them?

[Schmidt] That brings me too close to the danger of the German government chief interfering in the internal affairs of another state. We have agreed not to interfere. What we say here is also being seen and heard in other places such as Poland. I am firmly convinced that in no state of the world can the people be truly represented by the existence and rule of just one political party, while the others have nothing much to say.

[Muehlfenzl] Mr Federal Chancellor, may I lead to another field which will not be so dangerous and where an answer might possibly be given in connection with Poland. It is a basic problem, I must admit: Does it really make sense according to our experience gained in past years to give credits with good conditions running into the billions to East bloc states--I do not particularly mean Poland--while the people benefit very little from the effect of these credits, be it in Russia, Poland or some other East bloc states? If one views the economic development of such states after 30 years of development, one must say that despite an enormous difference between individual East bloc states, the effect of Western billions has been rather small. Can it go on like this?

[Schmidt] It is not correct to say: With good conditions. If our banks give credits--the state does not give credits, private banks do--they see to it that they will have a profit. I happen to know about the credit yield for Poland under discussion by a group of banks. But on principle I am for helping. We help a number of developing countries which are plainly military dictatorships. Naturally we help.

There is no need to produce one's Christianity to adhere to the principle of aid. It is necessary for political reasons to help others. It could happen sometime that we would need help. In such a case it would be good if we had helped others when we could.

As regards the effect of such credits, it is more in some states and less in others. I am certain that some of our development aid credits could have been used much better than they have been by some recipient countries. And yet we give these credits. We cannot interfere in the internal economic policy of a developing country.

As regards the credit for Poland under discussion by West German banks and a bank in Warsaw, I am absolutely certain that this is right because it will basically help the Polish people, regardless how much of it comes to the individual. The Polish balance of payments is in great difficulty. It needs our help. I fully agree with the American President, who wrote me a long letter on this matter the day before yesterday, stressing that one must help Poland. That is what Jimmy Carter says. I can only say that we have been of that opinion for quite some time. We fully agree that if one does not want to help somebody who is in need, the policy in this world will become very inhumane in the long run.

[Muehlfenzl] Mr Federal Chancellor, that was our final comment. I thank you for your readiness to answer our questions. I thank my colleagues for the questions, and I thank you, ladies and gentlemen, for being our guests tonight.

OFFICIALS, PRESS COMMENT ON SITUATION IN POLAND

LD281216 Hamburg DPA in German 1058 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Hamburg, 28 Aug (DPA)--CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl has called on Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to comment on the situation in Poland. Kohl said today at a press conference in Bonn that he understands a government's belief that it has to exercise circumspection concerning certain questions. However, Schmidt is also deputy SPD chairman, and Kohl assumes that he also has sympathy with the striking workers.

Lower Saxony Minister President Ernst Albrecht said in an interview with Deutschlandfunk that one should not disrupt the attempts at liberalization in Poland from outside. Outsiders are unable to pass responsible judgement. Deputy chairman of the lower house group, Horst Ehmke, pleaded for a continuation of the process of detente without which the forces of reform, in Poland as now, would have been unable to develop.

Kohl said that to express these sympathies has nothing to do with agitation or hotheadedness, which he opposes. The silence by the federal chancellor on Poland speaks volumes. In the view of the CDU chairman the events in Poland have made it clear that it is a crisis inherent in the communist system which can only be solved on a permanent basis by internal reforms and more freedoms. "The dilemma of the Federal Government's policy of detente is clearly expressed by the fact that Herr Schmidt cannot visit the GDR because workers are on strike in Poland." Kohl described Schmidt's justification for calling off his meeting with Honecker as "incredible" and "unworthy." Instead of naming the cause, which is Poland, Schmidt had said that "the developments in Europe" which had taken place in recent days made the timing of the visit inappropriate.

Kohl called on the Federal Government to reconsider its Eastern and Germany policies. The priorities of German foreign policy must again be concentrated on a policy within the alliance, on a close partnership with the United States and on European unification. The government should reactivate the citizens. Awareness of Europe, and make a determined contribution toward safeguarding the military equilibrium in Europe.

Albrecht said: "What is and is not possible at present in the sphere of internal political liberalization should be left to the Poles themselves. Outsiders are unable to pass responsible judgement or give advice." Albrecht, who spoke of a "breathtaking process" in Poland, praised the judgment and discipline of the Polish people. He emphasized that the Polish leadership is endeavoring "not to use any repressive means of state power."

Ehmke said on Deutschlandfunk: "We must continue on our course of detente." A rupture of the policy of detente would, in his words, be detrimental for the people in East Europe and in the GDR. Ehmke said that it had been the policy of detente which had taken the pressure off the people in the West and also in the East.

Without detente, the forces of reform which are working in Poland with courage and circumspection would have been unable to develop. It was one of the difficulties of the policy of detente to transform an event such as the one in Poland into a process which remained peaceful. The events in Poland express the objective necessity for reforms in East European countries.

SPD Statement

LD281320 Hamburg DPA in German 1200 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 28 Aug (DPA)--The SPD leadership has once again underlined the need for a peaceful settlement to the conflicts in Poland and for no outside interference in Polish events. The SPD Presidium stated today, following a meeting yesterday, that the SPD watches with great attention and esteem the endeavors in Poland to achieve the solving of tensions and problems by nonviolent means and through open dialogue. The Presidium paid special tribute to the "responsible stand" adopted by the Catholic Church.

The SPD Presidium paid special tribute to the circumspection and noninterference practiced by the Federal Government and the Western allies, especially by the United States, toward the events in Poland and also paid tribute to the readiness of Western states to contribute by means of increased cooperation and credits toward overcoming the difficulties in Poland. The United States, the EC and especially the German banks have set a good example. The SPD manifested its solidarity with the reformers in Poland. When workers in another country stand up for their interests and more rights in representing their interests "then the German Social Democrats are with them in their hearts." This is in accordance with the spirit and tradition of the European workers movement.

The SPD Presidium, which met under the chairmanship of party leader Willy Brandt, emphatically called on the CDU/CSU opposition not to turn the events in Poland "into an bject of polemics for purposes of the electoral struggle." The Presidium contended that the opposition's lack of consideration shown in domestic political matters manifests itself also in its foreign political line, especially in the case of Poland. CDU/CSU chancellor candidate Franz Josef Strauss has demanded interference in Polish events if he were to link the granting of credits to the acceptance of the demands by the Polish workers' strike committee. At the same time he said that the Soviet Union could see itself forced into an active intervention in Poland if the individual strike actions turned into a "bushfire." The SPD leadership emphasized: "A cynical gamble with the people's fate is taking place." He who spoke of the dangers of a trade union state in the Federal Republic should be reticent with advice on trade union's freedom to organize in Poland.

Press Review

DW090949 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Press review]

[Excerpts] Commenting on the appeal by strike leader Walesa, BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG writes: Will he succeed with party chief Gierek where even Cardinal Wyszynski failed? For Poland it is new, it is a sensation, that he, the strike leader is allowed to have his say in the state-controlled media. But so was the cardinal's first appearance on television. Both events not only express the absolute ebb of power at which the state and the party have arrived but also the change that has taken place in Poland which will keep having its effect no matter what the outcome of the test of strength might be.

In the opinion of SCHWARZINAELDER BOTE both sides in Poland obviously are determined to avoid an extreme confrontation with its unforeseeable consequences. Commenting on the appeal the paper then continues to say: It would seem, to be sure, that hopes are exaggerated that an early end of the conflict is now in sight, for the crucial problem, the licensing of a free trade union independent of the party as demanded by the strikers, is as yet unresolved. But no communist regime can yield to this demand lest it call its own existence into question. Still, the realization seems to be growing among the strikers also that by raising the maximum demands they will not only hazard what they have achieved so far but also might provoke the rulers to wage a bloody struggle for survival.

SAARBRUECKER ZEITUNG advocates the following view: Above all Warsaw sees two dangers constantly intensifying: On the one hand, disastrous conditions threaten to ensue in the country's economy unless the raw materials, foodstuffs and other goods held up in the Baltic seaports reach their destinations soon; on the other hand, the danger keeps growing that the hitherto outstanding discipline of the people will come to an end and that unrest is to find expression in the streets somewhere after all. Clearly defined limits seem to have been set for the new party leadership, limits below which it cannot go under any circumstances. Thus, above all, trade unions detached from the party are out of the question.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU draws up a balance sheet of risks and advantages for the Polish party leadership in the event that it would really admit free trade unions apart from the existing organization. The commentary reads in part: The party would have to reckon that the people would be bound to wonder to an increasing extent why free elections should apply solely to trade unions and not also to other spheres of social life. On the other hand, the party and the government could gain great relief politically through free trade unions. If we suppose that free trade unions also enjoy wage autonomy the government could be reasonably sure that the salary contracts and salaries thus negotiated would last until the contract matures. As a result the government could pursue a reasonable economic policy that would no longer be jeopardized by nationwide eruptions. Since the restoration of confidence is the most important precondition for the recuperation of the economy the risks and advantages of free trade unions would be balanced, FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU writes.

KOELNISCHE RUNDSCHAU raises the question of how we in the Federal Republic should behave in view of the events in Poland. The paper writes: Poland is no election campaign topic. Everybody should form his own opinion without outside help about what is transpiring in this communist-ruled country right now. Poland gives pause for thought and conjures up memories of Budapest and Prague or comparisons with Danzig in 1970 or Kabul in 1980. Lecturing with a raised index finger is unnecessary. The events tell their own tale. The Federal Government, the government parties, or the trade unions must not be blamed for keeping silent officially. Loud words may easily turn into an igniting spark. The West could not intervene if the strike results in revolts, violence, and bloodshed.

GENSCHER MEETS NICARAGUAN LEADERS FOR TALKS ON AID

LD281318 Hamburg DPA in German 1118 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 28 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Nicaragua's Foreign Minister Pater Miguel D'Escoto Brockman met in Bonn today to discuss the Federal Republic's economic assistance to Nicaragua.

D'Escoto, who is accompanied by the Minister of the International Reconstruction Fund, Haroldo Montealegre, will during his 2-day official visit also have talks with representatives from the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation and with the Economics Ministry. He is to be received by Federal President Karl Carstens tomorrow.

The visit from Managua underlines, according to the foreign office, the mutual interest in a deepening of bilateral relations, and Bonn's readiness to give Nicaragua political and economic support in the difficult problems of reconstruction.

Genscher said at a dinner given in honor of the Latin American guests that the Federal Government and the citizens of the Federal Republic had watched with great sympathy how the Nicaraguan people had struggled for democracy. "It was a struggle in which all sections of the population had taken part", said the Federal foreign minister. With this struggle Nicaragua had given a sign to the whole world which cannot be ignored that the striving for freedom, human rights and self-determination was an elementary need. The Federal Government had gladly offered Nicaragua economic cooperation in order to help in the realization of the aims and ideals set by its own people.

CDU Deputy Hans Heinz Hauser said last night upon his return from a 2-week visit to Central America that the West European states should give active support to the rulers in Nicaragua in order to contribute towards the defense against communism in that country.

OFFERGELD CALLS FOR THIRD WORLD DEVELOPMENT AID

DW280731 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0488 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Excerpts from reporter Peters interview with Rainer Offergeld, federal minister for economic cooperation, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The dialogue must get going. It is important not to always talk past each other. Formulas must be abandoned. One should speak frankly. Do you see any chances for that? What role will Bonn take in this respect?

[Answer] We must not ignore the possibility that the dialogue might become a dialogue of the deaf, of those who do not hear anything. The situation between the North and the South is indeed very critical, the situation in many developing countries is quite dramatic.

The danger exists that by the end of this century not only 800 million people will suffer from famine in developing countries, but many more. The consequence would be even more social tensions and conflicts in many parts of the Third World. We have seen in past years that this will involve us also. I only need to point to Iran and Afghanistan. Therefore the Federal Government is so much interested in an improvement of the atmosphere between the North and the South, therefore the great interest in an agreement to be achieved in the special UN General Assembly. One aims for the establishment of a world-wide framework for development policy in the eighties.

[Question] The oil states will probably have a surplus of 115 billion [currency not mentioned] in their cashboxes. Will exact figures and names be given?

[Answer] That must be done. The West and the Federal Republic have attributed great significance to energy becoming an issue of discussion. Naturally one must give figures. It must be pointed out, for example, that the oil price increase last year was higher for developing countries without oil than the development assistance they received. In other words: The danger exists that the oil price explosion will eat up the entire development assistance given by the West, and these are considerable amounts, particularly those given by the Federal Republic. Naturally this problem must be discussed. Developments in the Third World, in developing countries, cannot be sensibly discussed if the energy issue will be kept out.

[Question] Will the United States and other Western countries--such as our country--address the Soviet Union by asking it to eventually follow-up its great development policy statements and promises with action?

[Answer] The contributions of the Eastern Bloc, the total contributions of the Eastern Bloc are much, much lower. Well, German contributions are much higher than the total contributions of the Eastern Bloc. This issue must be naturally discussed, namely that it is impossible for the Eastern Bloc to consider itself primarily an arms supplier for the Third World without doing anything else. This issue must be naturally discussed quite frankly and clearly in New York. I have no doubts at all that Mr Genscher will take up that issue.

[Question] Does that also involve the GDR?

[Answer] Yes! Naturally! I have mentioned the communist industrial states. Many of them have achieved a considerable ability in this respect.

[Question] Fortunately great agreement exists among the Europeans on many points.

[Answer] Yes! We have worked hard on the coordination of standpoints in the European Community, as always when important international problems come up. We have succeeded to a great extent in doing this.

COMMENTATOR SEES GAINS IN U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY

DW270838 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 27 Aug 80 p 10

[Commentary signed Ein.: "Atom and Strategy"]

[Text] The Russians are trying to interpret Carter's "new strategy." But they do not reach any conclusion. The crucial question still has not been answered for them: Do the nuclear weapons, as far as Washington is concerned, continue to be political weapons or are they to be used militarily as well? The unrest which has grasped the analysts in the communist camp is reflected by the statements of the head of the Moscow America Institute: A nuclear war cannot be won. It will be waged by the Russians only if the Soviet Union is attacked with nuclear weapons first. The formulations from Moscow sound veritably pleading. They warn against a nuclear policy which might "bring the end of civilization." Well, the Americans do not need to be told this. For 30 years now they have not been doing anything else but preventing the great war. Yet the United States has reached a threshold. A shift has taken place in its nuclear thinking system. Nuclear weapons no longer appear only as a passive element of strategy in "Directive 59". Their active utilization, which hitherto only the Russians had been threatening, has at least become conceivable. Perhaps the concern about the nuclear apocalypse will drive the two giants closer together again and to new accords.

SENEGAL'S SENGHOR DISCUSSES CHAD, REGIONAL ISSUES WITH GISCARD

AB281721 Paris AFP in French 1453 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Paris, 28 August (AFP)--Mr Leopold-Sedar Senghor, president of Senegal, said on Thursday when leaving the Elysee that a UN peacekeeping force is likely to be formed next month to help maintain a cease-fire in Chad.

The Senegalese president, who had just been received for lunch by Mr Giscard d'Estaing, added: We would like this force to be composed of contingents from African countries. Senegal, he recalled, has already made it known that it is ready to send its batallion which is presently in southern Lebanon to Chad.

Mr Senghor said that he had raised the Chadian issue with the president of the French Republic. He added that their talks also centered on Western Sahara, the situation in the Sudanese and Sahelian countries and within the community of West African countries.

In addition, the Senegalese president thanked Mr Giscard d'Estaing for the help that France has promised to give to his country. Senegal is facing serious economic difficulties particularly due to drought. Mr Senghor nevertheless pointed out that within a period of 20 years of independence the annual revenue per inhabitant in Senegal has risen from $160 to $463 (in 1979).

PS' JOSPIN EXPLAINS PARTY'S VIEW OF POLISH CRISIS

LD281025 Paris LE MONDE in French 24-25 Aug 80 p 14

[Unattributed report on "note" sent by Lionel Jospin, Socialist Party National Secretariat member in charge of international relations, to party officials on 22 August: "The Polish Crisis--Mr Lionel Jospin Explains the Socialists' Attitude"]

[Excerpt] After emphasizing the "exceptional importance" of the events now taking place in Poland, Mr Lionel Jospin writes:

"The Socialist Party's role in this affair must be to clarify the events, assert our solidarity and consequently to seek--with our limited means--ways to help the Polish workers to achieve success. Our leaders have made some excellent remarks on the subject, recalling who is waging the struggle and presenting the demands in Poland (blue collar office workers, young people and, occasionally, peasants), throwing light on connections between economic and political demands (hence the importance of the demand for trade unions independent of the state) and emphasizing that this great movement boils down to a desire for freedom.

"However, certain recent statements have shown that there are also some dangers to be avoided. It is with reference to them that I would now like to make some remarks with the first secretary's consent.

"The first difficulty concerns the question of Soviet military intervention. That such an intervention is possible and would even be logical if the Soviet leaders were to take the view that the interests of the Soviet bloc are at stake, past history -in East Germany, Hungary and Czechoslovakia--has already taught us that having any illusions in this respect would be tantamount to deceiving ourselves. However, it is not unavoidable despite all this, just as in a different historical and social context the defeat of the 1848 revolutions against the Austro-Hungarian [as published] Empire was not unavoidable. [paragraph continues]

It must be realised that any military intervention in Poland would be very risky for the Soviet leaders. This means that there is some margin for maneuver for the Warsaw government and the workers who confront it. The latter can win something albeit not everything. This is why to assume that military intervention is certain and, a fortiori, imagine a tragic scenario in which we tell the Soviets in advance what we would do and, especially, what we would not do in such an eventuality is not helpful to the Polish workers. In a way it reassures the Kremlin authorities and is therefore a political mistake which should be avoided.

"A second--less fundamental but not negligible--problem concerns the attitude which we should adopt toward the French Communists. Everything shows that the events in Poland have plunged them into acute embarrassment. Certain signs suggest that the PCF leadership would probably bring itself to justify and repression if it were to take place. But let us not anticipate such an event either--it has not yet done so. I feel sure that Communist workers are instinctively on the Polish workers' side.

"I believe that the best attitude to adopt toward Communist leaders at the national and departmental level is not to condemn them in advance but confront them with the principles which they claim they defend--pluralism, freedom and peoples' rights--and emphasize their vacillations in order to ask them on whose side they are and what they intend to do to support the Polish workers. Here also our objective must be to help the latter and not to isolate them even further."

PCF'S LEROY ASSAILS CFDT, MITTERRAND REMARKS ON POLAND

["Roland Leroy [PCF Politburo member] statement" dated 20 August]

[Text] Tonight LE MONDE Chairman Jacques Fauvet asks the president in his paper to intercede with Edward Gierek. On the same page CFDT Secretary General Edmond Maire asserts that he can observe "the breaking up of the traditional notion of the working class." However, the CFDT Executive Committee pays tribute to the strike in Poland which is "a stage in the long sequence of the international workers movement's great struggles since its beginning." This indeed throws light on a basic attitude: In France the working class no longer exists but in Poland it should wage a struggle against the socialist regime. Francois Mitterrand expressed similar views on French Television Channel 1 yesterday. He preaches "calm and conciliation" to the French workers and expresses interest in and solidarity with Polish workers--sentiments which it seems he failed to express, for instance, when FRG metalworkers went on strike recently. In fact, the reason for this is that the Socialist Party first secretary is for capitalist management as practiced by Helmut Schmidt and against existing socialism.

Some politicians are doing their utmost to ensure that austerity is accepted and repression tolerated in France and other capitalist countries but are seeking to strike blows by any means at socialism which they do not want.

We, on the contrary, support the Polish workers and the communists who are seeking to ensure their prosperity and the country's development, correct mistakes and inadequacies and protect and develop socialism's achievements.

TRADE UNION DELEGATION LEAVES FOR POLAND

AU281615 Rome ANSA in English 1550 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Rome, 28 Aug (ANSA)--An Italian trade union delegation left here today for Poland with the twofold aim of conveying the Italian labor movement's solidarity to Polish strikers and encouraging an "open-minded spirit" in negotiations underway between Warsaw authorities and striking workers. The delegation representing Italy's three major labor organizations--the "CGIL," "CISL" and "UIL" [Italian General Confederation of Labor, Italian Confederation of Workers Unions and Italian Union of Labor]--is planning on staying in the East European state until next Tuesday. "CISL" foreign relations spokesman Emilio Gabaglio said in his departure statement here today that the delegation would like to meet with the joint strike committee in Gdansk as soon after their arrival as possible, as well as with the Central Council of Poland's (official) unions and government authorities, if they so desire.

BOFFA VIEWS LINK BETWEEN POLISH EVENTS AND 'EUROPEAN BALANCE'

LD290923 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 27 Aug 80 pp 1, 11

[Giuseppe Boffa commentary: "Poland and European Balance"]

[Text] The outright tumult in the Warsaw government leadership which was announced Sunday night marks a very important stage in the evolution of the Polish social crisis. Though it could not lead to the necessary solution, it has made it possible to begin the negotiations between the government and the strikers which are currently in progress. In any case the crisis is a profound one and of course it cannot be resolved all at once. However, the changes in the government leadership and ruling party and, still more, the honest and frank speech delivered by Gierek was the inevitable political reflection of an equally political process that has clearly begun in connection with the economic difficulties and unrest.

Gierek was very persuasive both in his criticisms of the decisions of the recent past and in his advocacy of the option for new paths. This also strengthens a long-standing conviction of ours. When in the debates of recent years we have considered it essential to express criticisms and reservations and to outline reforms for the East European societies, while respecting the socialist approach, we did not do so--as has sometimes been claimed--to superimpose a scheme of our own on situations undoubtedly complex and different from ours, but because we sensed from several indications that such demands stemmed from the profound problems that were emerging in those countries. It is not surprising, therefore, that the most official sources, no less, are now lamenting a delay in their solution. Indeed, it is a good thing that a clear desire to remedy them, albeit in a situation that has deteriorated considerably in the meantime, is emerging.

A second point regards another, more general, concern of ours. The solution of the internal problems of those societies (but not only those, because ours are certainly not excluded) is a requirement which also affects international life, to the extent of influencing the very possibilities of resuming or developing detente in Europe. This is shown by the past few days' news. By saying this our intention is not to make excuses. The existence of a trade union worthy of the name, authoritative and effective and therefore capable of enjoying the real trust of the workers masses, is an intrinsic requirement for every developed industrial society (which is what Poland is now, despite its shortcomings) and as such should be a constant concern of its leadership forces. Why on earth should such a demand actually threaten the European "balances"? [paragraph continues]

It seems almost absurd to believe it. And indeed that demand must be satisfied. And yet the fear has spread during the past few days; but its origins lie in the deafness which the Polish social and political structures have shown for too long to movements and demands of this kind, thus revealing their real weak point.

Basically all of us (not only we Italian Communists but, almost all the continent's more responsible political forces, as has been stressed by many people) have been following events in Poland with bated breath for a fortnight. The more careful observers began to center their anxious attention on the country at the beginning of July. Indeed, it was then that, faced with the predictable protests prompted by the then inevitable price increases, the Polish Government began its attempt, albeit belated, to involve the workers masses in negotiations capable of extricating the country from an economic situation that was getting out of hand. In its own way, it was an innovative, though still tentative, move. Too many old problems had accumulated by that time, however, and were influencing the protagonists to the extent of conferring broader political and social, as well as economic, aspects on the crisis.

While many of these problems do have a special significance for Poland, it would be improvident as well as dangerous, however, to regard them as an exclusively Polish phenomenon. We will restrict ourselves to indicating just some of these general topics--in our opinion, the most important ones. There is the need for an evolution, gradually of course, but not for that reason any less effective, of East European societies, their leadership machinery and their internal communication channels: It is a problem which originated a long time ago and must therefore by considered first. But there is also the world economic crisis which, though it originates in the major centers of capitalism, is affecting the entire world, irrespective of its splits, and causing an upheaval in all its various social structures, dealing the heaviest blows to the most exposed, most unbalanced or relatively weaker countries, such as Poland. Last, there is the problem of Europe, its future and its changes and of the relations among its various parts--all this closely interlinked with the problem of detente and its precondition, namely, the European balance of which Poland is, because of the objective situation, a linchpin; if it were to crumble no part of the continent would escape the consequences, which might be tragic.

These are the facts of the grave issue that is at stake in Poland today. On the whole during the past few days there has certainly been no lack of praise for the self-control with which the various protagonists of the crisis have behaved, albeit within the framework of a very harsh struggle. In the quest for difficult, though indispensable, political solutions, such as the one announced in Warsaw on Sunday night, this praise also sounds like a wish and a hope. For the Poles it is a reason for adopting a responsible attitude. Their country's history is composed not only of noble and heroic deeds, but also of disastrous failures by two successive leadership classes, for which the entire nation paid a high price, and also of grave errors and shortsighted decisions, which were perhaps disguised by good intentions but which nevertheless failed to prompt any excuses or indulgence. All the more important, then, is the tenacious effort that is now apparently being made by the various sides involved to find a solution in which political considerations will prevail. Furthermore, we are living at a time when not only the Poles but every one of us must manage to find new answers to unprecedented problems.

Of course the solution to the present crisis can come only from the Poles. We are all aware of this. But I believe nobody must delude himself by thinking that the other countries can wash their hands of it or even seek to profit from other people's difficulties for the sake of some petty ideological vendetta, that would not last long in any case. Everyone's problems are too interconnected. Like it or not, the evolution of events in Poland concerns us as well.

PCI OFFICIAL INGRAO COMMENTS ON EFFECTS OF POLISH CRISIS

LD281007 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 22 Aug 80 pp 1, 14

[PCI Directorate member Pietro Ingrao commentary: "Difficult Chapters Opened in Eastern Bloc and the West"]

[Text] Two very simple considerations immediately come to mind when reflecting on the Polish events.

First, the ruptures and major restructurings that have taken place in economic and social relations on a world scale now span many borders and are causing weighty repercussions in the Eastern European economies and regimes as well. What we now habitually call the crisis is seriously putting to the test both the economic solutions and political systems existing in the countries of so-called "real socialism." This is the reality that is emerging and that transcends events in Poland.

We do not know much about the dimensions and forms which the course of this crisis has assumed or is assuming in the Eastern Bloc. It is our fault and an indication of the delay in our analytical study; but it is also due to an error (or an illusion) on the part of those countries' leaders who have hitherto failed to discuss openly the facts of the trauma as they are developing there. Now the explosion of the crisis presents itself in forms which are all the more disturbing and tragic.

It is not difficult to imagine the enormous problems raised by the emergence of these crises (with their variants and peculiarities) in the Eastern Bloc area. Everyone is now saying and writing that the development and outcome of the events in Poland will create consequences not only for the Warsaw Pact area, but also for Europe, for international relations as a whole, for the hopes, anxieties and ideals of millions and millions of workers. This means that any hopes of preserving one's "salvation" in one's own back yard, at worst in the shadow of the major international states or superpowers, are faced with less and less scope, provide no protection from the current storms and cannot evade the major questions with which modern society must come to terms.

We were therefore not entirely wrong when we urged from and proposed to the Italian workers and democratic movement the building of a new form of internationalism, a struggle for a new world role for democratic Europe. And we are saying these things now not so as to "forget" or shelve the existing problems in the Eastern Bloc, but indeed to emphasize more strongly that the existence of those problems and even the crisis which those societies require and demand--unless we want to view them purely in terms of agitation or complaint--the existence of an initiative to regenerate the Western workers and democratic movement and its ability to act as an interlocutor for a new kind of development with respect to both the southern areas of the world and the Eastern Bloc.

The second consideration is this: The major question posed in Poland and so many other countries is whether it is possible to emerge from the crisis by asserting and effectively and substantially extending the power of participation, involvement and decision-making of the broad workers masses, primarily of those who form the backbone and linchpin of the production process. The forms, institutions, procedures and types of mediation will vary from country to country and will be governed by history, social composition and current political systems; we know this and do not forget it. But this is the real point of discussion everywhere--with regard to Poland as well, but not only Poland. Deadlines are approaching almost everywhere: There are prices to pay and production and social decisions to make. It seems difficult, even absurd, to demand a sense of responsibility and a long-sighted "national" outlook from the workers without acknowledging their leading role, their powers of involvement and decision-making.

The newspapers tell us that the debate in Gdansk is not only over pay and prices, but also over the role and nature of the trade union. [paragraph continues]

It seems clear to me that this is merely the current, immediate context within which the more general theme of the masses' role and place within the organization of political and social power is exploding. Just as I do not believe that we will emerge from the crisis in Italy without thorough social and political reforms, given the existing differences, I believe that the countries of "real socialism" will not deal with the tragic upheaval of which Poland is an indication without a regeneration which will at last increase and advance the power of the people's masses. Indeed, outside this perspective the crisis there would be even more damaging, precisely because of the all-embracing role of the state-party in those countries and precisely because the errors of state policy are reflected more harshly there in the entire social dynamic. In this connection it seems important to me that at last, despite the delay, the official trade unions have begun a self-critical reflection in Poland.

By speaking in this way we are not meddling illicitly in other people's affairs. The matter is of direct concern to us--and not only because of the history from which we Italian Communists originate. Woe betide us if we fail to see and understand that the position and future of the countries of "real socialism" will be judged--and how--partly also by developments in Warsaw. While it is true that the great Polish nation now needs trust, solidarity and understanding on an international scale, this will depend partly--and to a large extent--on the ability to produce a regenerative answer that will bind that country's economic future to the advent of a new kind of democracy. Never before have bread and freedom been so united--and I am talking about freedom in the profound, modern, social meaning that we attach to this idea, this great banner of the workers and socialist movement.

And it is not only a matter of what the Eastern Bloc countries' communist parties and workers and people's forces will manage to do in this latest crucial situation. We have talked about a "third way" to be tried out and built in our country, indeed about "third ways," that is new paths to socialism to be sought within the new complexity and interlinkage of the modern capitalist world. In Italy we are debating the present meaning and significance of the objective of socialism, of the very word socialism. And we are debating it not only in books and at meetings, but in practice, seeking to identify the specific substance, the real nuclei and struggle experiences that will bring this great word, this great hope back to earth.

I have not the slightest wish to confuse two situations and regimes as profoundly different as the Polish and the Italian. But why not recall what we have experienced in Italy concerning the trade union's role in a struggle to transform society? Why not say that we have regarded political pluralism partly also as the autonomy of a new trade union "political subject" and have seen in this not a weakening but an enrichment and extension of the forces working for society's regeneration? Why not point out that there is a very specific and by no means painless debate underway in our country on the relationship between democracy in the factory and the planning and quality of development?

In short, we are keen to point out that this is how to build the new kinds of society that can extricate us from the present crisis--by proceeding from the present, from the difficult chapters opened in the Eastern Bloc and the West. We must say this not only to the necessary interlocutors of this shared dialogue in our country--the leftwing forces, the Catholic world and the new movements that have emerged over the years. We must say it also to ourselves and our comrades--including the communist comrades who argued and disagreed when the party directorate criticized the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. There is a chasm between Gierek's Poland and the situation in Afghanistan. But perhaps now the comrade who defended the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan can better understand the importance for the stability of a people's revolution of the masses' consensus and the defense of fundamental freedoms and rights.

Finally, if these are the topics evoked by the events in Poland, then we can see how sterile and damaging are the attempts at anticommunist manipulation, the petty games, and how narrow the outlook is of those who weep over Poland but believe they can run modern Italy by playing the cards of corporative fragmentation and who do indeed organize the masses, but only to keep them subjected to a subordinate position. Is the question, what kind of development and therefore what kind of government and what kind of role for the workers, not relevant to our country also? And if it is true that the Polish events require that we all broaden our outlook, if we feel it is more necessary than ever to build an international dimension of the struggle and initiative for regeneration, then we cannot feel moved by events in Gdansk and remain indifferent to and aloof from the dramatic challenge being experienced by the Iranian revolution, constantly on the brink of a tragedy. Bolivia has disappeared from the newspapers. I am not calling for alternatives to forget about Gdansk; I do not believe in these types of petty games. I believe that we can now address Poland if we maintain just one link, however slender, with the many people on other continents now struggling and demanding to be a people, a nation and the protagonists of their own future.

INTERIOR MINISTER COMMENTS ON FIGHT AGAINST TERRORISM

LD281103 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 17 Aug 80 pp 14-18

[Guido Quaranta interview with Italian Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni: "Net Result"--date and place not given]

[Excerpts] Question: In your opinion is there a mastermind, a sophisticated one of course, coordinating terrorism, both leftwing and rightwing?

Answer: It seems unlikely that the phenomenon of terrorism and political violence can be attributed to the direction taken by a plan drawn up by a strategic center that deliberately wants to prevail over the autonomous political process in our country and other countries by distorting it. It is certain, however, that the violence that exists in society today, with its effects on public opinion (anger, fear, suggestions, the desire for a rupture, revolutionary efforts and false hopes) can and does find people who, instead of combating it, use it to destabilize democratic coexistence through terrorist acts.

Question: Many people have an impression that over the years the police have neglected rightwing trails and followed only leftwing ones. Is it true?

Answer: Rightwing terrorism has never been neglected. This is shown by the police operations that have been successfully carried out over the years and which the prime minister rightly pointed out to the senate the other day. Furthermore, men responsible for fascist-type terrorist acts, such as Tuti, Concutelli and many others, have been discovered and sentenced.

Question: Some press organs have claimed that rightwing terrorism even has links with certain sectors of the state. What do you say to that?

Answer: It is a despicable assertion and I reject it most forcefully. I want to be quite clear about this. If it is true that the Fontana Square massacre suggests links between rightwing terrorism and machinery within the state, then the arrest of Freda and Ventura in Costa Rica and Argentina (pursued bravely, assidously and tenaciously by the Italian police) has already refuted these assertions and makes any further speculation intolerable.

ZIMBABWE'S MUGABE ARRIVES; TO MEET WITH CARRINGTON

LD280932 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0832 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Zimbabwe Prime Minister Mr Robert Mugabe arrived at London's Heathrow Airport today from New York and made a new plea for immediate financial aid from the United States and Britain and other friendly countries. Referring to his talks with President Carter in Washington, he said: "In general the U.S. Government is well disposed to the idea of sending more aid to us, perhaps not in the immediate future but in the long term. My visit was a tremendous success, not only because of the promise to aid, but because of the interest which it drew from the American people, particularly in the private sector."

Mr Mugabe, who is seeing Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington today before returning to Salisbury, told U.S. congressmen yesterday that Zimbabwe would need 350 million dollars over the next two years for new schools, hospitals and roads. Today he said: "A major problem is that much of the aid promised after independence was not forthcoming. I am delighted with independence itself and the programmes we have set out to achieve. There are no problems that are insoluble but the price is disappointing, not the lack of effort."

He stressed that there was no clash with opposition leader Mr Joshua Nkomo, saying: "We are in coalition and must work together irrespective of any difficulties."

Comment on General Walls

LD281330 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1136 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] The prime minister of Zimbabwe, Mr Robert Mugabe, said today that the controversial former head of the armed forces, Lt. General Peter Walls, would be made to leave the country as soon as possible. Mr Mugabe was speaking at Heathrow Airport after arriving from Washington where he had talks with President Carter.

In an airport interview he said: "Walls is just one man out of step. I don't think that indicates any existance of problems in the country. Men out of step, naturally, must be assisted to get more out of step if they don't want to mend their ways." When asked if there was still a place in Zimbabwe for General Walls, Mr Mugabe said: "No, categorically none at all for a man like that. I wouldn't have him and I rather he left Zimbabwe as soon as possible." When pressed on what measures he could take to remove General Walls, Mr Mugabe said: "We will take every possible step. That is all I can say."

Mr Mugabe's American talks centered on the question of aid to Zimbabwe. Later today he will meet the Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington who returned to London from Saudi Arabia last night. The two men will hold discussions over lunch in London.

BBC Interview

LD282354 London BBC Television Network in English 2145 GMT 28 Aug 80

[BBC correspondent Ian Smith interview with Robert Mugabe, prime minister of Zimbabwe, in London carried on the "Newsnight" program--recorded]

[Text] After a flying visit to the United States, Robert Mugabe, the Zimbabwean prime minister, stopped off in London on his way home.

In both capitals the aim was the same: to raise badly needed cash to rebuild his country's economy after the war. He needs, he says, 1.7 billion [unit of currency not specified] but so far all he has managed to raise is 78 million from Britain and about 9 million from America, with the promise of more. But money is only one of the problems in the prime minister's in-tray. One of his generals, Peter Walls--now in retirement--has angered him with talk of a plot on the eve of independence, and one of his ministers, Mr Tekere, is about to go on trial for murder. Ian Smith talked to the prime minister when he was in London today:

[Begin recording] [Question] To what extent were you shocked and surprised by the arrest of the minister of manpower, Mr Tekere, on the charge of murder?

[Answer] The arrest and the charge that has been effected in relation to Comrade Tekere is a matter before the courts just now. It hasn't changed our position vis-a-vis the minister because the charge has not yet been proved, and until the charge is proved and Edgar becomes a guilty person our minds are open on the question.

[Question] Was there ever a moment when you as prime minister thought that it would be right that he should not go through the due process of the law?

[Answer] No, no. There can never be a moment when it is right that anybody in the country should not undergo the process of the law.

[Question] You are quoted, Prime Minister, as saying that General Walls should leave the country if he is not in favor of the current system there. Now is that the due process of the law?

[Answer] If a man is not prepared to accept the results of an election which is constitutional, which is a process set in motion by the constitution, and advocates the overthrowing of that result by force of arms then certainly it is that man who is out of step with the law and not those who advocate that he should be punished because of his position, because of the state in which he has put himself.

[Question] Do you think that he should be deported?

[Answer] I feel that he has no place in our society at all. And that means he has either to remove himself out of the country or we will get him out of the country, whatever the situation is.

[Question] You will get him out of the country?

[Answer] We will, we have to just have to.

[Question] But what are the circumstances in which you would be entitled, as the government, to deport one of your own nationals.

[Answer] I am prime minister of my country and I intend to rule that country with firmness. I am not going to have anybody advocate the overthrowing of a government and remain in the country. He is not one of us if he does that. The alternative is to put him in detention and I do not want to do that.

[Question] You seem to be taking a particularly hard line that might lead some people to believe that the right of dissent in your country is not now being allowed.

[Answer] The right to overthrow a constitution does not exist at all on the party of (?everybody). It is not the right of the individual.

[Question] Prime Minister, it does seem to me that you do need a large amount of aid in order to be able to generate economic stability in your country?

[Answer] The amount of aid that has come our way is not that satisfactory. The British have given us 80 pounds sterling [as heard] and the Americans $25 million by way of a grant and another $25 million by way of a soft loan. That is not enough; it falls far short of the target envisaged under the Anglo-American proposals of about $1 billion.

[Question] You did not, though, sign the Anglo-American proposals. It wa a deal done at Lancaster House. Now what makes you think that you should be given extra money?

[Answer] Well, it is the same partners that we dealt with at Lancaster House--the British and the Americans in the background--they were always there. And I was of the opinion, actually, that when we started talking about the resettlement of our people, and the need for more land to be acquired, and the British were insisting that we should buy that land and compensate the farmers, that in ract they gave us an undertaking that there would be enough funds raised for that purpose and also for purposes of resettlement in general.

[Question] Do you believe that the British have gone back on that undertaking?

[Answer] I believe that both the British Americans have gone back on their original undertaking.

[Question] Are you not trapped, though, in this dilemma: That you are never going to get a large quantity of aid until people think that the country is peaceful. You cannot resolve the problem about the ex-guerrillas who are now in the camps without some large-scale operation, so that they can be found jobs and so on. But while they are in the camps and there are dissidents roaming around, then it is unlikely that people are going to give you a large amount of aid or invest.

[Answer] No, that is what you are saying. People are prepared... [Smith interrupts]

[Question] But actually that is what your minister of finance said, that dissidents were causing a lack of investment.

[Answer] No, I do not think so. I do not think that he said exactly that. What the position is, is that we have kept these people for too long a time in the assembly points, and if it is realized that there are 33,000 of them the number of incidents that have occurred really prove that they are by and large a disciplined force. Otherwise there would be much more frustration and much more lawlessness than we have seen. I don't think they are just now a cause for concern, except that the process should be accelerated--and this is what concerns me at the moment--the process of integrating them. But we are happy that they are being integrated now at the rate of 1,000 every fortnight, and that is not really the problem at the moment. [end recording]

FOREIGN MINISTRY INQUIRES ABOUT U.S. PRESENCE AT BASES

NC281657 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] According to an official statement, today, Foreign Ministry Director General Pelayias summoned UK Acting High Commissioner O'Keefe to his office and brought to his attention allegations that U.S. troops have recently been stationed at the British bases and that there is increased air activity there. The official statement adds that Mr O'Keefe assured Mr Pelayias that the allegations are completely unfounded and that there have not been nor are there any U.S. troops at the British bases.

FOREIGN MINISTER ROLANDHIS SEES FRESH PROSPECTS FOR TALKS

NC281152 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] In Nicosia today, within the framework of the First Commonwealth Film and Television Festival, a symposium on "The Arts in a Changing World" was held. The symposium was opened by Foreign Minister Rolandhis who extolled the Commonwealth's interest in and attitude toward the Cyprus problem. He said: The Commonwealth has consistently observed a positive attitude toward the Cyprus problem by advocating the negotiations and by supporting the UN resolutions on Cyprus.

The foreign minister said that the earlier rounds of intercommunal talks have not been fruitful despite the good will displayed by the Cyprus Government. He said that now fresh prospects are evident, again providing the opportunity for a renewed effort to seek a fair and permanent Cyprus solution. He added: It is our sincere wish, hope and goal that this effort, which begins with the substantive resumption of the intercommunal talks on 16 September, be crowned with success.

Mr Rolandhis stressed that the Cyprus problem must be resolved before it is too late, and that it must be resolved in a correct manner. He also expressed the hope that the Turkish Cypriots will understand that in reality neither side can triumph if the Cyprus deadlock is extended.

GREEK LABOR MINISTER ARIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

NC270835 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0700 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Greek Labor Minister Laskaris arrived in Cyprus this morning on a 4-day official visit at the invitation of the Cypriot Government. Mr Laskaris was received at Larnaca Airport by Labor Minister Theodhoulou, Greek Ambassador Zacharakis, Labor Ministry director general, leaders of the Confederation of Cypriot Workers [SEK], representatives of the Union of Cyprus Bank Employees [ETYK] and other officials.

In his statement at Larnaca Airport Mr Laskaris said that he had come to Cyprus at the invitation of the Cypriot Government and SEK in order to examine and promote various bilateral issues.

GREEK POLITICIANS CRITICIZED FOR SUPPORTING KIPRIANOU

[Editorial: "For the Greek Politicians"]

[Text] The statements made by some of Greece's political leaders following their meeting with President Kiprianou have been disappointing. Living under different political conditions, they try to instruct us on the line and the tactics of our struggle.

Because they do not know the present reality in Cyprus, they make impermissible mistakes that could harm our struggle. For example, [Democratic Center Union Chairman] Mr Zigdhis' attitude and that of other political leaders toward the intercommunal talks is disastrous. Mr Zighdis has called the talks "prattling," thus showing disrespect for the fact that this procedure is stipulated in the UN resolutions and approved by the national and ministerial councils of Cyprus and by all our faithful friends abroad, who are supporting us at the UN. Who has given Mr Zigdhis the right to attack the only feasible procedure that can lead the Cyprus problem out of the deadlock, without suggesting anything in its stead?

On the other hand [KKE-Interior leader] Mr Dhrakopoulos and [Democratic Socialist Party Chairman] Mr Pesmazoglou have advised us to rally around the president--and "his lawful government," Dhrakopoulos added--although they are aware of our serious political disagreements which have recently become more acute. What would Mr Dhrakopoulos and Mr Pesmazoglou have said if we here in Cyprus advised them, in connection with the Greek "national issues", to unite under the leadership of either Mr Rallis or of Mr Karamanlis? Their hair would have stood on end!

Thus, we advise the Greek political leaders to show less involvement in our internal political affairs and instead they had better consider how Greece could give Cyprus greater support in the international field.

DENKTAS LEAVES FOR BERLIN SEMINAR ON FREEDOM

TA281029 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] President Rauf Denktas left the island today to attend a seminar in Berlin on freedom and human dignity in the strategy of development.

In a statement before his departure this morning, Denktas said that he will meet numerous statesman during the 3-day seminar. He said: On behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community, we will naturally do what befalls us in the talks connected with those issues. Pointing out that the subject of the seiminar actually includes the issues which lie at the basis of the Turkish Cypriots' existence and struggle, Denktas added, however, that the conference is not related to Cyprus. Denktas added that he will not be able to attend the Islamic youth camp in Canakkale due to lack of time. The seminar in Berlin will last 3 days.

AKEL LEADER SENDS NATIONAL DAY GREETING TO CEAUSESCU

[Text] AKEL Secretary General E. Papaioannou has sent to the secretary general of the Romanian Communist Party and president of Romania the following message:

"Dear Comrade Ceausescu: On the occasion of your national day, the AKEL Central Committee addresses to you warmest congratulations and best wishes for further successes in the building of socialism and for the happiness of the friendly Romanian people."

INTERIOR MINISTRY DENIES REPORT OF TELEPHONE TAPS

NC260818 Nicosia I MAKHI in Greek 26 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] The Interior Ministry has denied as absolutely unfounded a press report which appeared the day before yesterday alleging that KIP [Central Intelligence Service] is bugging the telephones of citizens. No telephone is being bugged, and KIP, the personnel of which are appointed by the Interior Ministry subject to the agreement of the president of the republic, is limited in its role in state security.

CYPRUS PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU SATISFIED WITH OFFICIAL TALKS

NC281514 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Today, President Kiprianou had another meeting with Greek Prime Minister Rallis. During the 30-minute meeting there was an exchange of views on the handling of the Cypriot problem. The further strengthening of Greek-Cypriot relations was also discussed. In a statement after the meeting, President Kiprianou once again expressed his complete satisfaction over the talks as well as over the understanding of and great interest in Cyprus that the Greek prime minister had shown. President Kiprianou also expressed his general satisfaction over all his contacts in Greece with President Karamanlis, the Greek Government and party leaders. Kiprianou invited Greek Prime Minister Rallis to visit Cyprus, an invitation he accepted. Simultaneously, Kiprianou again extended his invitation to Greek President Karamanlis to visit Cyprus. The visits of Karamanlis and Rallis will take place on different dates, which will be fixed later. President Kiprianou also met today Athens Independent Deputy Mavros, whome he briefed on the latest developments in the Cypriot issue.

RIZOSPASTIS CRITICIZES JOINT EXERCISE WITH U.S. PARATROOPS

[Editorial: "Harsh Questions"]

[Text] The statement by the National Defense Ministry was very brief; it was like a telegram. It consisted of 6 to 7 lines with no "unnecessary" explanations; it did not embark on "prattling." "From 1-10 September, a scheduled exercise will be held in central and western Macedonia... A unit of U.S. paratroops will participate..." Sharp and laconic words, as if this were the simplest and most "innocent" event....

An effort was made so that the public might not notice the statement, so that it might not rouse any public interest. Thus, it was silently and secretly released. The reasons for this are obvious. The conversion of northern Greece into a place for war preparations and into an imperialist springboard against our neighboring socialist countries, against detente and security in the Balkans would definitely cause--in fact it was caused--a popular outcry.

The democratic opposition has denounced this serious provocation against our country's peace and security and has demanded that the government give immediate and clear explanations for it.

The official and monotonous excuses that these cold-war exercises are aimed at "training" and "briefing" the Greek Armed Forces are addressed solely to naive people; of course they cannot persuade anyone.

Who planned these exercises, and when?

Where are the government's notorious national sensitivity and peaceful intentions when it accepts and openly cooperates in these incendiary activities by the U.S. "guardians"?

What is the meaning of declarations about multilateral foreign policy and cooperation in the Balkans when detente and trust in the area are actually undermined?

What was asked or secured "in exchange" for the cession of Greek land to the organs of the arsonists of international peace? Could it be that this will lead to an early and complete reenclavement in NATO--within the time limits (!)--or to a more active support for the subservient pro-Atlantic regime in view of the danger from the people's anger?

The official government [spokesman]--not the Ministry of National Defense--answered the harsh questions put by the public. The professional government spokesman protected the "favorite" of the U.S. "allies" and provided one more "alibi" for the provocative action in northern Greece. He said: "Our Balkan neighbors also hold exercises and sometimes units of the Soviet Armed Forces also take part in them." The government spokesman had no need to say more. His "clarifications" speak for themselves.

Thus, this is the meaning of the famous "briefing": The notorious "Soviet threat"! And the necessary "training" that is required and dictated by the Atlantic patrons is directed at this threat. Of course the New Democracy government may have admitted that the... threat "is not directed against Greece," just as it cannot be directed against anyone since such dangers are either nonexistent or imaginative.

Nevertheless, the exercises are necessary! And it is not only the Americans who need them. It has been proved that the rightwing also needs them "to train" itself to cope with the demands by and dependence on the Atlantic circles. Above all, it is a matter of reliability and trustworthiness!

BOMB EXPLODES AT GREEK TOURIST ORGANIZATION OFFICE

There are no casualties because the explosion occurred during nonworking hours. EOT services in the Tamion Building at Sindagma Square are not operating today because of the explosion.

KKE-INTERIOR SENDS GREETINGS ON ROMANIA'S NATIONAL DAY

AU280924 Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian 26 Aug 80 p 3

[Congratulatory message sent by KKE-Interior leader Kharalambos Dhrakopoulos to President Nicolae Ceausescu on Romania's National Day]

[Text] To Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, RCP secretary general and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania.

On the 36th anniversary of your country's liberation from fascist domination, please accept warm congratulations on behalf of our party's central committee and on my own behalf. The day 23 August 1944 meant the beginning of a new road, headed by the communists, in building an independent, flourishing and socialist Romania whose role is increasingly decisive in turning the Balkans into an area of peace. Romania thus makes greater and greater contributions to the peoples' struggle for peace and progress. Our people take particular pleasure in the fact that relations between our two countries continue to develop in all fields and especially appreciate your personal contribution, as head of your party and of the Socialist Republic of Romania, to strengthening friendship and cooperation among all Balkan countries and to establishing a new international economic and political order in the interest of the peace and friendship of the peoples in the world. Our party, the working people and all Greek people wish you, on your national day, increasingly greater successes in building a new life in your beautiful country.

With comradely greetings.

[Signed] Kharalambos Dhrakopoulos, secretary of the central committee of the Communist Party of Greece-Interior.

CONSULATE GENERAL IN JERUSALEM TO BE CLOSED

TA281008 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Turkey has decided to close down its consultate general in Jerusalem. The announcement on this subject was made by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General. The Foreign Ministry statement is as follows: It has been decided to close down our consulate general in Jerusalem because of the fait accompli which Israel tried to create regarding the legal status of Jerusalem.

NSP MOTION AGAINST FOREIGN MINISTER GOES TO ASSEMBLY DEBATE

TA281756 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] The National Assembly decided today to include in its agenda an interpellation motion against the foreign minister submitted by NSP Deputy Necmettin Erbakan from Konya and his colleagues. The motion will be discussed by the National Assembly on Tuesday, 2 September. The joint meeting of the Senate and the National Assembly at 1500 could not be held as there was no quorum. However, the National Assembly convened later under the chairmanship of acting Assembly President Ismail Hakki Yildirim with the necessary quorum. The first issue discussed by the assembly was the interpellation against the foreign minister, who was accused of damaging the national interests through his stands and attitudes. Deputy Recai Kutan from Malatya was the first speaker to come to the rostrum. Kutan expressed the views of the NSP on the issue. Pointing out that the JP was pursuing an archaic foreign policy, Kutan asked that all relations with Israel, political as well as economic, be immediately severed. Kutan said that there was no reason for Turkey to continue these relations. Criticizing the government stand on the issue of the EEC and the Aegean, Kutan said that on these subjects, a stand in favor of national interests was imperative. Kutan concluded by saying that Turkey's foreign policy should be revised and reorganized and asked for the interpellation against Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen to be included in the assembly's agenda.

Speaking on behalf of the RPP National Assembly group, Deputy Hikmet Cetin from Istanbul said that the government, which had linked its economic policies to foreign loans, was damaging Turkey's foreign policies. Recalling that his party had always opposed the way in which the government was formed and the way in which it conducted its economic and social policies, Cetin said that the government's performance during its 9 months in power had proved the truth of his party's statements. Cetin said that the government damaged relations between Turkey and the Middle East countries as well as its neighboring countries. Cetin added that concessions were made to the EEC without taking Turkey's interests into consideration. Cetin said that his party would vote in favor of the motion so that allegations against the foreign minister expressed in the interpellation would be clarified.

Deputy Ali Gurbuz from Sivas spoke on behalf of the NAP. Charging the real aim of the NSP in submitting the motion was to provide a rapprochement with the RPP and not Turkey's foreign policies, Gurbuz said that allegations that the government had alienated Turkey from the Islamic world were without foundation. Gurbuz added that the government reacted properly in the Jerusalem issue, by rejecting Israel's decision and by making this fact known to the whole world. While the whole world had approved Turkey's decision on this subject, Erbakan and his colleagues have openly disapproved of it. Gurbuz said that his party would vote against the inclusion of the motion of the assembly's agenda.

Deputy Ali Naili Erdem from Izmir expressed the JP views on the NSP motion. Erdem recalled that to safeguard the national interests without making any concession to Turkey's dignity was the fundamental principle of the government's foreign policies. Erdem said that it was a result of this determined policy that the NATO ministerial council's yearly meeting was held in Ankara.

Recalling that the government pursued a clear and open policy on the Palestine issue, Erdem said that since 1961 his party had expressed the view that Israel should withdraw from the occupied territories and that an independent Palestinian state should be created. Pointing out that allegations in the interpellation were not serious, Erdem said that his party would vote against the motion.

Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen replied to allegations on behalf of the government. Erkmen said that the motion was the result of an archaic, erroneous and ungrateful stand. Pointing out that the interpellation contained grave accusations which could never be proved, Erkmen said that he was pursuing the policies of a government which had received the confidence of the parliament--and not his own. This policy, Erkmen said, was based on Turkey's traditional values and Ataturk's principles. Erkmen stressed that under his government relations with the Islamic world had reached unprecedented levels. Recalling that Turkey had been the first country to stand against Israel's decision on Jerusalem, Erkmen said that the government's stand on Afghanistan and Iran had been in keeping with Turkey's traditional foreign policy principles. Erkmen said that allegations leveled in the intepellation were without foundation.

After discussions on the motion were completed, a vote was taken in the National Assembly. In accordance with a decision of the parliamentary consultative committee, it was decided to include the discussion of the motion in the agenda of the assembly on Tuesday, 2 September.

As can be recalled, according to the constitution censure motions which members of the parliament will submit for a vote of no confidence as well as a confidence vote which is to be requested by the Council of Ministers can only be voted upon after a full day elapses after the presentation of the motion. To provide for the resignation of a minister or the Council of Ministers, 226 votes are needed, which is the majority of the assembly.

BANGLADESH TRADE DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA261133 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 26 Aug 80

[Text] Official talks with the Bangladesh trade delegation headed by Jute Minister Habibullah Khan, which arrived in Ankara yesterday, have begun. The talks at the Ministry of Commerce began with a statement by Commerce Minister Halil Basol. Basol said that cooperation in various fields between two developing Muslim countries will be highly beneficial for both Turkey and Bangladesh. Basol recalled that the technical preparations for the development of relations have been concluded within the framework of the decisions made during the Turkish-Bangladesh Joint Trade Committee meetings held in Dacca in 1979. Expressing the hope that the guidelines for the establishment of a jute center in Turkey will be established during the talks to be held in Ankara, Basol added that the necessary effort will be exerted to secure the necessary financing for jute purchases.

Khan said that with the establishment of a jute center in Turkey, the country will be able to obtain the best quality jute under the most suitable conditions. Stating that Bangladesh did not desire the intervention of a third country in the trade relations between the two countries, Khan noted that they are open to all kinds of propositions aimed at developing relations between the two countries. He added that Bangladesh considered Turkey to be a friendly industrialized country and that every effort will be exerted to achieve concrete results in all issues to be discussed. After these statements, the official talks began between the Turkish and Bangladesh delegations. Khan called on Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen while the meeting of the delegations was in progress.

NORWAY

NATO STOCKPILING COMMISSION HOLDS FIRST MEETING

LD281047 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 27 Aug 80 p 8

[Text] The Bruland Commission, which will once again look into the question of the contingency stockpiling of military equipment for allied forces in this country, has so far held one meeting. It was an organizational meeting which took place on 23 July, Defense Ministry department chief Chris Prebensen announced.

"Information on the further timetable of work, the frequency of meetings, and when the next meeting is scheduled cannot be given at the present time," department chief Prebensen announced after talks with the commission's chairman, Under Secretary Bjoern Bruland.

Earlier announcements have stated that the commission will finish its work by January 1981 and Under Secretary Bruland announced, when appointing the commission, that "only when the Storting and the government have reached a final decision on contingency stockpiling will Norway be able to enter into agreements with other countries on such stockpiling of allied military equipment."

According to the commission's directives it is to evaluate how allied reinforcements in general can best complement Norway's national defenses and how contingency stockpiling of military material for reinforcements can best be organized within Norway's economic and security requirements.

The work of the commission has been organized into a governing group and a working group. The governing group consists of Under Secretary Bjoern Bruland, chairman; Defense High Command Chief of Staff General Sven Hauge; Defense Research Institute Research chief Ragnvald Solstrand; and Defense Ministry department chief Per Johannessen. The working group consists of Major-General Leif K. Lundesgaard, chairman; Major-General Fredrik Bull-Hansen, Commodore Jan Ingebrigtsen, Colonel Bjoern Frantzen, Colonel Rolf J. Kvaernes and Defense Ministry Office chiefs Jon Lunde and Monica Helgeby.

LIBYAN TROOPS LEAVE MALTA AFTER EXPULSION ORDER

NC281727 Paris AFP in English 1715 GMT 28 Aug 80

[Text] Valletta, Aug 28 (AFP)--Libyan soldiers and helicopters left Malta today after being ordered out by the Maltese Government yesterday in a dispute over oil drilling in territorial waters claimed by the two countries.

Malta ordered the expulsion of "all Libyans in uniform" in protest against Libyan actions, including the intervention of a Libyan warship, designed to stop drilling at an offshore oil rig 96 kilometers (about 58 miles) off the Maltese coast. The commander of the ship ordered a halt earlier this month in the work on the Texaco Oil Company rig, threatening the use of force if the rig operators did not comply.

The Maltese Foreign Ministry charged that Libya threatened Texaco with "serious consequences" and described Libyan actions as a violation of Maltese sovereignty. It also said Libya negotiated directly with the Texaco management and with a Libyan-based executive of the Italian firm operating the rig for Texaco. The firms decided on Aug. 22 to stop drilling.

Malta accused Libya of not respecting the agreement signed on May 23, 1976, in the presence of Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, calling for the resolution of such (?problems) at the International Court at [The] Hague.

POLISH AMBASSADOR BRIEFS GENSCHER ON DEVELOPMENTS

LD011346 Hamburg DPA in German 1120 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn, 1 Sep (DPA)--The Polish ambassador to Bonn, Jan Chylinski, today in a talk with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher thanked the Federal Government for Bonn's understanding attitude toward recent developments in Poland. Chylinski, at his own request, met Genscher for a detailed talk during which he briefed the minister on the developments in Poland and the aims and intentions of the Polish Government. According to the Foreign Ministry, Genscher once again expressed the great sympathy of of the Federal Government and the population of the Federal Republic for the events in Poland and recalled in this connection the 41st anniversary of the German attack on Poland on 1 September. Genscher said that all this is the reason for the great internal emotions and for the sincere feelings with which the Federal Republic follows the developments in Poland. The federal foreign minister also expressed the hope that the agreements now made between strikers and the government in Poland as well as their implementation might be the basis of a positive development for the benefit of the Polish people.

During the talk Genscher confirmed on behalf of the Federal Government the continuation of its policy of noninterference in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Poland. As a result of developments in the past few days the Federal Government feels confirmed in the trust it put in the will of the Polish people to solve its problems alone. Genscher here paid tribute to the "responsible contribution" made to this solution by the Polish people, the strikers in Danzig and other places, the Polish leadership and the Catholic Church in Poland. Moreover he underlined the Federal Government's desire to continue the policy of cooperation with Poland in all spheres and added that this also applies to the efforts by both sides to contribute to the policy of cooperation between West and East in Europe and in disarmament and arms control. Genscher in conclusion approved the proposal made by the new Polish Foreign Minister Josef Czyrek for a talk on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly session in New York during the 4th week in September.

Schmidt-Gierek Meeting Not Discussed

LD011506 Hamburg DPA in German 1432 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--The Foreign Ministry spokesman replied in the negative to journalists' questions today whether a new date for a meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Polish party leader Edward Gierek had been discussed during the meeting between Genscher and Polish Ambassador Chylinski.

GENSCHER URGES NONINTERFERENCE IN POLISH AFFAIRS

LD301202 Hamburg DPA in Germany 1047 GMT 30 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Holzminden, 30 Aug (DPA)--FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher issued an urgent warning in Holzminden today against any interference in Poland's internal affairs. At a rally to begin the Bundestag election campaign in Lower Saxony, Genscher told an audience of about 2,000: "We will do everything possible not to interfere regarding developments in Poland, and we expect the same from all other states." It is up to the Poles alone to bring about a solution to their internal problems. The foreign minister praised as exemplary the "responsible attitude" of the Catholic Church in Poland. In this context the FDP chairman emphatically supported a bank consortium's offer to grant a loan to Poland. This could make a contribution to lessening material need. He regretted that the CDU/CSU is standing aloof on this issue.

Interview on Detente Policy

DW011049 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1110 GMT 30 Aug 80

[Excerpts from reporter Kepper interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] After the events in Poland, political discussion in the Federal Republic is focusing on detente policy, the opposition in particular is maintaining the Federal government's detente policy is wrong. The reproach says roughly that this policy has supported the communist governments without helping the people there. Do you think it is necessary to reconsider the policy of detente?

[Answer] We agree with our allies that we must continue the policy of cooperation with East European states in the interests of safeguarding peace, but also in the interests of extending cooperation, and thus also in the interests of the people in Europe. I will never forget 13 August 1961 for the building of the wall; equally unforgettable was the helplessness of the then Federal Government. I think that a glance at other European states such as Hungary or Czechoslovakia demonstrates that the cold war of the time did not help to implement the desire for more freedom. In making a comparsion with the years 1980 and 1970, nobody can ignore that very careful developments have taken place in the states of East Europe, developments entailing more information for the citizens there, more freedom of movement for the citizens there, and more information forus on what was going on there. It is therefore not surprising that the citizens not only in our country but also in the East are concerned that the policy we have introduced will not collapse, that it will be continued and safeguarded in order to achieve a bit more freedom of movement, contacts and information, if I might put it that way.

[Questinn] So you maintain that the policy of detente does not rule out internal developments in communist states?

[Answer] No, on the contrary developments in the past 10 years demonstrate that it facilitates such internal developments.

[Question] Does the Federal Government still advocate a credit for Poland to be given by private banks? Will it continue to give federal guarantees for all parts of that credit?

[Answer] Mr Kepper, all of us, not merely the politicians but all the citizens of our country, are observing with great empathy what is taking place in Poland these days. We watch with great internal emotion because our fate is linked with that of the Poles because of our common history involving many horrible things. That may be the reason for this special involvement.

And yet we support utter restraint vis-a-vis developments there. The Polish people and their leadership must have the opportunity themselves to solve the problems in talks and negotiations,solve them in line with the wishes of the workers in Gdansk and their many colleagues, the desire for a bit more freedom and animprovement in their living conditions. If we can make a contribution to the improvement of material conditions, we must not hesitate to say yes, say yes like our partners in the European Community and the United States. We are therefore in favor of granting the credit that has been envisaged by a consortium of banks, with a 1/3 guarantee by the Federal Government. We want to help this way without interfering. We expect that all the other states will not interfere either in developments in Poland. Respect for the sovereignty of the Polish people must apply for everybody.

[Question] Do you think that the Polish events will influence the outcome of the 5 October elections?

[Answer] I consider it such a serious and grave event that we should not spend time on such speculations. We should all beware of seeing our reactions in connection with the election campaign, or even hoping that Polish events could become an election issue. I would like to advise some of our zealots to follow the example of the responsible attitude of the Catholic Church in Poland.

[Question] What effect will the events in Poland have on the relations between the two German states? After all, a top-level meeting had to be called off this week. Do you see the possibility, and the danger, of another, aggravated delimitation?

[Answer] We want to make every effort to prevent that. Nor did we say that we are canceling the meeting; what we said was that we want to postpone the visit in the interest of the visit's success. It is my impression that the GDR leadership, too, is interested in the continuation of the dialogue. We have to live up to our responsibilities as Germans in East and West to prevent war from emanating ever again from German soil. In our inter-German relations we have an instrument for exerting essential influence on the stability and security in Europe, and it is our responsibility to do everything in our power to bring the Germans in East and West closer together and to make partition easier to bear for them. Nobody should comment gleefully on the adjournment of the visit, it would be better for them to join us in our efforts to have this visit materialize hopefully in the not too distant future under conditions which actually will guarantee its success.

[Question] One of the critical subjects between East and West is the danger of an uninhibited arms race. This was already true before Afghanistan and before Poland. I would like to ask you about medium-range weapons. At first the Soviet Union did not want to negotiate on medium-range weapons in Europe, but it has been prepared to do so since early July, when the chancellor and you visited Moscow. Doesn't this in a way justify Brezhnev when he now urges Western answers to the Soviet readiness to talk? Will talks be forthcoming?

[Answer] Quite clearly, yes. After all, the Soviet Union took more than 6 months to react to our offer of negotiations in December. And I declared jointly with my U.S. colleague Muskie Tuesday that we desire the opening of the preparatory talks on the medium-range weapons as soon as possible. This is not only our view but the stance of the whole alliance, and all of us will do our respective parts to succeed in having these necessary and important talks take place as soon as possible. For the world is moaning under the burdens of armament, and the people in the Third World are going hungry. This is why we would like the United Nations to set up a register in which arms exports will be recorded so that people will see who delivers arms and who supplies civilian and peaceful goods. We want a register in which all the industrial states must state what their per capita expenditures on armaments are and what they spend on development aid per capita, so that the world public will see how each industrial state sets its priorities.

[Question] Just one more question concerning domestic policy. The FDP finds itself facing the question as to what it should do on the issue of the coal and steel codetermination. Now that you have talked with the top echelon of the industrial trade union for metalworkers yesterday, the question is whether the FDP continues to be against legislative settlements for the preservation of coal and steel codetermination.

[Answer] To begin with, it is our view that every effort must be made toward achieving an agreement between the Mannesmann Corporation and the Metalworkers Union. Secondly, we believe that in the event of legislative settlements, they must be attained without pressure. In that respect we are in full agreement with the leadership of the Metalworkers Union. And in the third place, it is generally known that in all our talks we proceed from the 1976 codetermination act which, by the direct election of the representatives of the workers and white-collar workers to the board of directors, has produced considerable progress along the lines of more self-determination for every individual worker and employee.

We talk of the mature citizen, but we must also see the mature economic citizen who knows how to take his own decision as to who will represent him best in the board of directors. He does not need any guardian.

OFFICIALS STATE VIEWS ON ECONOMIC AID FOR POLAND

Von Dohnanyi Remarks

LD291810 Hamburg DPA in German 1651 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] Mainz/Bonn, 29 Aug (DPA)--Poland's economic strengthening is not only in the Polish interest but also in the German interest. This has been emphasized by Klaus von Dohnanyi, minister of state at the Foreign Ministry, in an interview for ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG (Saturday edition) in Mainz. The German promise of a credit of DM1.2 billion is not a government but a private bank credit--something which is often forgotten. If the CDU/CSU union demands a halt to all economic aid for Poland, then this places a question mark over its alleged sympathy for the Polish workers, the minister said.

Strauss Opposition

LD291824 Hamburg DPA in German 1741 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 29 Aug (DPA)--CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss has spoken out against continued financial support of the Gierek government in Poland. "There is no sense in supporting the corrupt and bankrupt Gierek regime, resuscitating it artifically every 3 years through thousands of millions in credits from German taxes or savings," he said on ARD television on Friday. He would be in favor of aid, "but on the basis of improved freedom, more rights for the workers, more freedom for the workers, free trade unions, more prosperity for the workers or at least less want."

Politicians' Comments

LD011730 Hamburg DPA in German 1615 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Text] Darmstadt, 1 Sep (DPA)--In the view of Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff (FDP), no changes in economic relations between Poland and the Federal Republic will occur as a result of recent developments in that country. Speaking at an election meeting in Darmstadt, Lambsdorff expressed the hope today that the DM1.2 billion bank credit for Poland will be upheld. He described as "irresponsible and stupid" the proposal by the Union's candidate for chancellor, Franz Josef Strauss, whereby the Federal Republic's plans to guarantee a third of the loan should be made dependent on political demands to the Polish leadership. "This would place the Polish people's breadbasket even further out of their reach," said the minister.

Schleswig-Holstein's minister-president, Gerhard Stoltenberg (CDU), in a DIE WELT interview advised on the other hand that credit for Poland should not be paid until there had been a positive improvement in the internal situation there. Stoltenberg also said that the granting of German credits to Eastern bloc states should in future be linked to "certain internal progress" in these countries. A continuation of Polish contacts and economic relations with the East is necessary in the interests of peace. The criteria for this, however, should be drawn up afresh.

Horst Ehmke (SPD), foreign policy spokesman of the SPD Bundestag group, in an interview for BILD ZEITUNG, stressed that the Federal Republic could now help Poland with a continuation of the policy of detente and the promised loans.

Proposals for helping Poland with a short of "Marshall Plan" from the European Community, in Ehmke's view, should not be publicly discussed "as long as Poland has not approached us on this subject." "The West should certainly consider what else it can do," said the SPD politician.

POLISH SETTLEMENTS WELCOMED BY OFFICIALS, PARTIES

LD311624 Hamburg DPA in German 1459 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 31 Aug (DPA)--The SPD has taken note of the agreement in Poland with great relief and satisfaction that good sense and sense ofof responsibility have prevailed on the part of all concerned in, and affected by, this conflict. This was stated by SPD spokesman Lothar Schwartz today. He added that the strikers, the government and the leaders of the Catholic Church in Poland have rendered an invaluable service to their country and Europe. The SPD is convinced that this conclusion of difficult events, watched worldwide with concern and suspense, would not have been possible without the policy of detente and the ensuing state of relative stability in Europe.

Brandt Praise

LD311107 Hamburg DPA in Geman 0958 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn-Hanover, 31 Aug (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has noted the current events in Poland with satisfaction and relief. According to the SPD press service, he said at a DGB rally in Hanover on Sunday: "We have witnessed with fear and hope, with deep inner emotions, how Polish workers courageously, but also with admirable maturity, rose up and insisted on their rights." It seemed that agreement is near. Brandt spoke of the discipline and willingness to compromise of those involved--the strikers, the government, but also the Catholic Church--which has led to success. This could bring great happiness "for the Polish people and for others."

"I, together with others, hope sincerely that the solution found now will lead to genuine reforms and does not represent merely the postponement of a conflict," Brandt said. The SPD, he said, is following with great interest "how in a communist-governed country such as Poland a bit of self-government is being realized." He stated that the policy of cooperation and reconciliation with the East European peoples would have to be continued unswervingly.

CDU's Kohl Statement

LD011130 Hamburg DPA in German 1005 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn--According to Chairman Helmut Kohl the CDU welcomes the nonviolent settlement of the strike in Poland. Kohl stresses in a statement published today that the CDU sees here a first hopeful attempt by a communist government to solve internal conflicts which have broken out into the open through constructive agreement and not through force. The credit for this happy exemplary outcomes goes primarily to the Polish workers who defended their just demands with courageous determination and impressive deicipline.

Kohl said the CDU hopes that the agreements made will now be realized with the same insight and with the same courage by all concerned. The recent threats from the Soviet Union and the completely superfluous advice to Poland from the GDR represent a dangerous interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign state which only impede the solving of the problems. The Soviet leadership should finally understand that economic prosperity and stability in social policy could be ensured only by internal reforms and more freedom.

CDU, SPD Spokesmen

LD311407 Hamburg DPA in German 1156 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--CDU Bundestag Deputy Alois Mertes, foreign policy expert of his group, has said that economic aid and other shows of solidarity with Poland will have to become part of a comprehensive peace strategy by the West. In an interview for DPA, Mertes said in Bonn on Sunday: "This also includes a common assessment of the events in Poland and their effects."

The SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski said on Sudwestfunk on Sunday that there is full agreement in the West that, in this difficult situation, efforts will have to be made to be of help to the Poles. This is also in the interest of the striking workers who on their part have spoken out in favor of economic support for Poland and against boycott measures.

TU LEADER EXPRESSES SUPPORT FOR POLISH WORKERS

LD311402 Hamburg DPA in German 1219 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Text] Stuttgart, 31 Aug (DPA)--Heinz Oskar Vetter, chairman of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB), today expressed the DGB's sympathy with the Polish workers. In an interview for Suddeutsche Rundfunk the DGB chairman said that if the Polish workers were to succeed in dissolving the structure of the present employees' organization and making at least approximately a large step toward free trade unions "then we shall do everything in order to support them."

Vetter added: "We could only congratulate the Polish people if that were to come about." The DGB chairman underlined that in the Poland of the postwar period there have never been free trade unions.

EGYPT'S MUBARAK ARRIVES, MEETS WITH LEADERS ON MIDEAST

LD291206 Hamburg DPA in German 1032 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 29 ug (DPA)--Current developments in the Middle East will be the main subject of the talks for which Egyptian Vice President Mubarak arrived in Bonn today. Mubarak was welcomed at the airport by Federal Foreign Minister Genscher. Afterwards the two politicians met for a first exchange of views.

Comments on Palestinian Self-Government

LD292312 Hamburg DPA in German 2237 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--In the opinion of Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak, the Palestinian's right to self-determination is thoroughly compatible with Israel's security requirement. Mubarak said at a dinner on Friday night in Bonn given by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher that future self-government by the Palestinians on the West Bank of the Jordan and in the Gaza Strip had to have far-reaching powers at its disposal, and "completely replace" Israel's military government.

Mubarak regretted that the actions and remarks by Israel in the past months has been "rather negative." All nations had rejected Israel's recent decisions on Jerusalem and on the settlement policy. Egypt would, however, continue to pursue the aims established at Camp David.

Meeting With Genscher

LD291744 Hamburg DPA in German 1507 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 29 Aug (DPA)--Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak expressed his satisfaction on Friday that the Europeans intend to play a role in the search for a peace settlement in the Middle East. After a talk with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher at Gymnich Castle near Bonn, Mubarak told journalists that Egypt welcomes the EC's Middle East declaration made in Venice last June. The vice president expressly thanked the federal republic and its responsible politicians for the great understanding that has been shown for the Egyptian attitude.

Concerning the interruption of the autonomy negotiations, Mubarak said that the atmosphere created by Israel on account of the Jerusalem bill, the settlements on the West Bank and the activities in (?southern) Lebanon, made it rather difficult for Egypt to continue these negotiations. Furthermore, too much should not be expected from the United States during the present pre-election period. On the other hand, the path ushered in by Camp David will have to be continued. Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin should remove the obstacles which he has created.

Genscher praised the "courageous move which showed the way" which was made by President Anwar as-Sadat, and expressed the hope that the process thus launched may be crowned by success. On this Bonn and its "American friends" are in agreement. The foreign minister described it as significant that Mubarak gave him an assessment of the situation from the Egyptian viewpoint following the latest exchange of letters between as-Sadat and Begin and the promulgation of ther Jerusalem bill.

According to its vice president, Egypt does not aim at delaying the autonomy negotiations, but rather it would like to see a solution in the shortest possible time. However, after 30 years of efforts it seems impossible to settle everything now "just by pressing a button." The process is being delayed not only by Israel but also by certain Arab states. So far none of them has advanced an alternative to Camp David. Also at the Arab summits in Baghdad and Tunis no concrete and realistic proposal was worked out. Egypt would be prepared to examine any such proposals and possibly agree to them.

During a dinner in honor of Mubarak, Genscher said that Europe is determined in its willingness to participate in a system of concrete and binding guarantees, thus making a contribution toward creating a just and permanent peace in the Middle East. "We are in favor of a comprehensive peace settlement" the foreign minister emphasized. "Therefore we have always spoken out against a policy of faits accomplis." In order to create such a comprehensive peace order (words indistinct) of the Arabs is essential. The Egyptian vice president will be spending the weekend in Baden-Wuerttemberg and returning to Bonn on Monday where he will be having talks with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and be received by Federal President Karl Carstens.

Talks with Carstens, Schmidt

LD011512 Hamburg DPA in German 1444 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn--Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak had talks today with Federal President Karl Carstens and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn on the possibilities of finding a solution of the Middle East conflict. Mubarak already had an extensive discussion on this subject on Friday with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. He spent the weekend in Baden-Wuerttemberg. Mubarak expressed himself in favor of Europe playing an active role in the efforts for a peace settlement in the Middle East and welcomed the European Community's Middle East statement which was adopted in Venice in June. He repeatedly thanked the Federal Republic and those politicians responsible for the great understanding shown to the Egyptian stand.

Mubarak, who is Anwar as-Sadat's deputy, made it clear in Bonn that Egypt sees no other way to peace than that embarked upon in Camp David. The other Arab states, which also have a critical attitude toward the Egytpian-Israeli talks, have themselves been unable to produce any alternatives or concrete proposals at their summits in Baghdad and Tunis.

Mubarak's talks in Bonn show that Cairo apparently expects a delay in the process of negotiations until the U.S. elections in November and also because Israel has created serious obstacles from the Egyptian point of view with its Jerusalem bill and statement policy.

Further on Schmidt Meeting

LD012316 Hamburg DPA in German 2030 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn-- Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak met with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt for more than 1 hour during his visit to Bonn today in which he briefed him on Egypt's position in the question of the autonomy negotiations and peace efforts in the Middle East. According to the Federal Press Service, Mubarak also welcomed the Federal Government's stance and that of its European partners on the Middle East issue as reflected in the European Council's statement of last June.

Federal Chancellor Schmidt apparently expressed concern at the lack of progress in the talks on Palestinian autonomy and underlined the dangers arising from this for the development in the Near and Middle East.

SPD OFFICIAL SEEKS RESOLUTION OF HOSTAGE ISSUE

LD311356 Hamburg DPA in German 1154 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 31 Aug (DPA)--SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski has stated his willingness to contribute toward solving the hostage issue in Tehran. In an interview for Sudwestfunk he said on Sunday: "I am trying to be of help by any means at my disposal." Asked whether new moves are underway concerning the hostage problem Wischniewski referred to the formation of the government in Iran. Many who have hitherto been interested in a solution will probably no longer play a role in the next government. "We shall have to see how the new people think about this question," Wischnewski said. "I see my main task in helping our partner, the United States, in solving this problem whenever there is an opportunity, with all means at my disposal."

According to Wischnewski the hostage question is not only straining relations between the United States and Iran, but also world politics, since every occupation of any embassy and any taking of hostages are destructive to international cooperation. Apart from this, Wischnewski did not refute the remark made by the interviewer that he recently had a meeting with Komeyni's son-in-law.

POPE, VATICAN OFFICIAL MEET JORDAN'S KING HUSAYN

AU011620 Rome ANSA in English 1605 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Text] Castelgandolfo, 1 Sep (ANSA)--King Husayn of Jordan met today with Pope John Paul II at the papal summer residence in this hilltop town thirty miles south of Rome. The sovereign, who was accompanied to Rome by his wife Queen Nur, had a 30 minute talk with the pontiff. This was the Jordanian monarch's second papal visit. He was received at the Vatican by Pope Paul VI in April 1978.

Husayn was welcomed at the Rome airport by Interior Under-Secretary Angelo Sanza, by the Jordanian Ambassador to Italy Sulayman ad-Dajani, by Archbishop Coppa and Msgr. De Luca. After meeting with the Pope, Husayn was received by the Vatican Secretary of State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli for another long talk. Vatican sources did not disclose the topics discussed in the two encounters.

FOREIGN MINISTER COLOMBO PLEDGES AID TO POLISH ECONOMY

LD312240 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2200 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Text] The position of the Italian Government was expressed by Foreign Minister Colombo shortly before he left for Tunisia. The achievement of a self-managed trade union by the Polish workers, Colombo said, takes it place among events of historic importance precisely because it has taken place in a regime lacking political pluralism. Italy, he said, will participate with the other European countries in initiatives in support of the Polish economy so as to contribute to the stabilizing of the gains of the working class.

TRADE UNION DELEGATION NOT ALLOWED TO MEET POLISH STRIKERS

LD312045 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0600 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Text] The delegation from the CGIL-CISL-UIL [Italian General Confederation of Labor-Italian Confederation of Workers Unions-Italian Union of Labor] Federation now visiting Poland has failed to receive permission to leave Warsaw to meet the striking workers in Gdansk. Yesterday the Italian delegation met the Minister of Labor in order to discuss the situation, but without result. [passage indistinct]

Expression of Satisfaction With Accord

LD312047 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Text] The delegation from the CGIL-CISL-UIL Federation which visited Poland last week in order to express the solidarity of Italian workers to Polish workers has returned to Rome. In a communique issued in Warsaw before their return the Italian trade union representatives expressed their satisfaction at the conclusion, defined as of historic importance, of the struggle of the Polish workers which raises important possibilities of democratic development of the country.

CHIEF OF STAFF EVREN CALLS FOR END TO MARTIAL LAW

TA301332 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Aug 80

["Message" issued on the occasion of 30 August Victory Day and Armed Forces Week by Gen Kenan Evren, chief of the general staff--recorded]

[Excerpts] Dear citizens and heroic comrades in arms: We have reached the 58th anniversary of our great victory which heralded the rebirth of our great nation and which gave birth to the Turkish Republic, through the path illuminated by our lofty leader, Ataturk, and we are determined not to make any concessions from his principles. I congratulate our nation and the Turkish Armed Forces.

I would like to stress that priority should be given to developing our national war industry in order to defend the Turkish Armed Forces from the adverse affects faced by countries dependent on foreign countries or in order to minimize these adverse affects. Unfortunately, the buildup of the domestic war industry launched by the farsighted Ataturk has not been maintained with enthusiasm. The Turkish Armed Forces are currently paying a heavy price for the neglect and mistakes that slowed down and even halted this industry. The dauntless fighters of the most heroic and strongest army in the world are expecting to receive the necessary arms and equipment--of which they shall make the best use--from the peerless intelligence and expertise of the nation instead of securing it from foreign countries through endless difficulties and high prices.

The Turkish Armed Forces are fulfilling their martial law duty with loyalty and courage day and night at the expense of being kept away from its primary duty in order to insure the happiness and tranquillity of our nation. However, we believe that the martial law, which has been in effect for almost 2 years, should be lifted as soon as possible in order to eliminate the adverse affects it has caused--even though minimal--within the units despite all efforts to insure that training and fighting duties not be affected. Despite our numerous appeals for a return to the normal order through suitable legal measures, we observe that current laws do not enable such a return and we believe that new legal arrangements are necessary. However, the efforts we have exerted to pass the bills increasing the authority of the martial law commanders, which will at least solve some of their problems, have unfortunately not yielded any results. Since, on the average, for 1 out of every 2 years martial law has been in effect in Turkey during the last 20 years, we believe that the reasons for this should be well analyzed and a solution sought.

We also believe that finding a solution is the duty of the Grand National Assembly. Our nation is deeply grieved over the fact that the assembly has been incapacitated for months and that they have been unable to fulfill one of their most important duties, namely, the election of a president. While this is the case, the fact that the maintenance of peace and tranquillity in the country is solely expected from the martial law commanders and the fact that they are blamed for the failure to achieve this in a short time is not compatible with common sense and justice. As a matter of fact, in countries in which anarchy prevails, as is the case in our country, struggles against anarchy are waged by the nation as a whole and only then can success be achieved.

Despite the fact that our history is full of beautiful examples of unity and solidarity, today, unfortunately, we only ask for such unity without being able to attain it. In addition the weakness of the state authority creates an atmosphere that is conducive to the development of anarchy and terror. The old system in which the pupil feared his teacher, the culprit the security officer and the son his father has now been turned upside down. It should be kept in mind that the citizen wishes to observe the effectivness of the state authority and the early punishment of the culprits. It is only then that the citizen can trust his state and extend aid and the desired unity achieved.

This ferocious anarchy created by the slaves of deviant ideologies, instead of collective efforts to eliminate the current economic crisis, cannot solve any problems. It can only serve wicked goals aimed against our unity. The traitors lacking any comprehension who perpetrate anarchy in a bid to destroy the unity of the nation and democracy through the chaos they want to create in the country will receive the punishment they deserve. They will perish under the crushing fist of the Turkish Armed Forces as has historically been the case.

EVREN QUESTIONS ERBAKAN'S REMARKS ON VICTORY DAY

NC020828 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 1 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Chief of the General Staff Gen Kenan Evren replied to a statement by NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan in which he had said "we are neither against nor on the side of 30 August [Victory Day], but right inside it."

General Evren said: "One cannot be in it through just talks."

Gen Kenan Evren made this disclosure to the ANATOLIA AGENCY correspondent: "It is not enough to just say 'we are in it.' NSP leader Erbakan must prove with his actions that he is in the 30 August Victory Day."

TERCUMAN Editorial

NC020824 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 31 Aug 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Evren's Question to Erbakan"]

[Excerpts] The RPP is playing with fire. It is impossible to interpret otherwise the bargaining it is conducting with the NSP as to whether Erbakan will be the prime minister or the deputy prime minister in a coalition government. Those who are engaged in forming a coalition government with the NSP should make a careful evaluation of Chief of the General Staff Evren's statement yesterday.

General Evren asked: "Is Necmettin Erbakan against 30 August [Victory Day] or not? I want to know. The chief of the general staff wants to know."

What does it mean to be against Victory Day? This is a very comprehensive question, for 30 August concerns not only Ataturk and his reforms, but it concerns our armed forces and our republic as well. As the NSP leader has made it a habit to stay away from the 30 August Victory Day celebrations and other ceremonies held at the Ataturk Mausoleum, Chief of the General Staff Gen Evren has been prompted to express his serious misgivings and concern. It should be noted that Evren did not say: "I am personally asking Erbakan." He told journalists "it is the chief of the general staff who is asking."

The chief of the general staff is the head of the Turkish Armed Forces and the authority at the top who speaks on behalf of the Turkish Armed Forces. It is a tradition with the armed forces to think deeply, to choose words carefully and to select the proper time and place before saying something. They speak for a purpose.

We believe that Evren did not utter those words in a fit of anger. He chose the time, the place and the target before saying what he said. It is thought provoking that he should address himself to Erbakan at a time when a bargain is in progress, and probably nearing an end, as to whether he would become the prime minister or the deputy prime minister. We believe that Evren has defined a specific attitude on behalf of the armed forces.

We wonder whether the RPP administrators have received the message being conveyed in the words of General Evren and whether they have made the necessary and realistic evaluation of that message.

We hope they have done so. We hope they are not under the impression that General Evren's words were the outcome of a sudden outburst. We also hope that they will not think that Erbakan's statement to the ANKA News Agency in which he said: "We are neither against nor on the side of 30 August: We are right in it," will be easily forgotten.

Evren's attitude is a serious and weighty warning. As to Erbakan's reply, the RPP administrators are grossly mistaken if they think that this situation will be taken lightly. Although Erbakan said: "We are neither against nor on the side of 30 August; we are in it," he has been unable to explain why he has stayed away all these years from the 30 August ceremonies held at the headquarters of the chief of the general staff and from the ceremonies held at the Ataturk Mausoleum.

Why indeed? This is really what Erbakan should explain. The explanation might be that in a democratic government every political party can come to power. This is true. However, in a democracy a government is formed in accordance with the constitution. Political parties are inalienable elements of this constitution. Political parties can become the governments of our republic and state only on the basis of those principles defined by the constitution.

The protection of the republic against those who contravene these principles is a legitimate duty. We hope that the act of protecting the republic does not have to be extended beyond this stage of warning. We also hope that those who play with fire will not intensify their provocations.

HEROIN ACCUSATIONS AGAINST ERBAKAN DAMAGE NSP-JP RELATIONS

NC301603 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 29 Aug 80 p 4

[Excerpts] Ankara (Special)--It has been reported that the NSP party is determined to vote the JP government out of office and that it is already engaged in drafting an interpellation for this purpose. It has been learned that the NSP is continuing to bargain with the RPP to form a government and that Erbakan has decided not to insist on a formula that would proclaim him prime minister. He is quoted as having agreed to form a government under an impartial prime minister.

As is known, accusations against Erbakan regarding his involvement in a heroin smuggling affair have extensively damaged NSP-JP relations. The NSP administrative council has alleged that these accusations were fabricated by the JP.

The NSP presidium carefully examined the accusations against Erbakan regarding his involvement in the heroin smuggling affair yesterday and the day before, and it has tentatively decided to vote the JP government out of office. However, a definite decision will be taken on Monday, when the NSP Administrative Council meets. This adjournment until Monday is attributed to NSP members who are JP sympathizers. Reports say that about 10 National Assembly deputies of the NSP parliamentary group are in favor of toppling the JP government and cooperating with the RPP.

On the other hand, NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan has asked the prosecutor's office to initiative inquiries as soon as possible concerning the allegations that he and a colleague of his were involved in a heroin smuggling case. Erbakan informed the prosecutor's office that he would not resort to his parliamentary immunity, which is his legal right, so that the inquiries could be conducted as quickly and as fairly as possible. Erbakan added that when the inquiries were completed, he would take legal action against those leveling the accusations.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

THORN CANCELS ISRAEL VISIT DURING MIDEAST TOUR

NC291727 Paris AFP in English 1724 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] Luxembourg, 29 Aug (AFP)--Gaston Thorn, president of the European Community Council of Ministers, announced today that he would not be going to Israel as planned during his second round of talks with Mideast leaders.

Officially, cancellation of the visit was attributed to disagreement with the Israeli Government on an appropropriate date. Mr. Thorn reportedly had wanted to stop in Israel on September 2, while the Israeli Government said that the visit should take place at a later date.

Mr. Thorn, who left for Cairo today on the second leg of a tour of Mideast countries, had planned to return to Israel with the specific intention of meeting with Palestinian leaders from the occupied territories.

Speaking with newsmen here during a brief stopover between his return from New York, where he attended the United Nations General Assembly special session, and his departure for the Egyptian capital, Mr. Thorn said that his Mideast mission was aimed at explaining that "the European position is independent."

He said that the European move in making contact with the Mideast was in no sense an attempt to compete with the United States Camp David initiative.

FRANCOIS-PONCET PRAISES POLISH SETTLEMENT

LD012126 Paris Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs, Jean Francois-Poncet, was the guest of Antenne-2 Television this evening. Commenting on the Polish problem the minister recalled that the French Government hoped that a political solution to this dispute would be found within the ranks of the Polish people. This hope has been upheld, the minister noted. The difficulties have been overcome through dialogue and the path of agreement. France expresses satisfaction and rejoices over this, he said.

FRENCH-BANGLADESH AGREEMENTS ENVISAGE NUCLEAR AID

LD292122 Paris Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] The president of Bangladesh has been on a visit to Paris. Three agreements were signed between Presidents Ziaur Rahman and Giscard d'Estaing. As a corollary to these agreements France envisages helping Bangladesh technically in nuclear matters, which should enable Bangladesh to acquire a reactor necessary for it to complete its first atomic power station, which is to be constructed within the next 4-5 years.

MALTA

FOREIGN MINISTRY ISSUES STATEMENT ON DISPUTE WITH LIBYA

ID301750 Valletta Radio Mediterran in English 0700 GMT 30 Aug 80

[Excerpts] The Maltese Ministry of Foreign Affairs issued a statement on the oil dispute between Malta and Libya. The statement says that a few months ago the Maltese socialist government decided to start prospecting for oil in that part of the seabed which, according to the principles of the law operating in similar situations, belongs to the Maltese people.

Before the end of June 1980 Libya had agreed to go to the International Court in accordance with the agreement signed in 1976. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs said that in the circumstances the Maltese Government ordered Amoco and Texaco to start drilling of the ocean in accordance with the licence given to them in 1974.

On their part, the statement continued, Texaco had contracted ENI, the Italian corporation, to provide a rig, the Saipem II, under contract to drill in the seabed 58 miles southeast of Malta. The statement said one should bear in mind that the nearest point between the Maltese and Libyan littorals is 196 miles.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs stated that last week, on 20 August 1980, Texaco informed the Maltese Government that a submarine and another Libyan warship were circling the rig, which was flying the Italian flag and manned by Italian, Maltese and American workers as well as some workers of other nationalities. At one time, the statement said, the Libyan warship delivered a message to the captain of the rig saying that the point was [word indistinct] in Libyan waters and that unless he stopped drilling operations and left the area the Libyan Government must reserve [as heard] even to use force against them. A similar order to the one issued to the captain of Saipem II was also sent to Texaco. The Maltese Government was also informed that the Libyan Government arrested the head of Saipem's (?parent) company in Libya, [name indistinct], and threatened him that unless his company moved the rig, the Saipem II, he would have to face the dire consequences.

The Maltese socialist government, says the statement, on learning that the Italian subcontractor had given in simply because there had been a threat, issued an order so that it would be made absolutely clear to the Libyan Government [word indistinct] that the Maltese Government viewed their conduct as an act befitting nonfriendly governments. That was the first step before expelling from Malta all the Libyan personnel who had been serving the Maltese people in a Libyan military uniform.

Meanwhile the Maltese Government declares to the world at large that the area of the seabed where the well is being drilled is under Maltese sovereignty and belongs to the people of Malta. Libya, by their actions in first concluding and signing an agreement to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice and by subsequently dishonoring the agreement with the use of force is a danger to peace in the Mediterranean. The Foreign Ministry statement continued that there remains the hope that Colonel al-Qadhdhafi is unaware of the events of the past week. However, any move now to settle the dispute and restore the former friendship between the two peoples rests with Libya to manifest by deed and no longer by words their regret for an action which should not have been reserved for one's greatest enemy.

The statement said that, just emerging victoriously from a bitter struggle to win their freedom, the Maltese people will not lose heart and will never surrender their rights because someone else is better armed and is wealthier.

The statement concluded that the Maltese socialist government is convinced that in this dispute, needlessly provoked by Libya, they have the full support of the people of Malta. The government will take all necessary measures, sacrifices so that the seabed between Malta and Libya will be divided equally and that history will not be repeated by those who act (cavalierly) as to certain laws.

UNITED KINGDOM

WHITEHALL CONFIRMS PLANS FOR COUP AGAINST IAN SMITH

LD011624 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1455 GMT 1 Sep 80

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Plans for an army coup against Rhodesian Premier Mr Ian Smith were put to the British Government in the summer of 1978, Whitehall confirmed today.

But British ministers, according to the sources, were not satisfied the coup would be supported or if it would lead to a peaceful outcome of the Rhodesian problem.

A fear in Whitehall was that the coup was intended to install "Smithism without Smith."

High-level officials said today that under the coup plan the Rhodesian Army was to reject Smith and the Unilateral Declaration of Independence of 1965.

The Rhodesian Army would then declare its loyalty to the crown and in return Britain would send troops in to back the white Rhodesian officers prepared to lead the coup.

Ministers understood that Lt Gen Peter Walls, commander of Rhodesia's forces, was behind the move.

But, according to the sources, it was sometimes difficult to establish just who was backing whom.

Ministers rejected the plan because of the risk that British troops would be involved in a full-scale war against the Patriotic Front guerilla movement.

Such a conflict, it was felt, would have weakened Britain's position in the Commonwealth and in black Africa.

A Foreign Office spokesman said today: "We have no comment."

Ian Smith was being particularly stubborn at the time of the plan over the holding of an all-party conference to discuss the Anglo-American move for a Rhodesian settlement.

In particular, he ruled out any discussion of the role of the security forces.

EUROPEAN PEOPLE'S PARTY DISCUSSES POLISH, WORLD EVENTS

LD011806 Hamburg DPA in German 1529 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Cologne, 1 Sep (DPA)--A 2-day congress of the European People's Party (EVP) opened in Cologne today with a declaration of sympathy for the Polish people. Addressing the 300 delegates of this union of Christian Democratic parties from the EEC countries, CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl said that the "proud and resolute Polish people" embodied the true Europe. Even after 35 years of Communist rule in Poland it has not been possible to create socialist man. The ideal of freedom was stronger than any tanks and bayonets.

The EVP president, Belgium's former prime minister Leo Tindemans, assured the Polish people of the "deep friendship" of West Europe's Christian Democrats. He expressed the hope that the Polish people and Polish leadership will find a solution to their problems "and that Poland will emerge strengthened from the present crisis." Tindemans said that the Polish people must regulate Poland's affairs themselves. Any other solution would bring unforeseeable dangers to peace and detente. Also present as guest at the congress was the President of the European Parliament, Simone Veil. She said that Europe will in the future be confronted with political and economic difficulties of unconceived proportions which can only be mastered in solidarity. Tindemans also expressed concern at what he called the critical international situation. So far the West has not been able to find a united approach on this. Although economic summits are held periodically, nothing has evolved other than an accumulation of good intentions. Developments in the field of defense are also cause for concern. Europe no longer has a common strategic concerpt. Tindemans strongly opposed a new neutralistic trend. "For some, Europe appears to be an alibi for weakening or dissolving the Atlantic Alliance."

Kohl unequivocally supported the Federal Republic's ties with the West. Only within a larger European framework could a divided Germany be reunited. The decision in favor of the West was a decision for freedom. That is why the union regarded freedom as having priority over unity. Kohl appealed for Europe to have its own security policy within the Atlantic alliance.

UN SEMINAR ON PALESTINIAN QUESTION ENDS

AU021435 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 30 Aug 80 p 5

[Text] The second UN seminar on the Palestinian question ended at the Vienna UN Center on Friday with the adoption of a final report. It names the following three principles as a basis for a peaceful solution of the Palestinian problem: 1) the impermissibility of acquiring territory by force; 2) the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homeland and to own property in Palestine; and 3) the Palestinian people's right to self-determination without outside interference and to national independence and sovereignty. A peaceful solution can only be accomplished within the framework of the United Nations and with the participation of all parties involved, that is, including Israel and the PLO. Separate agreements--such as that of Camp David--however, are detrimental to the process of peace, the report says.

The 5-day event, planned by the United Nations as a Western European regional seminar, was attended by representatives of 31 states, delegates of international organizations and by some 20 experts. In response to a question from ARBEITER-ZEITUNG as to why, with the exception of Spain and San Marino, not a single West European government was represented, Senegalese UN Ambassador Kane, chairman of the UN Committee for the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, replied: "We every much regret that fact, the more so since the seminar was organized especially for West Europe. UN Secretary General Waldheim had invited all UN members, primarily those in West Europe."

SCHMIDT SENDS MESSAGE TO POLISH PREMIER OFFERING BEST WISHES

LD021518 Hamburg DPA in German 1455 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn, 2 Sep (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has confirmed the Federal Government's intention to continue the joint endeavors for the further positive development between the Federal Republic and the People's Republic of Poland and between the two peoples. Schmidt in a telegram to the new chairman of the Polish Council of Ministers released in Bonn today adds that his best wishes "are extended for resolving the great tasks with which the Polish people and its government are faced."

GENSCHER HOPES FOR SCHMIDT VISIT TO GDR 'VERY SOON'

LD021136 Hamburg DPA in German 1113 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Text] Saarbruecken, 2 Sep (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) has expressed the hope that Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will soon visit the GDR. Speaking at an FDP election meeting in Saarbruecken today, Genscher said that it is hoped that "the federal chancellor's visit to the GDR will not have to be shelved" but that a new date can be agreed "very soon." Relations between the two German states are in any event very important to the political climate in Europe.

Genscher also warned against regarding the settling of the conflict between the workers and government in Poland as an end of the development. He stressed: "The developments will not end for a long time. It is now important to implement under difficult conditions what has been agreed." The Federal Government is determined to continue following the developments in Poland "with great restraint."

EAST BERLIN OPERA CANCELS VISIT TO COLOGNE

LD011244 Hamburg DPA in German 1025 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Cologne--The Cologne Opera House today said that the Komische Opera in East Berlin has called off its agreed upon and planned guest appearance at the Cologne opera scheduled for 7-11 October, referring to the "present circumstances."

CONSTRUCTION OF SOVIET STEEL COMPLEX DELAYED

LD011820 Hamburg DPA in German 1702 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Excerpt] Frankfurt--The German suppliers believe that the first stage of the Kursk high-grade steel complex in the Soviet Union will not be operational in mid-1981 as planned but in 1983 at the earliest. The reason given for the delay is that the Soviet Union concentrated all available resources this year on preparations for the Olympic games. Since the Soviet side is managing the construction and assembly work, the delay was not due to the German suppliers. The Korf group has already delivered 70 percent of the plant for the Midrex sponge iron works and the order is to be completed in the first quarter of 1981.

Owing to the delays in the assembly work, the Soviet side has put many of the parts for the installation supplied into storage. The order for the pelleting plant for Kursk was placed with Salzgitter and for the steel works with Krupp. It is understood that the negotiations with Mannesmann-Demag for the supply of the continuous casting and rolling mill plant have not been concluded yet.

NICARAGUA'S D'ESCOTO CONFERS WITH LEADERS ON AID

LD291256 Hamburg DPA in German 0957 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] Bonn, 29 Aug (DPA)--Their common concern at the developing crisis in Central America was voiced today by Federal Foreign Minister Genscher and his Nicaraguan counterpart, Miguel D'Escoto Brockman. At the end of his second talk with his visitor from Managua, Genscher told a Bonn press conference that the Federal Government's attitude toward that region is determined by respect for the right of self-determination and the principle of noninterference in the internal affairs of other states. According to Genscher, Bonn will deepen its cooperation with Nicaragua "in all fields" and continue its aid program.

The Nicaraguan foreign minister called for an intensification of relations with the Federal Republic, which supported Nicaragua in due and worthy fashion and thus made a valuable contribution to consolidating peace in his country. He invited Genscher to visit Nicaragua; the date will be fixed later. The final items on the programme of the Nicaraguan foreign minister and of Minister for Reconstruction Haroldo Montealegre, who is accompanying him, were talks today at the Federal Economics Ministry and a reception by President Carstens.

Both foreign ministers sharply condemned the military coup in Bolivia. D'Escoto denied that there is any dissension within the government junta. Cuba's influence in his country is within narrower limits than is often maintained, he said. The same applies to the USSR and the GDR. They, like any other state, have to respect Nicaragua's right of self-determination. The government in Managua has set itself a time limit of 5 years to fully restore the economy.

Genscher stressed that D'Escoto is representing a country which has won for itself independence, the right of self-determination and above all the road to democracy. He hoped, Genscher said, that Nicaragua would be able to complete its journey along this road and solve its massive economic and educational problems.

Genscher described reports that Washington had told Bonn of its uneasiness at the Federal Republic becoming active in Central America as being incorrect. Answering a question from a Nicaraguan television correspondent Genscher said that the Federal Government, on the contrary, wanted to use its good relations with Washington to bring Nicaragua and the United States closer together again.

D'Escoto accused the United States of constantly looking for pretexts to intervene in countries like Nicaragua. This included reports about the alleged growing influence of Cuba in his country. "Oppressive" regimes in Latin America need not fear Nicaraguan Sandinists or the Cubans--merely the wrath of their own peoples should their legitimate wishes not be fulfilled.

D'Escoto Remarks

PA300430 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1800 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Excerpts] FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto today expressed their joint concern over the critical situation in Central America and vigorously condemned the Bolivian military coup. After their second round of talks the two ministers told the press that the FRG wants to maintain and strengthen the present good relations and their joint efforts with Nicaragua in all areas in addition to continuing economic and technical aid.

D'Escoto said he hoped that his 2-day visit to the FRG will serve not only to reinforce bilateral relations but also to promote the dialogue between the industrialized countries and the developing nations. He stressed that Nicaragua is undergoing a period of profound change and outlined the literacy campaign and the decreases in the unemployment and inflation rates. He said that important Latin American countries such as Mexico, osta Rica, Panama, Ecuador, Peru and Cuba are supporting Nicaragua in its struggle to pull out of the current emergency situation which it expects to continue for at least 5 years.

Bonn newspapers said today that the postponement of elections in Nicaragua to engage in the country's reconstruction is not a reason to hinder the existing good relations.

D'Escoto met with FRG President Karl Carstens and held talks with leaders of the Christian Democratic and Social Democratic parties as well as with top Ministry of Economics officials.

Interview on Ties With FRG

DW011230 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1130 GMT 30 Aug 80

[Excerpt from reporter Gerhardt interview with Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto Brockman in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] You attack the United States because of what you term its interventionist tendencies. You know that the foreign policy of the United States is most closely connected with the foreign policy of the FRG. Does this relationship irritate you?

[Answer] Not at all. First of all, we do not attack the United States. We attack interventionism wherever it may come from. We do not differentiate in this respect. Well, it is true that the United States has adopted an interventionist attitude toward Nicaragua. As regards Germany, the situation is quite different. Germany always has respected us in Nicaragua. There is no doubt about that. The German people on the whole have shown much sympathy for our war of liberation in Nicaragua. There have been more solidarity groups for Nicaragua in this country than in any other country, I think. The German Government, too, has shown great sympathy, great sensitivity and understanding and helped us without any preconditions, without imposing anything upon us. This is an investment in democracy and freedom. I think they will always be proud to have helped us strengthen our development in Nicaragua.

Comment on Talks

[Bonn dispatch signed DC: "Blue-Eyed"]

[Text] Hans-Dietrich Genscher probably overrates himself a bit if he belives that he can quickly eliminate "misunderstandings" between the United States and Nicaragua. There are no "misunderstandings" between the world power and the small Latin American country, but Nicaragua feels threatened. And this feeling is based on bad experiences.

Genscher's colleague from Nicaragua recalled this Friday: The Americans invaded Nicaragua once before under the pretext of close cooperation with a communist country--at the time it was Mexico. Today the United States, he said, is seeking another pretext, for example the allegedly close contacts with communist Cuba.

As early as in March a member of the leadership of the "Sandinist Liberation Front" had made it clear in Bonn that the people of Nicaragua "are against the United States." After all, his country had been occupied by the Americans for decades, and thereafter his people had suffered for 45 years under the Somoza dictatorship supported by the United States.

These, after all, are not "misunderstandings" which a German foreign minister could simply eliminate in a talk with colleague Muskie. Despite his friendly feelings for the United States Genscher should not forget the imperialist adventures of the Americans.

BELGRADE, BONN EXCHANGE LETTERS ON POSSIBLE LOAN GRANT

LD021546 Hamburg DPA in German 1431 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 2 Sep (DPA)--Yugoslavia has approached the Federal Government with a request for a state-underwritten loan worth DM3 billion. A government spokesman confirmed today that there has been an exchange of letters on this subject between the Yugoslav head of government, Veselin Djuranovic, and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

According to this information, the question of "bilateral backing measures" will not arise until Belgrade's talks with the IMF and the World Bank in Washington on further loans have reached a conclusion. Belgrade has largely used up its credit possibilities with the IMF. The latest edition of the Duesseldorf WIRTSCHAFTSWOCHE reported that Schmidt's reply expressed the "basic" willingness of the Federal Government to support Yugoslavia's policy of stabilization as far as it was able."

STRAUSS OPPOSES CREDITS FOR EAST BLOC COUNTRIES

LD021556 Hamburg DPA in German 1528 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Text] Cologne, 2 Sep (DPA)--CDU/CSU chancellor candidate Franz Josef Strauss has come out against the granting of a DM1.2 billion credit to Poland at the present time. He said in an editorial interview with KOELNISCHE RUNDSCHAU/BONNER RUNDSCHAU that it is necessary to wait and see whether the leadership's agreement to the demand of the striking workers is a "huge fraud."

Strauss came out against the granting of unlimited credits to the Eastern bloc states and transactions with them which finance industrial plants through long-term credits, later to be paid for by products from factories erected with Western help. Strauss continued that the Soviet Union and the other Warsaw Pact countries must not be given free rein for continued, intensified rearmament through Western economic help.

Eastern rearmament is only possible through a constant exploitation of the population. In the view of the Bavarian minister-president, Western credits granted to Poland in any event end up "indirectly in Moscow," because the remaining Eastern bloc countries are only capable of fulfilling the tasks of the Warsaw Pact by means of Western financial injections. In the view of the CSU leader, credits to communist states should only be granted within the framework of normal trade relations. This means that neither interest subsidies are given nor that generous repayment conditions must be agreed.

STRAUSS INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN, CAMPAIGN ISSUES

DW010825 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 29 Aug 80 p 8

[Hans Riser and Dieter Schroeder interview with Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister-president and chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU, presumably in Munich--date not given]

[Text] SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG [SZ]: Even before Helmut Schmidt canceled his trip to the GDR, his talks with head of party and state Honecker, you declared that you would not go at this time. Does this mean that you do not reject inter-German summit meetings on principle but that you just would not have gone at this time had you been chancellor instead of Schmidt?

Strauss: I do not think much of trips to Moscow, to Rostock with a detour to Schorfheide, nor of Polish party chief Gierek's reception in the private home in Hamburg if it is all too obvious that the main purpose of this planning is to organize many television appearances by the chancellor with an impact in this summer period.

SZ: You mean in the summer season prior to the elections?

Strauss: The chancellor's public relations managers know perfectly well, of course, that the opposition during the parliamentary recess period does not have any comparable options of presenting effectively its own activities, arguments, and personalities on television, whereas any of these three meetings would have filled up the television for nearly a week with preparations, implementation, and subsequent repercussions.

SZ: The question was whether you reject such meetings on principle as well.

Strauss: I stated a few days ago that my political experience prevents me from saying that I would undertake such a trip at any cost or would desist from it under any circumstances. This depends on the timing and on the political circumstances, on whether successes or results along the lines of humanitarian gains for the people affected may be anticipated; on the other hand, such meetings must not provide dictatorial regimes with a democratic halo, nor must the true problems be glossed over.

I will give you some examples: 1. Schmidt has not spoiled anything in Moscow, nor did he accomplish anything; but by his visit he was the first to crash the moral quarantine of the Soviet Union after its aggression against Afghanistan. By the deceptive disarmament proposals he was given as a mailman--he called himself a mailman anyway--he considerably contributed toward diverting attention from the events in Afghanistan which are much closer and much more significant to us despite their geographical distance. 2. Had he received Mr Gierek in Hamburg he would have received the exponent of a corrupt, bankrupt, incapable, anti-worker system. By means of hard pressure brought to bear on the banks he even promised, concretely and bindingly, DM1.2 billion without giving it a thought that such a promise at best should have been a return concession for genuine reforms. As for the meeting with Mr Honecker, it was clear from the outset that not even the lowering of the travel age can be attained; much less could the basic issues of the death strip, the wall, the shooting order, the automatic firing devices have been brought up.

SZ: Is it possible to attend such a meeting only if these issues could at least be discussed if not abolished?

Strauss: I do not want to say that these four points contain everything and that there are no other points left. But nothing at all is taking shape except enhanced economic cooperation with obvious advantages for the GDR.

SZ: All other politicians and leaders of the communist world are hostile to the workers just like Gierek. Nevertheless you do not on principle reject talking with the gentlemen if the circumstances so warrant.

Strauss: When I had the opportunity during Leonid Brezhnev's visit to Bonn I had a very frank and open talk with him. He did not spare me anything, and I can say the same of myself, and he patiently listened to what I told him.

SZ: And you would talk with him again?

Strauss: I would talk with him again, though if I were chancellor I would not confront my allies now with faits accomplis which they then have to accept in a bittersweet way and whereupon they would have to promise in the well-known prattle of diplomatic language to plan on constructively reviewing the proposals that were carried over. I talked with Mr Kadar, I talked with Mr Ceausescu. Nobody should suggest that I do not talk with leaders of communist states on principle. All of them have their problems, not to say their skeletons in the closet.

SZ: The CDU and the CSU demand a new Ostpolitik. Your party friend Zimmermann has said that you, Mr Strauss, advocate an Ostpolitik without any illusions, worldwide detente without any leeway of aggression for the Soviet Union, and cooperation with the East which will serve the people and not the systems. Can you imbue such slogans with a specific content? Who, for instance, should be the partner in the East for such a policy?

Strauss: If I may proceed from an obvious example, a normalization between the Federal Republic and the GDR is not possible without the abolition of the shooting order and without the elimination of the automatic firing devices. So far minor, self-evident things which have been doled out from the rich treasury of robbed liberties and rights, with the proviso that they are revocable at any time, have been praised as great successes. This policy is too petty and fearful.

SZ: With whom must this be negotiated, Mr Strauss?

Strauss: What matters, on the one hand, is negotiations and/or talks but on the other, the manner of behaving as well, and last but not least a common strategy of the West to which the Federal Republic must make its contribution and from which the Federal Republic of Germany must not detach itself. You brought up the catchword detente. On the day the Moscow treaty was signed Willy Brandt rejoiced that the prerequisites had been created for changing the inhuman conditions along the inter-German border. More than 10 years have since passed and nothing, absolutely nothing, has changed even though the Bonn government sometimes endeavored in an almost servile way to elicit benevolence and recognition of its attitude from the other side.

The detente concept conceived, formulated, and practised since 1969 is at odds with historical realities. The question is not of being for or against detente--what reasonable politician could be against detente, anyway--but that detente should constitute a realistic attitude and not a pseudoreligious dogma. Detente should offer detailed solutions in which the give and take are balanced. Detente would really exist only, however, if the thinking in military terms was mitigated, the military potentials reduced, and military actions a la Afghanistan ruled out as a result. Detente policy has considerably narrowed down the leeway of the governments in Europe. Detente policy has triggered psychological effects which have largely destroyed awareness of the problem of our true historical situation and its jeopardy.

SZ: Would the strikes in Poland today be possible without the detente policy of the past several years?

Strauss: I think that I may be allowed to say, conversely, that the real weaknesses of communism and its regime of force would have come to light earlier without the illusory component of Western detente policy. And with that I arrive at an essential point of my analysis since 1969. In the second half of the sixties the time arrived for the Federal Republic of Germany to conclude treaties with Moscow, with Warsaw, and also with the state power and the authorities of the other part of Germany. Such treaties have their long preparatory phase and require long and thorough negotiations, just as they require a long period of seasoning. All these great diplomatic experiences have been thoroughly trampled on by the Brandt government with its negotiator Bahr to the acclamation by Herbert Wehner, Ehmke, and Schmidt. Little Bahr--I shall desist from saying a word about his potential motives and what he had in the back of his mind--the apprentice magician, who never knew anything about diplomacy, went to Moscow and, presto, a treaty was ready within a few weeks which should not have been obtained. Considering the weight of the problems between Russia and Germany the negotiations possibly should have lasted for years. Possibly they would have had to be interrupted several times as well.

During the time in which these clumsy, foolish, naive, blundering negotiating tactics began we were in brilliant shape economically. No job was influenced in any way by orders from the East nor dependent on them. Our energy supply was completely independent of the Soviet Union. We did not have any military problems whatsoever. We were able to enter into these negotiations not from a state of strength but from a state of calm, equality, self-assurance. Moscow and its allies had reason to end the cold war and to shift to coexistence and detente. It dawned on Moscow that the contentions by Khrushchev that the Soviet Union would catch up with the capitalists by 1980, bypass them by 1990, and bury them by the year 2000 were in increasing, haunting disproportion to reality. This is the real reason why Moscow has changed course, and not the foolish escapades of the Brandt governments and of Bahr, even though they were in the spirit of the time and at times in the maneuvering area of Mr Kissinger.

SZ: You said recently that you wanted to discuss the basic problems with the communist rulers, the basic liberties and human rights. President Carter also ventured such a direct attempt at the beginning of his term and failed. What options, even political or economic means of pressure, would you have for conducting such a dialogue differently?

Strauss: I do not want to criticize President Carter, especially since he is in his election campaign and because it is not up to us to level any criticism at the U.S. President. But I would like to point out in all modesty that after the Soviet attack on Afghanistan I did not have any reason to say that I had to change my view of the Soviet Union considerably in the past few weeks. I did not have to change my view of the Soviet Union. This is a statement of fact, not a moral judgment, not hateful, caustic slander. I am perfectly aware of the limits of such a policy. Besides, what matters here is not means of pressure, either. We do not have any military means of pressure, and if we did we would not use them. But what stands on the other side is the psychology of freedom and the advantages of West-East cooperation in the economic field which are important to the Soviet Union as well. This produces some leeway, narrow though it may be, but the Federal Government has failed to utilize this leeway for the benefit of freedom of the people living under those conditions.

SZ: How can one concretely help the striking Polish workers, help them from here?

Strauss: One cannot help them through subversive agitation, infiltration or pseudo-pararevolutionary activity. Moral support and economic support in the event of genuine reforms are significant ways to help. I do not want to say arms. Had the Polish workers demonstrated the same degree of hesitation, weakness and infirmity as the Bonn governments given their background and their ability to act, they would have never changed anything about their fate. I am not for ignoring realities, but if realities were in line with the interpretation of the firm Brandt, Bahr, Wehner and Schmidt, there would be no possibility at all of changing existing conditions because of the apparent hopelessness of their own situation and the overwhelming superiority of the policy apparatus and military apparatus against a background of Soviet tank divisions.

SZ: Do you consider it possible that the communist rulers would accept money if they fulfilled the demands of the workers?

Strauss: Would anybody have considered it possible that the Polish workers could rise after Bonn's gift of 1976 that ran into the billions, rise against their own government, against Edward Gierek--the close friend of Helmut Schmidt, as the latter said to me once--with demands not only for financial improvements but also for more political rights and freedom?

SZ: Does one thing really hang together with the other?

Strauss: Yes. I am not a maximalist; I do not say that everything must be achieved, that a liberal-parliamentary-democratic system could be introduced in Poland despite its remaining in the Warsaw Pact, or that a social market economy could be introduced there with its possibilities and achievements. But you know one of my answers: For me a democratic constitutional state, parliamentary democracy, social market economy and the federal system are an overall structure consisting of four modern, democratic and efficient construction elements; none of them can be separated out in Germany, and none of the three remaining can be separated out in other countries with other central structures without the two others collapsing.

SZ: Let us discuss domestic policy. I have noted that you have been trying for some time to establish a positive relationship with the German Trade Union Federation [DGB]. That is demonstrated by your extensive answers to the so-called DGB election touchstones as well as by your suggestion with regard to coal-and-steel codetermination rights involving the Mannesmann Firm. Is there more than election campaign tactics behind this?

Strauss: Behind this is my personal attitude. There is no need for me to struggle for a psychological understanding of the worker because of not coming from a family, an environment, surroundings and a background that did not understand the world of the worker. I stem from a simple craftman's family living in a workers' precinct in Munich, namely Schwabing.

SZ: We were discussing the DGB.

Strauss: It is not merely the DGB, it is a matter of legitimate problems, the legitimate problems and desires of the working people. It is nothing but political agitation and slander to try to depict me as an enemy of the worker and the workers class. The energy policy represented by me and my friends is an indispensable and irreplaceable prerequisite for a high employment rate in the eighties. The tax policy I represent, opposing the SPD with the demand for curtailing taxation in the lower and medium brackets, the demand with regard to so-called revenues, is positive for the workers. The difference between gross income and net income has nothing to do with a social state, it is negative with regard to efficiency and with regard to the workers.

The policy of systematically promoting investments in a dynamic market economy, a policy represented by me, is the only secure prerequisite, an indispensable prerequisite for growth, high work productivity, a certain welfare for the individual worker and most of all for his social security and a gross wage-oriented dynamic pension, which cannot be otherwise financed. I am for a codetermination right in accordance with its function, but I am very critical with regard to such demands as the 35-hour work week. Helmut Schmidt announces this at trade union congresses, telling entrepreneurs later on that he does not see an opportunity to implement that demand now. I have said to high-ranking trade union representatives that full employment is a matter for the state, the employers and of the working class, with responsibility being divided between the three.

SZ: You do not fear the reproach with regard to codetermination of forming a Strauss/Wehner coalition?

Strauss: That is an interesting idea, but a bit too grotesque. Mannesmann has been subordinated for decades to the coal-and-steel-pool codetermination right. For me there is not much of a difference between this right and the codetermination right according to the 1976 bill. On the other hand, however, this also means that I will not mount the barricades to declare today's formal right as irrevocable.

SZ: The CDU and the CSU always speak of the so-called pension cheating that took place 4 years ago. Aren't you also in danger of lying to the people if you envisage a return without limitations to a gross wage-orientated pension policy, telling mothers who do not work that they could become eligible for pensioning due to the time they spend on their children's education.

Strauss: In the CDU/CSU election campaign--this is my handwriting--I have not hidden or covered up priorities and conditions, I have much rather frankly formulated them. I give highest priority to the safeguarding of peace in freedom and to the necessary expenditures. The greatest social budget and the best pension will not help us any if the Cossacks come, quoting Friedrich Naumann. Second priority: We must create for ourselves economic independence and security through our energy and raw material policies. Nothing will work without these two prerequisites. The money for the social and social-political demands you have rightly quoted depends on the reestablishment of a state of high employment, which means full employment according to normal standards we have had since 1955 with slight changes. I have said this.

SZ: You promised maternity payments for mothers who do not work, plus education money until the child is 3 years old. Who is supposed to pay for that?

Strauss: Giving maternity payments to all mothers is a matter of justice and probably also of the constitution; the term of a career woman cannot be limited to workers and employees drawing wages. The amount will total less than 1 billion and can be financed in view of the annually growing volume of the budget if economic growth develops normally. But one must have the courage to curtail other things.

If you ask me concretely how the 4 pension years will be financed, 4 pension years for every child, I must remind you that I have made very clear statements in this respect. The typical example of greater financial burdens will appear about the year 2010. These women will then have become eligible for pensions due to the birth of their children. We now have a budget for war victims of about DM13 billion. The development of that budget was a social-political necessity and a moral duty vis-a-vis the war victims. By the year 2010 there will be no more World War I veterans and no widows or orphans eligible for support. The few World War II veterans still alive will be very old.

Naturally many people are giving some thought to that budget and what could be done with it. I am therefore warning against unravelling it. I say this by using a slogan that has a public effect, but I mean it seriously. The money the German taxpayers have produced for the liquidation of a death policy must be made available in the future for a policy of mobilizing life.

SZ: Two more questions about your situation as a candidate for chancellor. If one believes opinion polls, your chances are not very great of achieving with the CDU and CSU an absolute majority on 5 October in the new Bundestag. Do you feel today that your old figuring has been confirmed, namely that only the joint appearance of the CDU and CSU in the Federal Republic will offer a chance to replace the social-liberal coalition?

Strauss: It does not make sense to start this discussion all over again. The strategy you have mentioned, a strategy I have often discussed, would have called for the prerequisite of an agreement of the Union parties and their full cooperation on that basis. That could not be achieved and therefore I have not pursued these thoughts any further. I consider opinion polls with an arbitrary calculation in accounting for 20 to 25 percent of the undecided votes as so unreliable that a 3 percent margin exists there, as experience has shown. I have never cared very much about the pronouncements of Professor Noelle-Neumann or Professor Wildenmann. I never acted accordingly either. I have always taken care of the important and not of the allegedly important. The matter becomes dangerous when opinion poll experts introduce their personal animosities or sympathies in their analyses, if they want to achieve an effect with their publications which would not otherwise happen.

SZ: Mr Strauss, on the other hand, however, almost all opinion poll experts agree that a minority of CDU followers is irritated by your candidacy, that it is undecided with regard to its voting intentions, and that it possibly is inclined to abstain from the elections. Are you irritated by that, or do you think that all this is just a chimera?

Strauss: I do not consider this a chimera, but that is not my problem. The problem is whether a majority of citizens will understand that a change of the German political course is necessary, and why it is necessary. This election does not pertain to me, to my political career, my political wishes, my political dreams. I am the Bavarian minister-president, and I am happily willing to remain what I am. I have not been nominated because I am propelled by an unsatisfied ambition, but because I am honestly convinced that exceedingly dubious developments have taken place in the past 10 years, despite certain material achievements, developments which are the consequences of the domestic and foreign policies of the Brandt/Schmidt government.

CDU/CSU ISSUE JOINT PLATFORM PROGRAM

DW021213 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 2 Sep 80 p 4

[The "Mannheim Manifesto of the Union for Change in Germany," released by the joint CDU/CSU delegates convention in Mannheim on 30 September and intended as a platform for the current Bundestag election campaign]

[Text] I. The Political Change

1. We want to secure peace in freedom, in the alliance with the free world and against the power and domination claim of the Soviet Union. For the purpose of preserving peace and securing freedom for Germnay, friendship with the United States of America and the North Atlantic alliance remain indispensable.

We want to live in peace and in good partnership with our Eastern neighbors including the Soviet Union. In this our intention is to proceed from the treaties concluded, and we are receptive to fair cooperation on the basis of equality of give and take.

2. We want a Europe of political unity, historical responsibility, intellectual and political freedom, cultural blossoming, economic prosperity, social security, and personal responsibility, but not a Europe of the Communist and Socialist International.

3. We want good partnership with the developing countries but no planned world economy. The misery in many countries of the Third World cannot be eliminated by means of the export of totalitarian ideologies and arms but only by means of a development policy which will help them build up a modern, liberal economic and social system and which will make it possible for them to assume their place in the community of nations as equal and potent partners.

4. We must make efforts now for securing our energy and raw material supply. Only in this way can our economic future and our social peace be ensured. By halting the peaceful utilization of nuclear energy and by neglecting coal technology the SPD/FDP has increased our dependence on oil to the point of endangering our existence.

5. We will place the family at the center of our social and state order again. We will restore its independence and educational potential which have been weakened by the anti-family policy of the SPD/FDP. We will start a political and moral offensive on behalf of the family. The bonus for raising children, the consideration of such years spent in upbringing for retirement annuities, and partner pensions in that respect constitute part of our offers.

6. We must put into force again, and further develop, the social market economy as the economic and social system of freedom and social justice. We must put all state finances on solid ground again. It is necessary to put a stop to the increasing state indebtedness and the growing state quota. They constitute a fraud committed against the next generation. The exploitive tax and dues policy must be stopped. The Federal Government says: The Germans are lazy. We say: The Germans are diligent, but they are taxed too heavily by the SPD/FDP.

7. We will eliminate unemployment by improving the investment potential and the readiness to invest in the economy, strengthening the middle class, and by promoting the training and retraining of the workers and employees.

8. We must arouse all the creative powers of our people and promote them, so that we can continue living up to our task as a cultural nation and that our economy will remain competitive and our environment safe, or become so once again. In this spirit we will give the young new tasks and future prospects. Consequently our objective is the subdivided, modern school and not the Marxist egalitarian school. What we want is the humane school enabling the individual to perform but also educating them to take joy in life. We will devote special attention to scientific research as the motor of further economic development.

9. We want the liberal state to remain a state closely in touch with the citizen, a state comprehensible to the citizen, which is aware of its limits and which will not mistake bureaucratic tutelage for efficient administration. This is why we will muster full strength to enhance the scope of individual freedom and responsibility again vis-a-vis the increasing tutelage and a constantly more unbearable pressure of bureaucratization and centralization after a year [as printed] of FDP/SPD rule. The state and its authorities are there for the citizen, and not the citizen for the authorities.

II. The Spiritual Change

1. We offset socialist thinking and the socialist caretaker mentality with the readiness for self-responsibility and for individual performance, and we offset collectivist compulsion and state tutelage with civic freedom and personal initiative.

2. We seek the solidary concerted action of all citizens in the state, and we reject the ideology of a reactionary class struggle which splits up our people, fans conflicts, and destroys social peace.

3. We avow the family. It offers a sense of community and warmth. Children mean happiness and are not just a burden.

4. We insist that at a time in which the lack of content in life is loudle lamented, life be imbued with content and meaning again by our avowal and implementation of the values that constitute the precondition for man's life together: human fellowship, charity, ready involvement, loyalty, truthfulness, sense of community, awareness of responsibility and civic courage.

5. We want the young to have the chance to shape their future themselves without fear. By our example we intend to demonstrate the human and political superiority of our liberal-democratic state.

6. We will not permit a cultural-revolutionary revaluation and destruction of generally valid criteria. We openly advocate love for our homeland and for our people!

7. We will ensure that the liberal state remains a strong state for the sake of the citizen's freedom. Liberality never means capitulation to terror and violence and never means yielding ground to the enemies of democracy. The protection of the constitution and of citizens rights is the prerequisite for the human dignity and the freedom of the individual.

8. We do accept the challenge of putting up against all totalitarian ideas of our era, but above all against the most totalitarian system in world history, world communism, the strength of our liberal political ideas. The Union parties owing to their image of man are the only political force in Germany capable of doing this.

9. We avow the fundamental values of human life together, the directives of a policy which is living up to man's requirements, aware of the matters at issue and oriented by the reality and the future.

With all its power the Union will struggle for this political and spiritual change. All of Germany remains our fatherland. We have never sacrificed to momentary successes of daily policy the belief in the unity of our country, the hope for its recovery, and the claim for the German people's right to national self-determination, nor will we ever sacrifice them.

With Franz Josef Strauss at the head the Union will do everything in its power to ensure for our people peace and freedom in a future of human dignity. We will attain our goal if all citizens help us who advocate the same objectives. Freedom, solidarity, and justice--this triad determines our duty to our people. The challenge of our policy lies in the fulfillment of this mandate.

OPINION POLL VIEWS FUTURE EXPECTATIONS OF POPULACE

DW021138 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 2 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] Duesseldorf, 1 September--The Emnid Institute of Bielefeld was commissioned by the employers' association "Chemistry Work Group" in the middle of this year to conduct an opinion poll on the "expectations and fears of workers and employees with regard to the future." Some 2,006 persons were interviewed, representing the norm of the total populace of the Federal Republic. The Chemistry Work Group stated: "It indicates an optimistic approach in the populace to the future despite the economic setback that was in the offing when the poll was conducted."

The results of the opinion poll can be summarized as follows: 73 percent of those questioned consider their social security as sufficient; only 24 percent consider it as insufficeient. 73 percent of the workers and pensioners believe they have sufficient security. One notices that trade union members feel even more secure. 81 percent are content; only 17 percent have complaints. Young people up to the age of 19 and apprentices who are relatively little concerned by security problems interestingly enough assess it worse than other groups: 66 percent of the entire group consider it as sufficient, 38 percent and 37 percent respectively consider security as insufficient.

Those questioned ranked their professional careers and private lives in the following order:

1. Personal health (63 percent)
2. Stable prices (51 percent)
3. Job security (36 percent)
4. Higher income (35 percent)
5. Higher pensions and working in peace (30 percent each)

Points of the DGB action program were clearly considered as less important such as shorter worktime (15 percent); more protection against unemployment (16 percent); accumulation of property (16 percent); earlier pensioning (17 percent); less stress in the workplace (20 percent). The Chemistry Work Group says: "It has been demonstrated that the urgent demands of trade unions and DGB action and social programs are of secondary importance in the standard of values of the populace and the workers."

Some 70 percent of those questioned are "rather" or "very much content" with their present income; 28 percent are "little" or "not at all content." The highest percentage was achieved by those feeling content, namely 81 [as printed]. Independent entrepreneuers and farmers follow with 80 percent. The Work Ring maintains that German employees and workers apparently see no need to make up for lost ground with regard to their incomes.

Some 43 percent of those questioned believe they have secure jobs; only 8 percent believe that their job is endangered. The high percentage, namely 49 percent, who had no opinion or did not say anything results from the fact that about 50 percent were not employees. As expected government employees were those who considered their jobs as most safe: 88 percent. They were followed by professionals (68 percent of them considered their jobs as "safe"). A clear majority of laborers namely 85 percent, considers their jobs as safe, merely 15 percent consider them endangered. Despite the economic setback that was in the offing at the time when the people were questioned, the vast majority of the employees and workers are optimistic with regard to the future of their jobs.

Asked whether their jobs would be endangered by technical developments such as rationalization or computers, or by economic reasons such as lack of growth or lack of orders, 52 percent considered economic reasons as decisive; 30 percent named technical developments as a more likely factor endangering their jobs. Rationalization and new technologies played much less of a role as "job killers" in the opinion of those questioned than would have been assumed according to the public discussion taking place at present. A connection is much rather seen between economic developments and endangerment of jobs.

Some 38 percent of all those questioned consider the decrease of the population rate as dangerous; 33 percent see no danger; 28 percent are undecided. The decrease in the population is being viewed clearly differently by those younger than 29, by those with a high school or university degree, by state employees, FDP followers and inhabitants of North-Rhine Westphalia. Although 1/3 of them had no opinion, the majority believes that the decrease in the populace is not dangerous. The highest percentage of those holding this opinion is found among state employees, namely 45 percent.

COLUMNIST VIEWS BUNDESWEHR ENGAGEMENT 'EAST OF SUEZ'

DW021139 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 2 Sep 80 p 12

[Commentary signed Ein.: "East of Suez?"]

[Text] One single British press opinion is not yet the voice of England. Yet we should not simply ignore the suggestion of THE ECONOMIST. The influential economic magazine suggests that the Bundeswehr engage strategically "east of Suez" in order to support the Americans in defending the Gulf region. The United States at present is spending $5 billion for the development of a security zone in the Indian Ocean.

The Europeans, however, do not contribute a penny to the defense of that strategic area. So THE ECONOMIST concludes that London must do something as well as the Federal Republic. The magazine suggests a German contribution: We ought to build some oceangoing vessels, warships that will perform more than just the function of missile carriers or submarine chasers; they ought to be, say, small aircraft carriers or maybe larger combat units able to land troops. Is that asking too much? The NATO allies in the long run cannot leave the Americans alone in the Persian Gulf. But we must not therefore immediately fall back on the Tripitz.

PCF WELCOMES DECISIONS ANNOUNCED BY GIEREK

LD021055 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 26 Aug 80 p 7

[Excerpt] Yesterday PCF Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz made a statement on the situation in Poland to representatives of the press, radio and television at Place du Colonel-Fabien in Paris. The following is the text of his statement:

"You will not be surprised if I start by telling you that we pass no judgment on the changes made in the Polish party and state leadership bodies. This concerns the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] alone. We are too strongly attached to our independence and the principle of noninterference not to respect the independence of others.

"However, we were very interested to learn of the decisions announced by the PZPR Central Committee. As you know, these decisions relate to economic and social measures to be implemented with the avowed intention to pay more heed to the workers' and masses' needs. The decisions relate to an appeal for consideration of the trade unions' place and role, to ensure that they are the workers' real representatives. Preparation for the next trade union congress should give rise to a vast democratic debate on this question.

"While rejecting demands attacking socialism's achievements--the very foundations of the Polish nation's and state's existence--these decisions, presented by E. Gierek, are aimed at extending socialist democracy. We welcome them as positive. They correspond to the hopes expressed by the PCF through [PCF Politburo member] Charles Fiterman from the start of the strikes in Poland: that account be taken of the aspirations expressed by the striking workers, and that discussion and negotiation be held with the workers' representatives in an open, responsible and realistic spirit.

"Similarly we have frequently expressed the opinion that the trade unions should play a greater role in the socialist countries, and this opinion is confirmed by life itself. The PCF advocates trade unions which are independent from both parties and the state.

"In general we welcome any step toward greater worker participation in a country's affairs, and the extension of socialist democracy and self-management, because that conforms to our view of socialism and because it contributes to the development of the socialist society. In short, we feel that the implementation of the decisions announced should enable progress to be made toward a positive solution to the problems raised in Poland and toward socialism's advance."

Pierre Juquin Interview

LD021512 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Interview with Pierre Juquin, member of the PCF Politburo, conducted by Paris radio reporter Gilbert Denoyan--live in studio]

[Excerpts] [Question] Pierre Juquin, the Communist Party appears satisfied with the outcome of the events in Poland--you welcome the agreement reached between strikers and government--and reading an interview with Georges Marchais in this morning's L'HUMANITE one gains the impression that the French Communists wish not only for the economic and social development in Poland to continue, but also that it should be linked to Poland's democratic, socialist development. So, in connection with this statement by Georges Marchais, does it mean that you think, fear, or consider that other socialist countries are also likely, if no reforms are instituted, to find themselves in the situation we have seen in Poland?

[Answer] We are dealing with a real question, namely, Poland's problems, and I confirm what you have just said: To us the agreement that has been concluded is positive. We are very happy that the social conflict which Poland has experienced has reached this happy outcome, worthy of what must happen in a socialist society, namely, a discussion, a negotiation, a dialogue within the framework of responsibilities for social and democratic progress. This is the only valid course for a socialist country.

[Question] Very well, but one has had to wait for quite a few years because socialism in Poland has been in existence for more than 35 years--it has been progressing for many years, after all. Isn't there a question mark over the Polish Communist Party's actions during the past years?

[Answer] This is a question that is in fact being asked in connection with the events we have just seen. Poland has seen great progress, national progress and democratic progress, social progress and economic progress, but today Poland has generally to face up--as have other socialist countries it is true--to problems of two kinds: On the one hand, it is affected by the repercussions of the capitalist world's crisis, inflation and so on, and more strongly so, perhaps, than other socialist countries for various reasons but in particular due to the amount of credits it has drawn from various capitalist countries. On the other hand, it has to solve problems of an internal kind which themselves arise from its development. These problems are concerned with industry and agriculture.

[Question] This is all very well, but when one observers the movement of the Polish workers one sees that their fight has been for the right to strike, for trade union freedom, for greater freedom of expression, expression of every kind, for example television broadcasts in which the church can make its views heard in Poland. One observes that all these rights for which the Polish workers have been fighting have been present in the bourgeois democracies for many years. Isn't there a shortcoming here of the system which you advocate?

[Answer] One could say a lot about the true possession and exercise of rights in what you call bourgeois democracies and I would call bourgeois states. It is also true that the historical development in the various European countries, for example, has been extremely varied in the past 200 years. But I do not want to bypass the problem you have mentioned. In fact it indeed appears that in Poland there have been delays, insufficiencies, things that have not worked.

[Question] (?We look at Poland) because Poland will be the only communist country where it will be possible to have an independent trade union and have the right to strike.

[Answer] Yes, in fact these problems exist in a certain number of socialist countries.

[Question] In all socialist countries.

[Answer] In all socialist countries in very different forms and in very different stages of development. But our positiion on this is very well known. Everybody knows that we consider on the one hand that the democratic development of these countries...[interrupted]

[Question] Georges Marchais writes, by the way, that this does not apply only to Poland... [interrupted]

[Answer] Absolutely, and on the other hand [he says that] progress must be made, research is in progress, there are efforts...[interrupted]

[Question] Pierre Juquin, how far can this progress go without questioning the validity of the system itself?

[Answer] But this cannot question the validity of the system itself. This is the root of the question.

[Question] So why was it not done sooner? [passage indistinct] So as to help you to give a clearer answer, Pierre Juquin, when one looks at certain PRAVDA articles and also how certain Soviet leaders one finds after all some warnings in connection with the situation in Poland. [sentence as heard] Isn't there at the moment within the communist world--I put the question to you because maybe you are better informed than I--a fight between the hardliners and the more liberal side? One knows for example that in Poland the hardliners could well have won and intervention nearly could have got the better of dialogue. Isn't there within the communist world, as one can see perhaps within the French Communist Party today, a great seething of ideas on a certain number of things?

[Answer] Within the French Communist Party there is a great seething of ideas and these ideas go in the same direction. There is great unanimity, in fact an immense majority of French Communists are of the view that socialism in France will have to develop rights, increase freedoms and ensure that they are exercised. I have said before and nobody is unaware of this--I believe not even your listeners--that there are certain differences between us and our Soviet comrades and comrades of other socialist countries on these questions which we call the universal democratic component of socialism, in other words the necessity for socialist society developing in and through democracy, in and through the exercise of freedoms. It is understood of course that one also has to develop economic efficiency, one has to develop social progress, and that all this goes together.

[Question] I should like to put a question to you. I would like to have your view on the Romanian paper SCINTEIA, the organ of the Romanian Communist Party... [interrupted]

[Answer] Yes, SCINTEIA.

[Question] You pronounce it better than I do. It writes in connection with the Polish strikes, but maybe this applies to other countries as well: Strikes do not settle economic problems, they only make them more complicated. It is interesting that a Communist organ should write something like this.

[Answer] But it is quite obvious. There comes a time when the workers resort to it because it is the means to make their demands heard. People talk to us about the role of the trade unions. In our view, in socialist France, in a socialist country, the trade unions are not essentially there to act as management, they must not be the passive agents of the state, of the ruling power or of the economic leaders of enterprises. The trade unions are the workers' spokesmen; they exist to make their voice heard. By the way, these are ideas which you will find--if I may be allowed (?to give you a hint)... [interrupted]

[Question] Now you are seeking publicity... [interrupted]

[Answer] In the book by Georges Marchais published today and which you will find in the bookshops in a few days' time and which is entitled (?Hope to Those Present").

[Denoyan] Now, Pierre Juquin, you are adopting an entirely bourgeois attitude, you are engaging in publicity. Thank you.

JERUSALEM ISSUE DISCUSSED DURING HUSAYN'S MEETING WITH POPE

JN021136 Amman PETRA-JNA in Arabic 0945 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Text] Rome, 2 Sep (PETRA)--His Majesty King Husayn met yesterday with His Holiness Pope John Paul II at the papal summer residence in Rome. Their discussion dealt with all of the humanitarian, religious and legalistic aspects of the Jerusalem issue. His majesty presented Jordan's position on Israel's illegitimate measure annexing the city.

The king and his holiness the pope undertook a general review of developments in the Palestine issue and the principles that Jordan believes create the basis for a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East. These principles are an Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories, beginning with Arab Jerusalem, and recognition of the Palestinian people's right to determine their own destiny on their land in complete freedom.

His majesty the king asserted that the return of Jerusalem to Arab sovereignty is the key to real peace in the Middle East and pointed to the importance of dialogue and cooperation between Islam and Christianity and of the preservation of Jerusalem as the city of peace and religious tolerance. King Husayn also said that the Palestine question is the core of the Middle East conflict and that the Palestinian people's right to self-determination is a basic issue in the process of establishing real peace in the region.

King Husayn explained to his holiness the pope the danger to peace of Israel's illegitimate practices in annexing Jerusalem, building settlements on Arab territory and persistently flouting the international community's desires, as reflected in the UN General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on Jerusalem and the Palestine question. His majesty the king also listened to the viewpoint of his holiness the pope on the question of Jerusalem. It will be recalled that the Vatican sent a memo to the United Nations last June to point out the gravity of any unilateral action to change the Holy City's status.

His Majesty King Husayn also met with the Vatican Secretary of State, Cardinal Casaroli, for discussion of current issues, especially the Middle East and Jerusalem issues.

His Majesty King Husayn and Her Majesty Queen Nur arrived in Romes yesterday morning. Before leaving the Italian capital yesterday afternoon for London, His Majesty King Husayn met at Rome airport with the secretary general of the Italian Foreign Ministry. Their discussion dealt with the international situation, the Middle East issue and with bilateral ties of friendship and cooperation. They also stressed Europe's basic role in achieving just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

PCI'S NAPOLITANO VIEWS NEED FOR NEW GOVERNMENT

[PCI Secretariat member Giorgio Napolitano article: "The Issues From Which We Must Proceed"]

[Excerpt] Deputy Piccoli's recent article on the events in Poland, although not without some interesting acknowledgements and reasonable observations, proceeded from a mystificatory thesis: The thesis that attributes the crisis in the democratic solidarity experiment to the PCI's inability to withstand "decisive" tests between "real socialism" and Eurocommunism (and it is not even clear to what specific "tests" in foreign policy or anything else the DC secretary is referring). No, you cannot alter the truth like that after only 18 months: The crisis in the cooperation among the democratic parties took shape and exploded over considerations of approach to and management of government policy, over problems concerning the DC's political conduct and over the crucial issue of the PCI's full participation, with "equal status," in the government. And whoever is now lamenting the harshness of the political climate and trying to blame the PCI for it must remember all the ruptures that occured even after the democratic solidarity majority was dissolved, following the DC congress and following the formation of the present government: the reiterated prejudice against a government with the PCI, the Communists' exclusion from chairmanships of parliamentary commissions, the pressures in various places to overthrow leftwing alliances at the regional or local level and to force the Communists into opposition, the clumsy maneuvers--aimed at damaging the PCI above all--to restrict the scope of independence and objectivity in the media (press and state radio and television), the latest "allocations" of posts in public bodies, the deaf resistance to anticorruption measures in the party financing field and other fields and the closed attitude adopted by the present government and majority with respect to important requests from the Communist opposition regarding foreign policy and the functioning of the institutions. So these are the issues from which we must proceed; we must provide the guarantees in these areas that have not been provided if we want to reestablish the conditions for correct democratic coexistence and for a calmer dialectic between majority and opposition, without expecting the latter to fail in performing its own role clearly and rigorously.

It is within this context that the need emerges for a new government that will truly represent a step forward, a better solution that the one tried during the past 5 months, which has now reached an obvious degree of erosion. We wish to discuss this particularly with the Socialist comrades. Indeed, does the PSI regard government cooperation with the DC and without the PCI as "unavoidable," an obligatory and temporary experience to be accompanied by a serious effort to create unity on the left--while demanding a similar effort from us Communists--and political action aimed at creating the conditions for the left as a whole to become a government force? Or is the PSI trying to create a more ambiguous and long-lasting alliance with the very sectors of the present DC majority which have their sights set on a five-party [DC, PSI, PRI, PSDI, (Italian Socialist Democratic Party), PLI (Italian Liberal Party)] government as the culmination of all the splits already created in relations with the PCI and as the consolidation of a line designed to keep the PCI in opposition indefinitely? This is probably the essential clarification needed to provide a calmer and more constructive basis for the PCI-PSI debate; and there should be no doubt about the danger--both to the workers movement and to the country--of an option in the latter direction.

Detente

Italy has a pressing need for a more authoritative government and a more constructive political climate partly so it can make an autonomous and responsible contribution, on an equal footing with other West European countries, to the cause of the resumption of dialogue and the development of relations between East and West, to the cause of imparting a new thrust to detente. It is precisely by working in this spirit that it is possible to facilitate also a negotiated and innovative solution to the grave tensions that have emerged in Poland. We Italian Communists have spoken out unequivocally for such a solution and we are fighting to ensure that in connection with all the alarming unresolved international problems it will be decided to opt for the path of dialogue, negotiation and the quest for balanced and lasting agreements. In the recent past we have expressed our strong and well-founded disagreement with foreign policy actions taken by the present and previous governments, which we have judged to be negative and dangerous; but we have not failed to meet the commitments undertaken in parliament in the last months of 1977 for a unitary Italian foreign policy, and we still believe that the utmost unity must be sought in this field, irrespective of the democratic parties' differing and opposed parliamentary positions.

Similarly we have never failed to meet our commitment to join in united antiterrorist action to defend the democratic institutions; our vigilance and critical strictness with regard to the work of the government and the state organizations in this field is an integral part of this steadfast unitary commitment on our part to safeguard and develop democracy. A thorough attachment to the democratic values, autonomy of assessment and of international initiative at the service of detente and the peoples' progress: These are the prime, major bearings by which we have set our position on events in Poland and which underlies our quest for new paths to socialism, the Eurocommunist option which we now confirm with still firmer conviction.

LEADERS COMMENT ON TERRORISM AFTER ARRESTS IN BOLOGNA CASE

AU290915 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] Rome, August 29 (ANSA)--The warrants signed yesterday by Bologna magistrates for the arrest of 28 alleged neofascists suspected of roles in the August 2 terrorist bombing of the Bologna railway station, which killed 84 people and left another 200 injured, touched off a wave of reaction in political party headquarters in Rome.

The secretary of the Socialist Party, Bettino Craxi, welcomed the news as a "resounding" development which came only a few weeks after Italy's worst postwar act of terrorism. The socialist leader said that the arrests are likely to lead to the unearthing of a "vast subversive network" then spoke of the urgent need to cast full light, once and for all, on possible links between Italian terrorism and "international circuits".

The prospect of uncovering terrorist ties leading outside the country was also touched on by Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio who began a statement delivered in the evening with words of praise for the "action of our security forces (which are) adequately coordinated. The first and quick decisions of the magistrates demonstrate that the institutions, if properly directed, are capable of responding," the cabinet minister affirmed.

"The time is now ripe for an analysis, at the government level, of the capabilities of the security forces in the battle against terrorism with consideration of the fact that the subversive threat has been shown to have international ties. The time has come," the defense chief added, "to turn the reflectors on this area".

The mayor of Bologna, Renato Zangheri, responded to the report of the arrest warrants with the statement, "the tenacious request for truth and justice advanced by the people of Bologna and all Italy has had its first positive reply. The battle which opened the day after the massacre is also, and perhaps more than anything else, a battle for confidence in democratic institutions," Zangheri affirmed.

A spokesman for the CISL [Italian Confederation of Workers Unions] trade union confederation, Giovanni Ciancaglini, declared in the evening that, "the arrest orders for the Bologna massacre represent the first important results of the investigation underway for seeking out those bearing this serious responsibility" and added that, "it will be necessary, however, to carry on quickly to bring the killers and those behind them to justice".

A piece in this morning's edition of IL POPOLO, the organ of the ruling Christian Democrat Party, over the byline of the managing editor took the point of view that, "if the Bologna magistrates' warrants are added to the results already achieved against red terrorism and to the gains recently made in the fight against the mafia and its links with the international drug traffic, we can conclude that the entire map of common and political crime has been dealt a severe blow."

FURTHER DETAILS GIVEN ON EXPULSION OF USSR DIPLOMATS

LD021441 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 23 Aug 80 p 1

[Unattributed report: "Involvement of Four Diplomats in Telephone Tapping and Machinations in Agrarian Reform Area"]

[Text] EXPRESSO has succeeded in discovering that the accusations underlying the Portuguese Government's decision declaring USSR diplomats Vladimir V. Konyaev, Aleksandr S. Kulagin, Albert A. Matveev and Yuriy A. Semenychev personae non grate for interference in Portuguese internal affairs were of two kinds.

On the one hand, there was "involvement in a vast movement of preelection agitation in the Evora and Beja Districts in relation to the implementation of the agrarian reform legislation." On the other hand, a telephone tapping operation, whose results were handled by the above-mentioned people, was uncovered.

All of them are allegedly "KGB members" with the fourth Yuriy Semenychev, the "KGB's strong man in Portugal."

The information concerning all these activities was received about 6 weeks ago, one of its sources being a traditional diplomatic channel originating in an EEC country.

The government was allegedly able to discover further facts, confirming the information received, through the Republican National Guard, the public security police and the aliens' department.

Following consideration by the prime minister and by the deputy prime minister and foreign minister, the matter was submitted to the cabinet on the morning of 20 August. The latter made the above-mentioned decision under article 9 of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, which was conveyed to the USSR ambassador, who was summoned to the Necessidades Palace [Portuguese Foreign Ministery], at 1700 the same day.

On that occasion the Soviet ambassador allegedly asked the chief of state for protocol whether Belem Palace had been consulted by the government before it made its decision. The communique containing the official note of the prime minister's office and the Foreign Ministry was released at 1900 on 20 August.

The government gave 5 days, which expire next Wednesday, for the diplomats to leave the country, and they are to leave by an Aeroflot flight on that morning.

As far as EXPRESSO is able to discover, the government, despite acknowledging that this network could have other ramifications, does not intend to make any other decision similar to this with respect to other foreign diplomats in the immediate future.

It should be recalled that the USSR ambassador has made public statements criticizing the Portuguese Government's decision and claiming that it creates further obstacles to detente in the field of international relations, thus running counter to the spirit of the Helsinki agreements.

FOREIGN MINISTERS ISSUE COMMUNIQUE AFTER MEETING

LD02122) Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1040 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Text] The Nordic foreign ministers have had a meeting in Oslo. The foreign ministers discussed extensively the international political situation which they regard as alarming. The Polish situation was also discussed, but this subject was not mentioned in the final communique of the meeting. Finnish Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen did not attend the regular autumn meeting of the Nordic foreign ministers at this time because of the budget preparations in Finland. Ulla-Maria Johansen reports from Oslo:

In the final communique of the meeting the ministers expressed their deep concern for the increasing tension and insecurity which characterize both the political and economic situation in the world at the moment. The ministers stressed the significance of strengthening international cooperation in order to guarantee peaceful development, the importance of continuing the dialogue between the leadership big powers, and the further development of the process of detente and disarmament talks.

The ministers note that the situation in Afghanistan continues to have its serious international implications. As to Iran, the ministers expressed their concern over the fact that the U.S. hostages have not yet been released and they urge the Iranian authorities to solve this problem as soon as possible. On the question of nuclear arms in Europe the ministers expressed their satisfaction over the fact that, at the moment, it seems there are better possibilities for opening negotiations on this important issue. The "better possibilities" evidently refer to the new Soviet proposal for negotiations to reduce the number of nuclear missiles in Europe.

According to the 8-page communique, the ministers discussed the international situation and the situation in Europe extensively. The communique, however, does not mention Poland. According to Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund, the situation in Poland was discussed, but it was not regarded as suitable to mention this in the communique. According to the foreign minister, the European countries have now adopted the practice of withholding statements which could be interpreted as interference in Poland's internal affairs in a process of development which has important and far-reaching consequences. Swedish Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten noted, however, at a press conference that the principle of noninterference in Polish internal affairs does not prevent him from stating that in Poland relations between communism and democracy are now at stake.

USSR'S KUZNETSOV, OTHERS ARRIVE FOR PRESIDENT'S BIRTHDAY

LD021644 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Text] The first foreign delegations to participate in the celebrations of the birthday of President Urho Kekkonen arrived in Finland this afternoon. The Soviet delegation is led by Deputy Chairman Vasiliy Kuznetsov and the Icelandic delegation by Prime Minister Gunnar Thoroddsen. The visitors were welcomed at Helsinki-Vantaa airport by Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto, Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen and head of the president's office Juhani Perttunen. The Norwegian and Danish delegations are to arrive tonight, led by Crown Prince Harald and Princess Benedikte respectively. The Swedish delegation led by King Carl XVI Gustaf will arrive in Helsinki tomorrow morning. President Kekkonen celebrates his 80th birthday tomorrow.

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU MAKES STATEMENT ON RETURN FROM ATHENS

NC291532 Nicosia Public Information Office In English 29 Aug 80

[Text] The president of the republic, Mr Spiros Kiprianou, at noon today flew back from Greece, where he had gone at the invitation of the Greek Government. President Kiprianou was received at Larnaca Airport by the president of the House of Representatives. Mr Alekos Mikhailidhis, who was acting president in Mr Kirprianou's absence; the minister of foreign affairs, Mr N.A. Rolandhis, on behalf of the Council of Ministers; the Greek ambassador, Mr Kir. Zakiarakis; members of the house of representatives; the commander of the National Guard, General I. Komninos; and the chief of police, Mr S. Andoniou.

President Kiprianou made on arrival at Larnaca Airport the following statement:

"I am back from Greece absoulutely satisfied with all my contacts. I had the opportunity to have a long meeting with the president of the Greek Republic, Mr K. Karamanlis, with whom we exchanged views on the present phase of the Cyprus problem. I established that Mr Karamanlis is not only showing an undiminished interest in Cyprus but also is continuously thinking how Greece could help struggling Cyprus more. I renewed my invitation to Mr Karamanlis to visit Cyprus and it must be taken for granted that the visit will take place at a time to be fixed later. I also had consultations and private talks with the Greek premier, Mr Y. Rallis, whose personal interest in Cyprus is indeed very keen. I briefed Mr Rallis and the Greek Government on the latest developments in the Cyprus problem, particularly as regards the resumption of the intercommunal talks. There was absolute unanimity on all the moves made so far. There is absolute unanimity on the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

"The intercommunal talks, which are due to start on 16th September, will be crucial to the future course of the Cyprus problem because I hope that these talks will show this time whether it is possible to make progress towards a solution of the Cyprus problem. The Greek Cypriot side will go to the negotiating table with all goodwill, with a constructive spirit and an open mind, with the intention and determination to discuss the substance of the problem for a truly honest and meaningful dialogue on the basis of the existing top-level agreements which form the framework and the basis of the talks. Of course, it is too early to make forecasts because we do not know with certainty what will be the attitude of the Turkish Cypriot leadership during the negotiations. I hope that this time there will be a response on the part of the Turkish Cypriot leadership to the goodwill that the Greek Cypriot side has always being showing.

"During my stay in Athens, I had the opportunity of meeting with the leader of the main opposition party, Mr Papandreou, and all the leaders of the Greek parties, as well as with former Prime Minister Mr Kanellopoulos and former leader of EDIK Mr Y. Mavros. There is a unanimity among all the political parties, the government and the opposition, on the need for absolute support and solidarity with Cyprus. There may be shades [of opinion]; However, there is unity of purpose and unanimity as regards the need to strengthen Cyprus in the difficult moments it is going through.

"Due to the nature of my visit this time I was given the opportunity to come in direct contact with the Greek people in various areas of Greece. I ascertained that the Greek people are very much interested in the future of Cyprus. It is not true that Cyprus has been forgotten. On the contrary, the manifestations with which I was received everywhere, and which of course reflect on the Cyprus people who are struggling for their freedom, were such as to convince me beyond any doubt that we rightly consider the entire Hellenism, government, political parties and the Greek people as the mainstay in our struggle for freedom and vindication. In general, all my contacts were very useful.

"I also invited Premier Mr Y Rallis to visit Cyprus. The invitation was accepted, and I am certain that the visit will take place very soon.

"Generally, I can say that I am back from my visit to Greece absolutely satisfied. I found that there is wide-spread affection for Cyprus and keen interest in developments in the Cyprus problem."

The president of the republic, referring to reports in the Cyprus press that he has interfered with the non-release of the police findings on the incident at Prodhromos involving Dr Lissaridhis, said:

"I was really amazed to read the relevant news, and I categorically deny this report, which is entirely unfounded."

POLICE RELEASE FINDINGS ON ATTACK ON LISSARIDHIS' HOME

NC012115 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Police findings concerning the 24 August shooting at the summer home of EDEK Chairman Vasos Lissaridhis]

[Excerpts] It was announced by the police that investigations concerning an armed attack on Dr Lissaridhis' house at Prodhromos on 24 August 1980 have been completed.

From the investigations carried out, the police report that beyond any reasonable doubt no armed attack took place against Dr Lissaridhis. On the part of the guards and certain persons who were inside the house during the incident, there is a persistent claim that bursts of gunfire were heard from distant heights. Investigations carried out have not brought up any evidence that would strengthen or substantiate this claim. The police have evidence however, that before the guards began to fire, a civilian shot flares of the bengal type at a distance of about 450 feet from the house. Following a test made by the police with the same flare pistol, it was established that the sound caused by the flare pistol can be clearly heard at Dr Lissaridhis' house and that these shots are no different from and can be easily mistaken for a gunshot.

From the analysis of the events, it is obvious that the incident was caused by the shooting of the flares which were taken by the guards as gunshots. At the same time, it also follows from the events that another factor that caused confusion among the guards was information about a possible attempt on Dr Lissaridhis' life which was passed to his guards about 15 days before the incident.

KIPRIANOU TO ASK FOR 'CLARIFICATIONS' FROM UK ON BASES

AT271309 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 27 Aug 80 p 10

[Excerpt] The Cyprus Government will ask the British Government for "clarifications" in connection with reports that the British bases in Cyprus are being used by U.S. forces. This was stated yesterday by President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou in reply to relevant questions by reporters. Kiprianou said that the Cyprus Government has made repeated demarches to the British Government on the issue and has received assurances that the British bases will not be used by non-British troops. Since, however, the reports have been repeated, clarifications will be asked.

KIPRIANOU COMMENTS ON POSSIBLE RESULTS OF TALKS

AT311730 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 31 Aug 80 p 5

[Text] We give the text of an interview granted by Cyprus President Spiros Kiprianou to our correspondent Konstandinos L. Kalligas. We stress that Sp. Kiprianou has a great deal of experience in the handling of the Cyprus issue as foreign minister under Ethnarch Makarios for a long time, later as head of the Cyprus delegation to the United Nations beginning in 1974 and recently as the elected head of the Cyprus state. The text of the interview follows:

Question: What was the content of your recent talks with the Greek Government and the political leaders of Greece and what were your conclusions from these talks?

Answer: My talks with the president of the Republic of Greece, Konstandinos Karamanlis, and the government and particularly with Prime Minister Y. Rallis were aimed at reviewing the latest developments in the Cyprus problem and at an exchange of views on its further handling, particularly in view of the resumption of inter-Cypriot talks. During these talks absolute agreement was established both with respect to evaluations, specific or general, as well as with respect to the handling of the issue to date by the Government of Cyprus as mentioned in the communique issued by the Greek Foreign Ministry. Specifically the Greek Government fully agrees with the resumption of inter-Cypriot talks and on the views of the Greek Cypriot side within the framework of the summit agreements which were reached with the representatives of the Turkish Cypriot community. I have also established that the Greek Government not only stands by and fully supports the Cyprus Government in its efforts toward finding a just and peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem but it is also determined to make this support more active, particularly in the international arena.

I want to reiterate that those of us in Cyprus consider Greece to be the main supporter of our struggle as I have repeatedly stated. This, in any case, is an established and given fact.

We once again discussed the latest developments of the Cyprus issue with the political world of Greece, in other words with the leader of the majority opposition party A. Papandreou, the other leaders and representatives of parties and other political personalities such as Messrs P. Kanellopoulos, and G. Mavros. I once again established that there is full agreement as to our goals and aims as well as a unanimous and full support of the struggle of the people of Cyprus and support of the Cyprus Government.

I would say that from the cycle of my talks this time I have gathered the clear impression that interest in Cyprus is mounting. This is a very logical fact because repercussions upon the whole of Hellenism from a bad development or a bad "solution" to the Cyprus problem have been understood.

The Outcome of the Talks

Question: Would you, Mr President, be prepared to explain and expand on this last point?

Answer: Bearing in mind the expansionist policy of Turkey, upon which there are no indications that it has altered, any strengthening or legalization of the partitionist situation in Cyprus would mean the commencement of new adventures and possibly the end of Cyprus as an independent state, a fact which would lead Greece, with mathematical exactitude, to new and even more risky adventures.

Question: Since you foresee no change in Turkey's expansionist intentions, what are the prospects for the inter-Cypriot talks and what is the reason for their resumption?

Answer: On our part is has been our permanent policy to explore every possibility for a just solution of the Cyprus problem. Resumption of the talks is at the same time also an opportunity to establish whether there will be an equivalent positive response on the part of the Turkish Cypriot leadership to meet our own goodwill and the constructive position we have maintained from the start of the crisis. The Greek Cypriot side has unbounded goodwill toward the Turkish Cypriots and will come to the talks in order to discuss with a constructive will the essence of the Cyprus problem for the purpose of establishing a biperipheral federal state, completely independent, nonalined, sovereign, territorially integral, united and demilitarized. We insist on a federation solution and will in no way accept a confederation solution whether it is concealed or not.

It is untimely, and on the other hand it would not be correct, to predetermine the outcome of the new inter-Cypriot talks. Their outcome, however, will establish in a definitive way what our future course must be from the point of view of handling and promotion of a solution in accordance to the resolutions of the United Nations. We hope there will be positive results. We will strive for this in good faith. Even if the results are negative, however, something which we abhor, the conclusions will remain useful.

The UN Resolutions

Question: In case of a failure of the new round of inter-Cypriot talks do you foresee an appeal to the United Nations?

Answer: There is no need for a new appeal because the Cyprus issue is already on the agenda of this year's UN General Assembly. We have much time at our disposal for discussion of the Cyprus issue at the United Nations which will in all probability take place if the inter-Cypriot talks fail.

Question: What result do you expect from a new and positive resolution of the UN General Assembly after so many previous ones which were not implemented?

Answer: In case the talks fail this time then the discussion itself at the UN General Assembly and its last resolution will gain special importance because they will not only contribute to the internationalization of the Cyprus problem but they will also further strengthen the position of the Cyprus Government internationally. As to the special handling and the special goals in such an eventuality it would be untimely to mention anything at this phase.

The "Faits Accomplis"

Question: Some say that time assists the strengthening of the "faits accomplis" and the "de facto" situation in Cyprus. What do you have to say on this?

Answer: Even if we accept this viewpoint as a subject of discussion, particularly since it does not lack a certain logic, what is of importance is that we should not recognize the "faits accomplis," thus being drawn into this "argument." We wish the prerequisite will exist for a just solution of the Cyprus problem as soon as possible. This is what we diligently strive for. If such a solution does not come about soon this does not mean that in view of the dangers inherent in a prolongation of the uncertainty that we should hasten to legalize the "de facto" situation or something similar or that we should abandon the just cause of our people. [paragraph continues]

Something of this sort would mean the speeding up of the total destruction of Cyprus and this would be a solution for nobody. This is what we must be careful of: If we fail to speed up an acceptable solution then we must utilize time in the proper way, in order to prevent any dangers for the future. We must utilize time in order to guarantee as great a political and negotiating strength as possible.

The Internal Front

Question: What would you have to tell us on the internal front of Cyprus at the present critical stage of the Cyprus problem?

Answer: I am as interested in the preservation of close and harmonious cooperation between the governments of Cyprus and Greece as much as I am interested in the unity of the internal front which is one of the most basic prerequisits for the successful outcome of the struggle of the Cyprus people. Irrespective of what has happened in the recent past, on my part I will continue and intensify the effort to guarantee the necessary unity which must not be theoretic but fundamental. In other words there must be unity of goals and aims. I repeat that in this direction I am determined to make strong efforts. It would be truly tragic if as a result of internal political strife we strengthened Turkish intransigence even more--a logical thing--and if thus we make the solution of the Cyprus problem even more difficult, not to refer to possibly greater dangers, always bearing in mind the bitter experience of the past.

GREEK LABOR MINISTER LASKARIS MAKES DEPARTURE STATEMENT

NC301147 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0900 GMT 30 Aug 80

[Text] Greek Labor Minister Laskaris left this morning for Greece following the conclusion of his visit to Cyprus as a guest of the government.

In a statement at Larnaca Airport, Mr Laskaris expressed absolute satisfaction with his talks in Cyprus. He said: Everything possible was done within the opportunities that we have. He then said that the aims of his visit were achieved throughout. This goal, he said, was exclusively to listen, as much as possible, and to deal with the various matters confronting the Cypriot Government and the island's trade unions in the labor sector. Finally, Mr. Laskaris expressed his wish and intention to return to Cyprus soon.

Mr. Laskaris was seen off at the Larnaca Airport by Labor Minister Theodhoulou, Greek Ambassador Zakarakis and SEK [Confederation of Cypriot Workers] Secretary General Ioannou.

NSP LEADER ERBAKAN WARNS GOVERNMENT ON CONFIDENCE VOTE

TA291811 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] NSP Leader Necmettin Erbakan has warned that in the event the government requested a vote of confidence during the discussions of the interpellation motion against the foreign minister, his party would vote against the government. Erbakan held a news conference in Ankara today. During the meeting, a correspondent recalled that the prime minister could resort to a vote of confidence during the discussion of the NSP motion and asked what the stand of the NSP would be in such a case. Erbakan replied: It will be toppled. We shall topple the foreign minister as well as the government, Erbakan said. Pointing out that he did not think Prime Minister Demirel would resort to a vote of confidence, Erbakan said: If he does, then our gain will be twofold. I hope he does.

Criticizing the performance of the Demirel government, Erbakan said that anarchy was relentlessly escalating and that the economic situation was growing much worse. He added that allegations by government officials that the struggle against inflation was successful were unfounded. Recalling that prices increased by 73.6 percent during the 8 months the Demirel government has been in power, Erbakan said this represents a world record. While the government is claiming that it is subduing inflation, inflation has subdued the government, he said.

Erbakan said that taking into consideration the probability of an early election the government was printing great amounts of money which had nothing to back it. This served the interest of banks and bankers, he added. Erbakan said that the villager, the worker, the government employee, the retired as well as the citizen with a low income were being crushed under the burden of the high cost of living. Erbakan pointed out that the government owed 142 billion liras to agricultural producers, retired workers and contractors. He said that despite devaluations and new measures exports had diminished and that foreign exchange from workers abroad as well as imports were decreasing. Demirel recalled that the budget had already developed a deficit of 300 billion liras, that national income had fallen by more than 10 percent for the first time for years and that production and investment had reached a standstill.

Accusing the government of following a foreign policy in contradiction with his party's advice, Erbakan said that some restrictions incompatible with human rights have been leveled against the pilgrims leaving for the hajj.

Commenting on the latest political developments, Erbakan said that the bill submitted by his party for an early election was hindered by the JP and the RPP. Noting that if the JP and the RPP continued their opposition to an early election for some time then it would be impossible to hold elections because of seasonal weather. In this case, Erbakan said, the need for constitutional measures would arise to provide for the early election of a president. Erbakan continued: The JP minority government has gone bankrupt. There is no end to these grave positions and trends. In fact, the JP slogan calling for elections is only a trick. If our initiatives for an early election do not materialize, then Turkey must be saved from this government as soon as possible. Erbakan said that his party was conducting no overt or covert bargains for the formation of a government. Erbakan concluded by saying that on Monday the party administrative council will continue to discuss their policies at this critical moment.

No Quorum in Assembly

[Text] Because there was no quorum, the national assembly could not convene today in order to discuss the NSP interpellation motion against Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen. The interpellation was submitted by NSP Deputy Necmettin Erbakan from Konya and his colleagues. The National Assembly will convene tomorrow to discuss the motion.

SOVIET DELEGATION DISCUSSES MADRID MEETING WITH OFFICIALS

TA291703 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] It has been announced that a Soviet Foreign Ministry delegation has held talks in Ankara with Turkish Foreign Ministry officials regarding the Madrid followup meeting on the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. A statement by the foreign Ministry's Information Directorate General says that Turkish Foreign Ministry Director General Ambassador Ilter Turkmen received the Soviet delegation, which also met with various Turkish foreign Ministry officials for consultations and an exchange of views. The Madrid meeting, which was the issue discussed in Ankara, will begin on 12 November. Developments regarding the final act of the conference held in Helsinki in 1975 will be reviewed during the Madrid conference.

OZAL NOTES IMF'S POSITIVE REACTION TO ECONOMIC MEASURES

TA300659 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] Turgut Ozal, prime ministry under secretary and deputy under secretary of the State Planning Organization, has said that IMF officials have viewed as positive the economic policies implemented in Turkey in the last 3 months. The talks between the Turkish delegation headed by Ozal and IMF officials have ended in London. In a statement to the TRT, Ozal said that IMF officials were satisfied with the decrease in the rate of inflation in Turkey. The Turkish delegation composed of officials from the Turkish Central Bank, the Finance Ministry and the State Planning Organization is expected to return to Turkey on Monday.

KREISKY PRESENTS 10-POINT ANTICORRUPTION PROGRAM

AU031416 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1037 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Johannes Fischer report on speech delivered on 3 September by Chancellor Bruno Kreisky at a pensioners' conference in Linz--with recorded excerpt]

[Summary] In his speech Chancellor Kreisky a few minutes ago broached a 10-point program of requirements in connection with the Vienna General Hospital affair and of course indirectly also in connection with Finance Minister Hannes Androsch. "The chancellor has now let the cat out of the bag--the finance minister will probably have to resign in any case, because the chancellor has called for a division of the Finance Ministry, virtually a disbandment of this ministry."

Chancellor Kreisky presented to his audience a 10-point program. The first three points are: 1) continous ongoing controls by public authorities for all major public construction projects, 2) special bodies must be established for implementing such large construction projects, with special responsibilities for the chief offices--no ministry could cope with this task, 3) invitations for tenders must be given maximum publicity.

And then, on point 4, the division of the Finance Ministry: [Begin Kreisky recording] "There must be in my opinion, in the interest of distributing responsibility, there must be a separation between the drafting of the budget and its implementation and the state holdings, for the same department should not both have the oversight responsibility for the banks and the function of their owner. It is necessary to consider some new ideas within the next year as to how to solve this problem. There are numerous examples of such solutions in the world. It should be solved even at the price of establishing a separate ministry--that would still be less expensive than all the damage that might otherwise ensue.

"Fifth, the so-called Pallin Commission, headed by the former president of the Supreme Court, the commission convened by [Minister of Justice]--Broda and myself, must work quickly and quickly achieve results regarding its assigned tasks. And, should additional personnel or assistance from the administration be necessary in speeding up the work of the courts or for this commission, then the necessary steps must be taken.

"Sixth, the highest officials, or persons willing to accept the highest positions, must be ready to disclose their financial affairs--as is done in other democratic countries--in writing to a small body that could be selected by Parliament, to inform this body about changes that may occur, and to submit a second full report when resigning from public office. I consider this important because it will put a stop to all these allegations.

"Seventh, if a cabinet member is the owner of a business, then he must place it in a public trust when taking government office--this must not be up to this personal discretion. And as far as Socialist cabinet members are concerned, an absolute and incontestable separation from the ownership of such an interprise must be effected. I regard it as impossible without this to protect oneself against allegations.

"Eighth, the highest officials, that is ministers, cabinet members, must be brought before a court of honor if certain accusations are made against them, so that they do not remain the target of political allegations. Such a court of honor could consist of the presidents of the highest courts--Constitutional Court, Administrative Court, Supreme Court and Federal Bureau of Audits--or such a court of honor could be appointed by the federal president.

"Ninth, a tightening up of the conflict of interest regulations and full taxation of the incomes of those in the highest offices, that is the ministers, with ministers' salaries being based on the salaries of comparable functionaries in neighboring countries, such as Switzerland, the FRG or the FRG land of Bavaria.

"Tenth, increased damage liability both for the givers and takers of bribes.

"I believe that if these ten points, which require amendments of existing laws and even of constitutional laws, if these ten points are adopted as a basis for the measures that are to be made, it can be said that we have drawn the most extensive conclusions from the events of the past few years and months and proceeded accordingly. I admit that these are very hard conditions. They must be discussed in detail, but, dear comrades, I want to leave no doubt about the fact that it is not I who--I am choosing my words very carefully now--that it is not I who is demanding from others that they quit, but that I am ready to continue fulfilling my own functions only if such a course is adopted in the coming weeks. It is not I who demands that others quit--but I am stating frankly and clearly that I am only ready to fulfill the tasks assigned to me, with that measure of responsibility that I have set for myself--and that is rather high--if one is ready mercilessly to take the actions required by the situation. And I am not saying this in my own interest, which I believe will be realized by most people. This is what I wanted to say today at this important forum of such experienced people who have weathered so many storms."

VICE CHANCELLOR ANDROSCH EXPECTED TO RESIGN

AU021335 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 2 Sep 80 p 1

[Summary] In Vienna political circles it is generally assumed that there is no longer any question that Vice Chancellor and Finance Minister Hannes Androsch will resign--the only question being how and when. Androsch himself, interviewed by DIE PRESSE in Alpbach, said he intended to complete the pending 1981 budget draft--"but, the chancellor can of course appoint or release ministers at any time," he added. The decisive talk between Androsch and Kreisky will probably take place at the earliest tomorrow, Wednesday. According to circles close to the finance minister, Androsch himself now wants to resign but would like the initiative to come from the chancellor. Informed quarters named Education Minister Fred Sinowatz as Androsch's most likely successor in both functions.

AUSTRIA TO CONCLUDE ECONOMIC COOPERATION TREATY WITH PRC

AU020930 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 2 Sep 80 p 7

[Summary] An agreement on economic, industrial and technical cooperation between Austria and the PRC will be signed in Vienna during the forthcoming visit of Li Qiang, PRC minister of foreign trade, from 4-11 November. According to Austrian Trade Minister Staribacher the Austrian side expects this agreement to result in a substantial expansion of the volume of bilateral trade which was 1.5 billion schillings last year.

"The treaty, whose contents have already been largely agreed upon with the Chinese side, provides for cooperation in machine and plant building, in raw material production, mining and the smelting industry, in the chemical and petrochemical industry, light and foostuff industry and in agriculture and forestry. It will be valid for a period of 10 years. It is noteworthy that Beijing has especially welcomed Austria's wish to include small and medium enterprises in the text of the treaty."

SCHMIDT EXPRESSES RESPECT FOR POLES' 'RESPONSIBLE ATTITUDE'

LD031448 Hamburg DPA in German 1347 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn, 3 Sep (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has expressed his respect for the responsible attitude of all those involved in the crisis in Poland which had enabled a harmonious solution to the conflict to be reached without the use of force. Schmidt stated during the cabinet session in Bonn today that the Polish people had impressively demonstrated that, even under the most severe strains, they are capable of managing their affairs themselves. At the same time, the chancellor expressed the hope that the Poles will succeed in continuing along the course embarked upon in accordance with the desire of all those involved.

According to government spokesman Armin Gruenewald, Bonn respects Poland's wish to regulate its affairs itself, in accordance with the Final Act of the European security conference, without interference from outside. The Federal Government will therefore continue to practice restraint in public assessments of the situation. It nevertheless adheres to its policy of expanding bilateral relations in all sectors. This also includes economic cooperation. In this Bonn is in agreement with its partners.

Gruenewald announced that the Federal Government will discuss details of this aid with its EEC and NATO partners. If the Soviet media tries "to place" the FRG media "in a certain corner," the Federal Government will remain unaffected by this. It would do nothing which could be regarded as interference in Poland's internal affairs.

Welcomes Carter Proposal on Aid

LD031655 Hamburg DPA in German 1516 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn--It was officially confirmed in Bonn today that a message from Carter to the federal chancellor arrived last week. A government spokesman said that Schmidt welcomes the American President's proposal for Western coordination of aid to Poland.

At today's cabinet meeting the chancellor reiterated that an expansion of economic cooperation with Poland seems necessary. Bonn, he said, concurs with its partners on this point.

SPD, CDU POLITICIANS SUPPORT ECONOMIC AID TO POLAND

LD031812 Hamburg DPA in German 1740 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn--In a conversation with Polish Ambassador to Bonn Jan Chylinski today, SPD Vice Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski expressed his admiration for the discipline and readiness to compromise shown by Poles during the recent events. Spokesman for the SPD Executive Lothar Schwartz said that Wischnewski expressed the hope that the agreements reached by the strikers and the government will prove effective. He assured the ambassador that the SPD will as far as possible support the granting of credits to Poland.

In an interview with KOELNISCHE RUNDSCHAU, Minister-President Ernst Albrecht (CDU) of Lower Saxony cautioned against dragging the Polish events into the election campaign. He said the Federal Republic should support the Polish people economically if the Polish Government is seen to be serious in fulfilling its promises to the workers.

SPD'S BAHR INTERVIEWED ON CANCELED GDR VISIT, POLAND

DW031248 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 1 Sep 80 pp 21-23

[Editors Paul Lersch and Klaus Wirtgen undated interview with SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr at the BONN SPD headquartes]

[Text] SPIEGEL: How, Mr Bahr, is the cancellation of the chancellor's trip to the GDR compatible with your and Helmut Schmidt's demand that East and West talk with each other, especially in difficult times?

Bahr: This is quite compatible because difficult times do not depend on a particular week. That which might be untimely at the moment could look different during the course of this year. I am sure that the dialogue will not be disrupted and that the postponed meeting of the two leaders will be held as soon as is feasible.

SPIEGEL: Isn't it an illusion to hope that such harmony internationally will occur that top-echelon inter-German talks can take place? There will always be an obstacle.

Bahr: You cannot compare the political development in Afghanistan and in Poland with normal times. Both are unparalleled.

SPIEGEL: A third crisis may erupt tomorrow, and the inter-German dialogue will be blocked again.

Bahr: You cannot concentrate this dialogue on those 2, 3 or 4 weeks in which the situation is particularly tense. I believe both sides are making an effort to do the inevitable as painlessly as possible and without doing any harm, if possible.

SPIEGEL: What is inevitable?

Bahr: Not conducting the dialogue at the moment. Nobody was able to rule out the possibility that the events in Poland might reach a culminating point while the chancellor was in the GDR. Then both--the chancellor as well as Mr Honecker--would have had greater worries ahtn talking with each other.

SPIEGEL: What do you mean by culminating point--perhaps the invasion of the Soviets or the dispatch of the militia against the strikers?

Bahr: No, something just short of an ultimatum to the strikers and something far below the level of using any armed force would be enough. We hope that this can be avoided. We do hope that all the parties involved will not lose their control--as they have not up to now, last but not least the Catholic Church in Poland as well. But one thing is clear: The chancellor would have been able to take a greater risk if the opposition were a bit more aware of its responsibility for national affairs than it is. It stabs the chancellor in the back instead of supporting him.

SPIEGEL: But this does not bother the chancellor in other cases, to be sure. Schmidt did not shrink back from "stepping on the toes" of Jimmy Carter in Venice "to the the point where you could hear the shoes squeaking outside the door"--as a member of the government put it who was there. He is not afraid to chide Brezhnev for Afghanistan in Moscow. Why does he shrink back from the risks in dealing with Honecker?

Bahr: These cannot be compared.

SPIEGEL: Why not?

Bahr: You are suggesting that the dramatic development in Poland is nonexistent. After all, you cannot overlook Rostock's location near Szczecin and Szczecin's near Gdansk.

SPIEGEL: This was a problem which would have been bound to force Mr Honecker to announce the cancellation to us.

Bahr: No. What is happening there, and the way it happens is also our problem. In any event, you may rest assured Schmidt would not have been afraid to state his views to Mr Honecker just as frankly as he did in Moscow and Venice.

SPIEGEL: The risks would have been less had the chancellor just gone to see Honecker and not planned on making stopovers at Rostock and Guestrow.

Bahr: I could have visualized something like that, were it not for the fact that we have the opposition we do in this country.

SPIEGEL: ...And if it weren't for the election campaign.

Bahr: Of course.

SPIEGEL: Do you think the chancellor could have gone if there were no elections at the time?

Bahr: Not even then, because of the political development.

SPIEGEL: Not even with a shortened itinerary?

Bahr: In that case, perhaps.

SPIEGEL: Couldn't the Schmidt/Honecker dialogue be kept going better if it were deprived of its spectacular halo?

Bahr: Is this supposed to be covert advice to revert to secret diplomacy or is it a tacit recommendation to the press--surely also to your publication--to be more reserved about spreading information and opinions at every stage?

SPIEGEL: No, it is merely the question of whether the government should not at long last make up its mind whether talks have value in themselves or depend on preconditions.

Bahr: Once the election campaign is over, and the Polish situation permitting, the chancellor will have to do what he deems appropriate--without regard for the gripers.

SPIEGEL: Were mistakes committed during the preparations for the trip? And if so, do you consider the discussion on the place of the meeting appropriate? Was the desire to go to Rostock and Guestrow proper? Was it appropriate for Bonn to announce a delegation of 60 people to the GDR?

Bahr: First of all, I cannot comment on every detail. Second, I am sure that the proposal to include Rostock and Guestrow was accepted and was not controversial. Third, I think it is normal that the place was discussed. Fourth, I consider it abnormal in East-West relations to spread all this out so broadly.

Fifth, I deem it normal to report on this without leading to any complications. Hence, I do not see any fundamental or technical errors.

SPIEGEL: Mr Bahr, doesn't Schmidt's cancellation show quite plainly that Germany and Europe in times of developing East-West irritation cannot remain islands of detente and that inter-German unilateral actions must be called off?

Bahr: We did not make any inter-German unilateral actions. But you are right, inter-German relations and Europe are not a blessed isle on which you sail through world history out of harm's way while tensions aggravate everywhere else. From this you can derive two conclusions: To the best of our ability we want to prevent crises on other continents from spreading to us and being reproduced in our country. We desire that the experiences we have gained in Europe and for Europe with the renunciation of force--with the result that Europe today is a continent with the fewest crises--will be applied to other regions.

SPIEGEL: Meaning detente policy now more than ever?

Bahr: Exactly! Detente policy has caused ideological issues to assume a secondary significance and given the preservation of peace first priority. This principle--peace is most important--will endure totally regardless of how developments proceed in Poland. It was proven in the June 1953 revolt, in Hungary in 1956, in case of the construction of the wall in 1961, and in Prague in 1968 that any Western interference with force is impossible. The West must not, cannot, does not and will not want to.

SPIEGEL: But, more and more, detente policy is bound to be regarded in the East as an especially subtle from of cold war. It brings crowds of visitors and television broadcasts to Eastern Europe. It promises freedom and nurses hopes that can be implemented by governments only if they give in.

Bahr: I do not share this view. The striking workers are not demanding a pluralistic party system nor are they demanding withdrawal from the Warsaw Pact. They demand what we here understand by the designation "codetermination."

SPIEGEL: And they demand free trade unions and an open media; this touches on the system, doesn't it?

Bahr: I am not at all afraid, of course, to refrain from commenting on the situation in Poland. [sentence as published] In industrial societies there are problems, tendencies for more codetermination by the working people. The Western political system obviously is better able to cope with this than any other system.

SPIEGEL: And for Poland this spells more liberalization or democratization?

Bahr: It is a desire for more codetermination. There is no agreement at all by which the Eastern political systems could be relieved of the problems which also emergy inevitably in their own development.

SPIEGEL: When you did your part in drawing up the concept of detente policy you coined the phrase of change through rapprochement, meaning: Changing the systems in the East through small steps. But the Polish workers are demanding big steps.

Bahr: It is impossible to bring influence to bear by on developments force. I never believed--this is contradicted by the experience of world history--that systems would not change by themselves and in themselves.

I always assumed that it would serve our interests if the people over there were better off. If they were better off they would react like all the other people in the world: an appetite comes from eating. But sometimes it is important in the interests of stability and of the people to say less than one wants to say.

SPIEGEL: So you hold that detente policy must be preserved at any price?

Bahr: No, not at any price. I see no alternative now and for the future, because a return to a threat of force or to cold war is not an alternative to me. We have achieved detente policy results: the pictures you see now--they would never have been possible prior to Helsinki. Helsinki is a result of detente policy.

SPIEGEL: But we must have minor hopes and expectations. Can we want the Polish workers to implement all their demands? It would create the danger of Soviet intervention.

Bahr: We ought to maintain restraint with regard to giving good advice to those who have to make decisions involving high stakes. I do not see the slightest reason for changing the basic principles and aims of detente policy. There can be situations involving setbacks or some slowing down. But after a detour it will go on: Balance and detente--there is no alternative to that merger in a long process in which Europe must come closer to peace, divided as it is into two alliances.

SPIEGEL: For many people signs of communism deteriorating can be seen in Poland.

Bahr: The crisis if communism has existed for a long time, because according to the pure doctrine there can actually be just one scientifically correct truth. But there are Moscow, Beijing, Belgrade, Cuba and Eurocommunist beginnings. In other words, the crisis for the monolithic bloc has existed for 30 years. What is happening now in Poland shows the highly interesting, exciting possibility that internal reforms can be made. It is possible that a positive outcome, reform, will strengthen the communist movement or the communist system. One must not ignore this. The ability to achieve reforms is not debillitating.

SPIEGEL: How can detente and disarmament initiatives continue concretely? It seemed this summer that the thread of talks between the East and the West had been resumed.

Bahr: It has been!

SPIEGEL: And then there was silence until the strikes in Poland. How seriously must the Soviet offer be taken on beginning negotiations on medium-range missiles?

Bahr: At least three talks have taken place between the Americans and the Soviet representatives. According to my information they will be continued in September. We will see what will come of them. I do not believe that the Soviet Union will be prepared to have serious and substantial negotiations aiming for a conclusion prior to the outcome of the U.S. presidential elections on 4 November.

SPIEGEL: Do you know anything about secret talks between Washington and Moscow where the superpowers are discussing limiting of missiles and a political solution for Afghanistan?

Bahr: I believe that the superpowers are discussing both problems.

SPIEGEL: Can you say something concrete?

Bahr: No.

SPIEGEL: When were these contacts established?

Bahr: I cannot give you an exact date.. I am certain that these contacts took place at any rate after the chancellor's visit to Moscow.

SPIEGEL: What will happen if the Soviets do intervene in Poland after all? Will that be the second blow, which detente could not withstand, as Helmut Schmidt and Valery Giscard d'Estaing put it after the invasion of Afghanistan?

Bahr: I do not want to answer a question on what would be if? One thing is clear, however: It would be terrible. But even then peace should not be called into question. And even then I would feel more secure in the Federal Republic under Helmut Schmidt than under Strauss.

SPIEGEL: What kind of peace would that be? If the Russians marched into Poland...

Bahr: ...Even then peace should not be endangered. Or do you think that we should invade then?

SPIEGEL: Mr Bahr, we thank you for this conversation.

PAPERS COMMENT ON POLISH SETTLEMENT, AID

DW031001 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Press review on situation in Poland]

[Text] The daily DIE WELT makes the following comment: In their latest statements the Soviets make it absolutely clear that as far as they are concerned the limits of what is tolerable have been reached in Poland. Granted, Moscow now declares that the Polish leadership acted correctly when it made material concessions to the workers. But in so doing Moscow no longer is mentioning Gierek's name, and the Kremlin is remaining silent about the trade union issue. Instead, there is talk again about antisocialist forces active in Poland. Everything now hinges on the interpretation of the 21 points of Gdansk by the Polish leadership. Moscow obviously hopes that the Warsaw Communist Party will succeed in retaining control of things. The way in which the Warsaw regime had the concessions to the Silesian miners wrung from its hands again only by a strike shows the tendency to make as few voluntary concessions as possible. At the same time this demonstrates that the situation in Poland continues to be explosive. The big brother in the East is awaiting developments--and for this reason alone any jubilation, especially on the part of the Western politicans who remained embarrassingly silent during the strikes, is premature and careless.

NEUE WESTFAELISCHE of Bielefeld states in this connection: All important Western politicians are probably agreed that economic and financial support is imperative. The reactions to the latest developments last Sunday indicate the far-reaching readiness to help in further improving living conditions in Poland. This is a good thing, because each time help is extended the chance grows for an economic and sociopolitical stabilization of conditions in Poland after the victory of Gdansk.

With reference to Bonn's financial assistance, MANNHEIMER MORGEN has this to say: Just don't touch it--this is how the motto could be described under which the chancellor's remarks concerning the latest events in the Ostpolitik field are being made. Obviously no consensus of opinion has as yet taken shape via diplomatic channels as to the seriousness of the warnings from Moscow. There is no better advice now than to talk sotto voce and to help without any great ado. The cancellation of the envisaged credit which the Federal Government partially covers through guarantees not only would be a blow to the Polish freedom movement in world public opinion but would also constitute a verdict against any attempt to spare the Polish economy from chaos.

GENSCHER TO MEET GROMYKO, MUSKIE, FISCHER IN NEW YORK

LD031908 Hamburg DPA in German 1706 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher will meet the Soviet and U.S. foreign ministers, Andrey Gromyko and Edmund Muskie, during the UN General Assembly session in New York at the end of September. This was confirmed by diplomatic sources in Bonn today. Genscher is also planning to have talks with GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer and several colleagues from Third World states. Genscher will leave for New York on 21 September for 4 days and will address the UN General Assembly.

BERLIN MAYOR, FDP OFFICIAL DISMISS PRAVDA CHARGES

LD031818 Hamburg DPA in German 1513 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] The governing mayor of Berlin, Dietrich Stobbe, vigorously rejected the PRAVDA charges on the ninth anniversary of the signing of the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin. The deputy chairman of the FDP group in the lower house, Hans-Guenter Hoppe, in a statement released by the group's press office in Bonn today, said the PRAVDA attacks are unfounded.

Stobbe said that no one intends to test the agreement to the limit, but a retrospective limitation of the possibilities offered by the agreement could in no way be accepted. The examples of alleged treaty violations cited by PRAVDA are not new. They merely sum up the objections put forward by the Soviet Union in recent years. But the three Western powers, the Federal Government and the Berlin senate do not share the Soviet Union's legal opinion. The Berlin Senate wants a peace securing policy of detente for the benefit of the people in divided Germany.

The Quadripartite agreement fulfilled realistic expectations. This is particularly true at a time when new crises in other regions of the world and problems of arms control are putting a heavy strain on the diagogue of the great powers, the United States and the Soviet Union. The smooth functioning of the entire Quadripartite Agreement proves "that it was not and is not a fair weather agreement." Differences in the interpretation and implementation of the agreement in some areas owing to the differing legal views of the sides, which were acknowledged but not over come when it was signed, do not detract from this assessment.

Bonn-Hoppe emphasized that the terms of the Berlin agreement had been strictly observed by Bonn. That is undeniable. The full use of the possibilities described in the agreement is equally a matter of course. Since the signing of the agreement, Berlin has ceased to be a bone of contention in East-West politics and has entered a tranquil phase. This state of affairs should not be disturbed.

EGYPT'S MUBARAK INTERVIEWED ON RELATIONS WITH FRG

DW031208 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0420 GMT 2 Sep 80

[Excerpts from reporter Juterczenka interview with Egyptian Vice President Muhammad Husni Mubarak, presumably in Bonn; questions in German, answers in Arabic with German translation superimposed--recorded]

[Text] [Question] What chances do you see for achieving a Middle East peace agreement through Camp David?

[Answer] Camp David indicates the main direction toward a just and lasting solution. We have suggested several solutions, more than one, particularly with regard to the Palestinian problem because we consider the Palestinian problem the main issue. Finding a quick solution depends on the good will of all the parties.

[Question] What chances do you see with regard to the Middle East peace initiative of the European Community?

[Answer] As regards the role of the European states, the EEC, we demand that the European states support our efforts aimed at achieving a peaceful solution. As regards the decisions made by the European Community states on 13 June, we consider them positive, useful and helpful toward finding a just solution of the Palestinian problem and the Middle East problem. What we want is support for the peaceful approach. We hope that Europe will continue to play its role and that it will support us because I believe that the Europeans are also interested in a peaceful solution of the problem.

[Question] What possibilities do you see for economic cooperation, for the extension of economic cooperation between the Federal Republic and Egypt?

[Answer] I just came from Baden-Wuerttemberg where I talked to the minister, president and other appropriate people. I said with regard to this point that we are prepared for cooperation, economic cooperation, with the Federal Republic at the highest possible level. We have very good economic relations. We want to intensify them. A very good atmosphere exists on both sides and the preparedness and the desire for economic cooperation is good. You will note in Egypt that our people welcome German goods and an intensification of economic relations. I have noted in on the occasion of this visit, in every part of this visit, that we meet with friendly feelings on the part of the German populace and also on the part of the economy. We want cooperation. We will spare no efforts to intensify and promote that in every direction in the Federal Republic of Germany.

VOTERS SYMPATHIZE EQUALLY WITH BIG PARTIES; FAVOR SCHMIDT

DW031409 [Editorial Report] The Hamburg ARD Television Network in German at 1900 GMT on 2 September within its regular feature "Panorama" presents an Istvan Bury and Margarete Beunte-Plewnia report on the latest election campaign survey carried out by the INFAS Opinion Poll Institute. According to this survey, the Federal Republic has 42.8 million voters, of whom 3.9 million are not prepared at this time to "follow the invitation" to go to the polls. Some 31.5 million people claim to know which party they will choose, while 7.4 million have not yet made up their minds. The latter group numbers 2 million more than in 1976, the survey says. According to the opinion poll, the sympathies of the voters are equally divided between the SPD and the CDU/CSU, whereas the big difference comes to light when comparisons are made between the two chancellor candidates. In the latter comparison only 27 percent of the voters favor Franz Josef Strauss whereas Helmut Schmidt has a following of 59 percent.

SOCIALIST PARTY WARNS AGAINST INTERVENTION IN POLAND

LD032148 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Excerpts] In what is probably an indirect consequence of the strikes in Poland, the USSR is giving that country extra financial credit. The French Socialist Party has issued an official warning against any attempt to intervene in that country. The party's Executive Committee, which met this evening, noted that the Polish workers won their case not only by struggle but by negotiation. The French Socialist Party congratulates all Poles for their ability to settle their problems among themselves.

PAPERS VIEW OUTCOME OF STRIKES IN POLAND

Implications for French Parties

LD031329 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Sep 80 pp 1, 3

[Jacques Decornoy article: "Bad News"]

[Text] Events in Poland constitute bad news in many respects for those in the West and in France especially who pretend to welcome them: from the PCF and CGT leaderships who contrast the Gdansk discussions with the repression of our fishermen, to the right which is suddenly discovering that it has sympathies with the workers--although within the confines of the Warsaw Pact borders. Indeed it is bad news because it disrupts the plans of bureaucratic stuffed shirts and clouds Manichean views of Eastern bloc societies and, consequently, complicates the all-out offensive launched against the socialist adversaries in order to promote the continuation of the crisis-ridden Western system.

Once again the dialectics will enable the PCF to produce peremptory formulas to back the assertion of the "generally postive" nature of the East European regimes. Nonetheless the news from Gdansk cannot please Marchais and Seguy. For although the party's leadership role has not officially been called into question (how could it have been without running the risk of the workers movement being crushed?) the over idealized automatic identification of the political leadership with the proletarian grassroots--the party with the trade union--is now a thing of the past legally and no longer just in practice.

The social hegemony of the leadership group and its one thousand and one official cogs might not be broken but it has certainly been cracked by a democratic upsurge of rare maturity. The problem posed is that of translating an embryonic economic democracy into real political democracy in the future. In these circumstances the Western communist officials can no longer avoid debates on social relationships in the East without discrediting themselves still further. However, opening such ideological floodgates eventually means calling into question the Communist Party's claim to be the only body to speak on behalf of all workers (or to do so through trade unions), calling into question its existing relations with the workers movement and its avowed obsession with unity. Indeed it means examining the modus operandi of the party machinery and, in addition, the historical justification for its existence.

The news is equally bad for the right. Let us gloss over the inconsistency between the good wishes for the working class in Gdansk and everyday practice in France itself. At election time, and especially in a situation of prolonged and deep crisis, any argument is valid to perpetuate the political status quo and deny the existence of divisions within our own society.

As the problems grow worse, attempts to provide an ideological justification of the system grow more pressing: Are we not seeing the education minister supporting the assertions of the new (?) right and denouncing the "Marxist illusion" that children's sociocultural origns might have some influence on school life and life itself?

In being a little overanxious to welcome events in Poland and signs of rifts developing in the East, the advocates of advanced liberalism and social Darwinism may bring off a useful short-term operati . They are once again classing together the search for a democratic socialism and real communism, and this is bound to have repercussions on the left--on the PS more than the PCF. However, are they aware that, in conditions which are, of course, difficult, an experiment is taking shape in Gdansk (which might obviously fail) which is as dangerous to them as to Leninism's followers? Until there is evidence to the contrary, the Polish demands are not intended to resurrect capitalism but to introduce a social practice. If [Education Minister] Beullac were to make his disturbing remarks in the Lenin Shipyard he would certainly be shown the door as quickly as the official trade union leaders were.

There is no doubt that recognition of the right to strike and freedom to form associations--an essential gain--is a long way from answering all the far-reaching questions posed by the exercises of democracy in societies at the end of the 20th century. These questions relate in particular to the method of development per se and in relations with the Third World, self-management in the age of supertechnology, the geographical dispersion of complementary enterprises and so forth. It is equally certain that the men and women in Gdansk who decided to assert themselves have not only dealt a blow to the party mandarins and minor chiefs but have called into question any method of organization based on the existence of second-class citizens. This is certainly bad news for all guardians of the system.

L'HUMANITE Editorial

LD040955 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 1 Sep 80 p 1

[Jose Fort editorial: "Polish Sunday"]

[Text] Let us state quite clearly that we welcome the developments this weekend in the Polish situation and the signing of agreements between the strikers and the Polish Government. Those who wanted to "pour fat on the fire" from outside or who were advocating "giving up," those who cherished the hope of seeing Poland become engulfed in problems and who believed they could thereby attack socialism, have gained their just deserts. An important chapter in the events ended in Poland yesterday. However, the book has not been closed.

A responsible attitude was vital in the past 2 weeks. In this respect the Polish workers and government have taught a lesson to those in France and the FRG in particular who found they had sympathies with the working class, setting themselves either as "advisers" or "critics." This does not matter, we welcome their disappointment too.

Despite their exceptional importance the Gdansk and Szczecin agreements are not the final word on a situation which is bound to have repercussions. It is to be hoped that Poland and the Polish communists will find in themselves the strength to learn all the lessons from recent events. The solution announced in the Baltic ports yesterday is certainly positive. At the present stage it also calls for some initial remarks.

The Polish working class has just forcefully expressed social and political demands. The socialist society has taken all the more account of them since they are in keeping with its fundamental nature.

How can we fail to note the method used to solve the crisis? In the Polish case the picket lines were not attacked by the police. The negotiations were public. At no time was repression used against the strike movement. The will for dialogue and consultation prevailed. All those from [CFDT leader] Edmond Maire to [former French minister] Bernard Stasi who shout about a lack of freedom in Poland would do well to consider this fact. Finally, the content of the agreements consecrating the trade union's autonomy in relation to the government has every reason to satisfy us. Isn't it in keeping with our own views approved at the 22d and 23d congresses?

The universal democratic requirement is not a slogan. It is one of the preconditions for socialism's development. But what aim should this democracy have? The point at issue is the workers' really having the opportunity to directly participate in the affairs and decisions which concern them. It is the opportunity to express their needs and their opinions in their own interests and, at a broader level, in the country's interest. This is the path which Poland seems to be taking. This new situation could pave the way for Poland to win new victories for democracy and socialism.

FRANCE-SOIR Comment

LD030849 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 2 Sep 80 pp 1, 5

[Michel Lemarchand editorial: "A Patchy Victory"]

[Text] They have won much, they can lose much. However pleased you are with the victory gained by the Baltic strikers, whose extraordinary determination forced the authorities to their knees, along with the fact that the strike is ending and work is being resumed under fundamentally changed conditions for the Polish workers, still you have to control your enthusiasm. There are several reasons for this. First, the fact that Poland is and will remain a Soviet satellite and that in the Kremlin the granting of the right to strike and the creation of independent trade unions have not been appreciated to say the lease. If taking advantage of this restored freedom workers in Gdansk and elsewhere were to start a new movement tomorrow, Moscow could force Gierek and his government to suddenly go into reverse, arguing that too much liberalism threatens socialism and leads to anarchy. In any case, this reasoning can be applied to the Polish ruling team itself. Even though there are some "doves" within it, there still are some "hawks" there as well who are only waiting for a false step on the part of the workers to come back in strength, proclaim a state of emergency and, with or without aid by Soviet tanks, restore the "good old system." Especially since in an economically enfeebled Poland the winter could be hard and since, therefore, an either spontaneous or fomented new people's movement remains a possibility.

To these reasons for concern it is necessary to add the more or less indirect ways which the authorities could use to empty the documents signed on Sunday of real content. Especially with reference to the right to strike (it can always be asserted that all other ways to resolve any conflict have not been used), independent trade unions (whose definition is very vague and whose prerogatives are very limited) and any limitation of censorship (it is sufficient to call any unwelcome information a "state secret").... However, despite any possible reservations with respect to the future, the concluded agreement must be welcomed. Today. Viewed from the West, where the advantages extracted by the Polish strikers have long had the force of law, it may obviously seem quite meager. But viewed from Warsaw and all the other Eastern capitals it is simply of enormous importance.

Finally, while assessing the risks of "slippage," tribute should be paid not only to the strikers' courage but also to Gierek's wisdom. Obviously it can be said that he was compelled and forced to say "yes" to the strikers. However, it cannot be denied either that he could have opted for refusal and confrontation. The Red Army is not far away and might would have made right. But Edward Gierek is a Pole first and a communist second. It is in this fact that the most convincing explanation of the authorities' large-scale retreat can perhaps be found.

MALTA'S PREMIER MEETS WITH COSSIGA ON LIBYAN DISPUTE

AU040930 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Text] Rome, 4 Sep (ANSA)--Maltese Prime Minister Dom Mintoff paid a surprise visit to Rome Wednesday for a round of talks with Italian Premier Francesco Cossiga and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. Dom Mintoff met with the two Italian officials for four hours. Malta's Attorney General Edgar Mizzi, an expert in international aid, was also on hand.

Mintoff dubbed his a "work visit" and included a broad discussion of the international situation--Middle East, Mediterranean security and cooperation in Europe--and Italo-Maltese relations. The talks are believed to have focused also on the role Italy could play in the recent Malta-Libya dispute over the continental shelf between the island and the North African state.

The Italian officials defined the state of relations between Italy and Malta "excellent" and both sides voiced their satisfaction. Mintoff, Cossiga and Colombo discussed political, economic and financial problems linked to the development of relations between the two states. Contacts have been under way for some time between Rome and Valetta to strengthen ties between the two states with the objective of guaranteeing Malta's independence, neutrality and nonalignment, and Foreign Undersecretary Guiseppe Zamberletti has often visited Malta recently.

A spokesman for the Italian Government disclosed that contacts between the two governments will continue at the technical level. In reply to newsmen's questions, the spokesman said that the talks also dealt with the "Saipen II" affair, which plunged relations between Malta and Libya to their worst level last week when Libyan warships threatened the Italian off-shore oil rig, drilling for oil off Malta on behalf of the American Texaco, holder of the drilling license on behalf of the Maltese Government. The "Saipen II" platform is now being dismantled for removal under (protection) of the Italian Navy. The spokesman did not disclose the content of the conversations but confirmed that an unidentified nation is playing a mediation role between the strategic Mediterranean island and Libya.

Talks On Oil Dispute

LD032254 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] The long talks at the Palazzo Chigi between Maltese leader Dom Mintoff, Prime Minister Cossiga and Foreign Minister Colombo have ended. Correspondent Franco Bucchiarelli reports:

The meeting ended a short while ago. Mintoff has certainly not emerged satisfied from the 4 hours of talks with Cossiga and Colombo. It is no secret that the head of the Maltese Government came to Rome to ask for a clear commitment in favor of Malta, but in fact he obtained only formal pledges to improve the relations of technical and trade co-operation between the two countries. The question of oil in the disputed sea area is a problem which Malta and Libya have to solve without any external interference, except for a mediating role. In fact, behind-the-scenes attempts are being made to initiate dialogue between Mintoff and Al-Qadhdhafi. Here for the time being there is no need for Italy to assume a mediating role. According to leaks, Iraq is almost certainly performing this task.

With regard to the platform of the Saipen II and the attitude of our government, it is suggested that work be interrupted until the issue between Malta and Tripoli is clarified. The attempt made by Mintoff to continue the drilling has not found a response among the Italian interlocutors. The Italian Government has issued no communique on the visit and on the results of the meeting.

Only a vague explanation has been made in an informal way but nothing official. The Maltese guests were told about an enrichment of trade agreements and technical cooperation. It was simply stated that all the talking was done at a high level, that is to say between heads of government. There is nothing else besides this. Mintoff gave a summary evaluation saying that the visit had contributed to carrying forward a dialogue awaiting better times.

Press Review

AU031947 Rome ANSA in English 1925 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Rome, 3 Sep (ANSA)--Maltese Prime Minister Dom Mintoff's surprise visit here today was greeted by many Italian dailies this morning as possibly marking what the Turin newspaper, LA STAMPA, billed as an "important turning-point" in the Italian role in Libyan-Maltese relations. Relations between the North African state and the strategic Mediterranean island plunged for the worse last week when Libyan warships threatened an Italian drilling platform, Saipen-II, seeking oil off Malta on behalf of the American Texaco, holder of the drilling license on behalf of the Maltese Government. The platform is now being dismantled for removal under the protection of the Italian Navy, but as the leftwing daily "PAESE SERA" pointed out, "the Maltese reactions have been very tough."

Another Rome daily, IL MESSAGGERO said that the "Italian naval presence at the Medina Bank where Saipen-II is anchored formed part of the agreement initialled by Italy and Malta in August". This was a "comprehensive agreement for military, economic and cultural aid which Malta still does not want to announce, but which has been confirmed in Italian Government circles", IL MESSAGGERO noted.

"In practise", IL MESSAGGERO added, "Rome has retreated from the immobilism of a year and a half ago and has accepted to guarantee the island's neutrality". According to the daily, "Mintoff hopes to return home to Malta where a mantle of silence covers everything regarding the negotiations with Italy, with something new to tell his people, who are tired of the relationship of economic subordination to Libya". IL MESSAGGERO added that the Italian Foreign Ministry, after informing Al-Qadhdhafi that the agreement between Malta and Italy was "born in anti-Libyan function, wants to convince Tripoli to seek a peaceful settlement of the dispute".

The Milan daily, CORRIERE DELLA SERA, observed in this connection that a "glimmer of light for a peaceful solution of the dispute has come from Tripoli itself."

By the dispute, both IL MESSAGGERO and CORRIERE DELLA SERA referred to Libyan claims to the area where Saipen-II was at work. In effect, as the CORRIERE noted, in his speech yesterday for the eleventh anniversary of the revolution that brought him to power, Qadhdhafi called on the Libyan general congress of the people to discuss the dispute and refer it to the International Court of Justice in The Hague.

The new stand taken by the Libyan chief-of-state, according to Rome's LA REPUBBLICA daily, brings the dispute back in time to the period in 1976 when Libya and Malta seemed to be in agreement about turning to The Hague Court for a verdict. "But the agreement never saw its way through to the court," the daily added.

Milan's conservative IL GIORNALE NUOVO was cautious today about believing that Italy and Malta have already come to terms on an agreement. "The news reported in some newspapers that the agreement has already been made has been labelled 'premature' by reliable sources," according to the Milan daily, which seemed to believe that "no agreement has as yet been reached".

Another Milan daily, IL GIORNO, was of the same opinion, that it was "premature" to speak of an agreement that has already been sealed. The paper noted, however, that Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo publicly disclosed that there was what he termed "hypotheses of agreement" between Italy and Malta in informal remarks to the press upon his return recently from Malta. According to Colombo, these "hypotheses" were currently under study.

NEOFASCISTS KILL PRINTER MISTAKEN FOR REPORTER

AU031015 Rome ANSA in English 0805 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Rome, September 3 (ANSA)--A 24-year old printer was the victim of an apparent error last night when he was shot to death by neofascist gunmen on a street in Rome's working class Monteverde neighborhood.

Right after Maurizio di Leo, a printer for the Rome daily IL MESSAGGERO, was gunned down, the ANSA news agency received an anonymous call claiming the assault as the work of the neofascist Revolutionary Armed Nuclei (NAR) terrorist organization. But the caller gave away the error by saying:

"Revolutionary Armed Nuclei calling. We have just executed IL MESSAGGERO 's Michele Concina in Monteverde. A communique will follow".

Concina, a MESSAGGERO reporter who covers terrorist developments for the wide-circulation daily, had no explanation for the reference when contacted by ANSA shortly after the call was received. The reporter and the printer often left the newspaper office at the same time in the evening. Last night however, Concina stayed on at his desk longer than usual. The neofascist killers apparently tailed and slayed Di Leo by mistake.

AUSTRALIAN IMMIGRATION MINISTER: ITALIAN EMIGRANTS WELCOME

AU031040 Rome ANSA in English 0850 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Rome, 3 Sep (ANSA)--Australian Immigration Minister Ian MacPhee has given assurances here that his government would welcome a large share of Italian emigrants in its 95,000 immigration quota for 1980. MacPhee, whose ministry also deals with Australian ethnic affairs, said that Italians had made a praiseworthy contribution to his country's development at a round of talks in Rome yesterday with Italian Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Libero Della Briotta. The Australian Government official promised greater flexibility than in the past in screening prospective Italian emigrants in order to facilitate family reunions.

Della Briotta acknowledged Canberra's good intentions while stressing three priority demands:

1. A concrete commitment to work out a welfare agreement, similar to the ones that the Rome government has with other countries where there are a lot of Italian emigrants, in the near future.

2. A revision of screening standards so that divided families might be reunited.

3. Moves for a rapid solution to the problem of obtaining recognition of academic diplomas and professional qualifications.

SA CARNEIRO COMMENTS ON MADEIRA AUTONOMY, WORLD SECURITY

LD032232 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Prime Minister Sa Carneiro is currently in Funchal where he delivered a speech at the opening session of the General Assembly of the Atlantic Treaty Association today.

Speaking soon after his arrival in the archipelago, the head of government said that the triangle comprised between mainland Portugal and the autonomous regions [Madeira and Azores] is vital for the security and defense of the Western world and plays a relevant role within the framework of NATO. The prime minister, who is due back in Lisbon tonight, delivered his speech at the opening session and said that the two major dangers facing the world today are underdevelopment and Soviet imperialism. He added that the USSR is today the only imperialist power and upheld the view that the real meaning of detente should be viewed in this light.

Sa Carneiro said that the events in Afghanistan and Iran have serious consequences for the future, adding that no doctrine on East-West relations advocated by any allied country can justify attitudes of passiveness or obliviousness to the facts which are developing with increasing violence.

In a speech of welcome also delivered on the same occasion, Chairman of the Madeira Regional Government Alberto Joao Jardim said that the political autonomy of the regions is a major factor in defense of freedom in a world where massification is increasingly intensifying because of what he described as increased activity by ideological, cultural and economic multinationals. He also said that the failure to secure the promulgation of the statute on politico-administrative autonomy for Madeira has caused such a serious deadlock in the process of autonomy for the archipelago that the regional government bodies have decided not to submit any further statutes to the organs of sovereignty.

Joao Jardim said in this connection that the Madeira autonomy statute was approved by the regional and national parliaments only to be rejected by an unrepresentative military body [Council of the Revolution] which, he said, in fact tutors the Portuguese political regime, imparting in it traits which are at variance with the political democratic systems in force in the Atlantic Treaty member countries.

GENERAL EANES ANNOUNCES CANDIDACY IN PRESIDENTIAL RACE

LD040854 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0700 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Summary] General Ramalho Eanes announced today that he will run for reelection as president of the republic in the December elections.

His decision to take part in the campaign for the presidential race came after a period of reflection and a few days after he had received a delegation of public figures. The delegation had asked General Ramalho Eanes to offer himself again as a candidate for the presidential office.

SOARES CARNEIRO COMMENTS ON ROLE OF PRESIDENT

[Excerpt] "In the present internal and international situation and under the Portuguese system, the head of state will not be able to grow weaker until he is confined to formally representing the republic," General Soares Carneiro stated in an interview with O PRIMEIRO DE JANEIRO published today.

According to that candidate in the presidential elections, it rests with the head of state to ensure "the defense of the republic, at the service of the fatherland's prestigious continuity, and also to see to the good functioning of the institutions, which depends, among other things, on the revision of the constitution."

In Soares Carneiro's opinion, it is not desirable for the Socialist Party [PS] to take part actively in this, asserting that in the event of a "grave deadlock," a referendum constitutes a "perfectly legitimate solution."

Last, after stating that, if he is elected president of the republic, "there will be no PS/PCP coalition government, or any other which explicitly or otherwise represents an agreement with the communists," Soares Carneiro told O PRIMEIRO DE JANEIRO that General Ramalho Eanes is "a tormented and introspective man who is constantly wondering what he should do in order to become what he is not: He would like to be a democrat, a progressive, a distinguished man."

DEMOCRATIC ALLIANCE, FRS CAMPAIGN AIDES CITE ELECTION PLANS

[Dinis De Abreu, Diogo Pires Aurelio and Filipe Vieira interview with Democratic Alliance and Republican and Socialist Front [FRS] election campaign coordinators Antonio Capucho and Antonio Guterres: "Elections Will Not Be Ideological Choice"--date and place not given]

[Excerpts] The campaigns of the Democratic Alliance and the Republican and Socialist Front for the approaching parliamentary elections will center predominantly on an appraisal of the government's performance, relegating issues of a markedly ideological nature to second place and thus running counter to a widespread tendency since 25 April 1974. This disclosure was made by the coordinators of the Democratic Alliance and FRS campaigns--Antonio Capucho and Antonio Guterres, respectively--at a breakfast in which DIARIO DE NOTICIAS Assistant Editor Dinis De Almeida and journalists Diogo Pires Aurelio and Filipe Vieira took part.

Antonio Guterres made a point of asserting that "the FRS' strategy is not to speak ill of the Democratic Alliance." And he added in this connection: "We will put forward our own alternative for the problems besetting the Portuguese people. The criticism which will be leveled will not be the hub of the strategy. Positive assertion of the front's potential is the essential aspect of the campaign."

"It is a good thing that the FRS will assert itself in a positive manner," Antonio Capucho interjected, pointing out: "This has not been the case so far. The broadcasting time on television--which Guterres stresses does not belong to the FRS--has been used to erode the Democratic Alliance's image, not exactly presenting itself as an alternative to the government."

Antonio Capucho maintained that "the reformists remain within the Democratic Alliance's area," and cited the name of Sousa Tavares and instances of other people "backing General Soares Carneiro's candidacy, which the alliance supports." The man in charge of the Democratic Alliance's campaign attributed no particular importance to Adriano Moreira's candidacy, and commented that the same thing was about to happen with respect to the FRS. However, he made a point of saying that "the elections will not be an ideological choice but the choice of a government, and very pragmatically on the basis of its actions."

When urged to comment on the logic governing the formation of the FRS, Guterres began by recalling that the Socialist Party [PS] was exposed to the "natural erosion of a party which had been in government in Portugal since 1975," thus creating a situation "in which the party was squeezed between the United People's Alliance and the Democratic Alliance." According to the FRS strategist, "a situation of this kind required a new response. Hence the invitation extended to various parties and personalities located outside the PS' area of influence, to its left and to its right."

Referring to the rapprochement between the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy [UEDS] and the PS, Guterres asserted: "For two political parties to become reconciled is a positive development in Portuguese political life. The UEDS was always within the area of democratic socialism."

Again according to his statements, the formation of the front in the manner in which it was conceived has been very well received by the party members--"who are, of course, more sensitive"--and there has even been a considerable increase in participation in the party's ranks.

Again answering Antonio Capucho, the FRS representative stated that the PS has defined its strategy of alliances, leaving no room for doubts. Thus, for instance, "it is absolutely clear that the PS will not agree to form alliances with the Communist Party, despite the fact that this is the Democratic Alliance's kind of propaganda, which is aimed at lumping the PS together with the PCP." And he added that the FRS is "an alliance of various political forces with a logic of government." The aim will be to secure a majority (absolute or relative). If this is not achieved, "there would need to be mutual openness, with a democratic spirit, keeping in mind the formation of new majorities." Antonio Capucho commented sardonically on the front's plans, stressing that "it is inconceivable that the FRS will increase from 74 to 126 deputies."

Commenting on the existence (or otherwise) of disagreements among the parties comprising the Democratic Alliance, and specifically between the Social Democratic Party and the Social Democratic Center Party, the Social Democratic leader said that, contrary to other alliances which are formed around a gigantic party--"the FRS is the PS allied with itself and its shadow"--two large parties coexist in the Democratic Alliance. "It is natural that disagreements should arise," Antonio Capucho commented, immediately asserting that "despite this, the Democratic Alliance is united."

In view of the party spectrum offered to the electorate for the parliamentary elections, what influence will the forces located to the right and left of the Democratic Alliance and the FRS have? In Antonio Capucho's opinion, "the National Front will not succeed in securing even one deputy, although it could possibly jeopardize the election of another Democratic Alliance deputy in Aveiro. On the other hand, Otelo [Saraiva De Carvalho] is a potential threat to the FRS, although he should deprive the Communist Party of far more votes."

In Antonio Guterres' opinion, the fringes to the left of the FRS will not significantly influence the final results. "Some 50 votes in each district will have no impact. The popular unity front achieved some success when Eanes was presented as a rightwing candidate for the presidential elections. However, we saw the way in which the popular unity activation groups voted in the following elections," the Socialist leader commented, concluding: "Our election campaign will undoubtedly take the Democratic Alliance and the Communist Party into account. The area to the left of the PS is an area in which there is a high level of militancy. We are paying attention to the sector which is wavering between the PS and the Democratic Alliance. There is justification for voting for a front, more than for the PS individually. At the same time, it is important for the PS to win over an area to the left of its electorate."

PCP LEADER CUNHAL ATTACKS PS IN FIGUIERA DA FOZ SPEECH

LD291227 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 21 Aug 80 p 8

[16 August speech by PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal in Figueira Da Foz"]

[Excerpt] There Is No Democratic Alternative Without PCP

That it is necessary to defeat the Democratic Alliance in the coming elections is an opinion which is daily winning over broad sectors of the electorate which previously allowed themselves to be deceived or pressured, but are coming to realize the harmfulness of the reactionary government and the need to put an end to it. But what is the alternative?

It is necessary to dispel gross confusions, misunderstandings and fallacies which some parties, specifically the Socialist Party [PS], are spreading. There is one basic idea which everybody should bear in mind:

No party, coalition or democratic front is in a position to secure an absolute majority of deputies.

To assert, as Mario Soares did at the press conference launching the Republican and Socialist Front [FRS], that the FRS is in a position to secure an absolute majority and to repeat this assertion subsequently with the utmost solemnity constitutes a ridculous electioneering assertion and a deception of the electorate. The PS secretary generally knows perfectly well, as well as we do, that not even with a miracle could he achieve such a result.

The PS' percentage of votes has been decreasing from election to election--37.9 percent in the 1975 elections to the constituent assembly, 35 percent in the 1976 elections to the assembly of the republic and 27.5 percent in the 1979 elections. The Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy and the Independent Social Democratic Association--now allies of the PS in the FRS--represent very little electorally. Even if the PS recovers much of the electorate which it has lost, it will be almost impossible to achieve the highest vote total which it attained after 25 April [1974]--(37.9 percent for the constituent assembly).

It is clear that within the constitutional framework and in light of the parties' current relative strengths, no party of democratic front is in a position to win the elections on its own and to constitute a democratic alternative on its own. For this reason, the electorate should be fully aware that, if it is true that there will be no democratic majority in the assembly of the republic without the PS, it is also true that this majority would not exist without the PCP, either. There is no democratic alternative without the PCP; there is no democratic alternative without the United People Alliance [APU].

Necessary Democratic Unity

In light of these facts, what is the PS leaders' stance? Their stance is to insist that they will not ally themselves with the PCP and will not ally themselves with the APU. And what is the PCP's stance?

The PCP tirelessly persists in asserting that understanding and joint or coordinated action on the part of all democratic forces--specifically the FRS and the APU, the PS and the PCP--is increasingly necessary.

The PCP insists on a policy of unity among all democratic forces in the great electoral battle which is now beginning and in which the fate of democracy, the fate of freedom, the fate of the Portugal of April, could be decided.

The volution of the political situation since 25 April has demonstrated with tragic clarity that reaction's advances were possible mainly as a result of the splits, conflicts and confrontations among the democratic political forces (specifically between communists and socialists), and splits, conflicts and confrontations among democratic sectors of the armed forces, which led to the armed forces movement's virtual extinction and the taking of strong positions by reactionary elements deeply hostile to 25 April.

The PS secretary general insists that he will not form alliances with the PCP and with the APU. So with whom will he form them? We must conclude that, if it is not with the PCP, he will end up again by forming them with the rightwing. We are certain that such a prospect not only provokes the indignation of most democratic voters but also provokes the indignation of PS members and socialist voters.

Who is right? Who is serving our people's interests? Who is defending the democratic system?

Is it the PS, which categorically rejects an understanding with the PCP, when that understanding is essntial for forming a real democratic majority which will serve as the basis for the formation of a democratic government, and which even now continues through the medium of its secretary general (14 August interview with our journal) to accept the possibility of a future alliance with Sa Carneiro's Social Democratic Party?

Or is it the PCP, which, setting aside resentments, distrust and bitter lessons of the past, always insists on unity among democrats and unity between the communists and socialists, because this unity, under present conditions, is an irreplaceable precondition for a democratic alternative?

We are certain that the Portuguese people will not prove right those who set pride, resentments and narrow and sectarian party viewpoints above the imperative need to defend democracy. And they will prove the PCP right, because the PCP sets the interests of the people andthe country and safeguarding freedoms and the system above everything else.

And the leftists? What does their running in the elections mean? What outcome could it have?

The meaning and outcome are absolutely clear. Several thousand votes will be taken away from the left--votes which will elect no deputy, useless votes, wasted votes, which, if they were cast for the APU, would make the election of leftwing deputies possible, but which by being cast for leftist candidates with no prospects of being elected will make possible in some instances (as has happened in previous elections), the election of rightwing candidates.

A vote for the leftist candidates is an indirect vote for reaction. The only sure and certain vote for democracy is for the PCP and for the APU.

CSCE REPRESENTATIVE DESCRIBES TALKS WITH USSR OFFICIALS

LD291453 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 27 Aug 80 p 2

[Text] Moscow--Leader of the Spanish delegation to the CSCE conference Javier Ruperez has described as "really good," despite inevitable disagreements and differences of emphasis, the atmosphere of the intensive day of work in Moscow yesterday to discuss the preparations for the Madrid meeting, which, following that in Belgrade 2 years ago, is to continue the Helsinki Conference.

A Soviet note has described the meeting as "constructive and businesslike," which in the system of formulations customary in Moscow has a favorable significance, but is far from the descrption "cordial," which is used for meetings without obvious problems.

The day began at 1000 with talks with the Soviet delegation headed by chief of the First European Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Adamishin, continued with a working lunch with Deputy Foreign Minister Kovalev, and following further talks concluded with a dinner at the Spanish ambassador's residence.

Javier Ruperez enlarged on his account of the day by stating that the preparation and agenda of the Madrid meeting were reviewed point by point, and specifically:

Evaluation of the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act, which is of major importance, since it could cause confrontations with respect to the degree of this implementation. From the Spanish viewpoint, the degree and extent of implementation require a thorough review to make possible the continuation and enhancement of cooperation in Europe and the putting forward of new proposals.

Particular attention was devoted to the so-called confidence-building measures; that is, the military aspects of security and cooperation in Europe, and, specifically, the proposal for convening a special conference to discuss these measures.

The well known "three baskets" contained in the Helsinki Final Act, one of which centers on the problem of human rights, are of crucial importance to the Madrid meeting's success, in the sense that it is not possible to broach just one aspect but rather each and every one of them in a balanced appraisal.

Last, Javier Ruperez emphasized that the Madrid meeting involves aspects which are secondary but important for bilateral relations among the countries taking part, and specifically Spain and the USSR. The leader of the Spanish delegation stressed the need for a dialogue in which no attempt will be made to conceal disagreements, since this would only cause ambiguities and misunderstandings, but will be of a frank and clarifying nature and designed to "lubricate" the obvious friction from which the policy of detente is now suffering.

OFFICIAL SAYS MINISTERIAL CHANGES FORTHCOMING

[Text] After the meeting of the Council of Ministers--which ended at about 1515--Secretary of State for Information Josep Melia confirmed that there will shortly be ministerial changes and that the Union of the Democratic Center is preparing a document to formalize a parliamentary pact, although he did not say with which political group or groups.

ATAKOL REPLIES TO ROLANDHIS' COMMENTS ON TALKS

TA291858 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, has said that the Greek Cypriots wanted the Cyprus problem to continue. He was commenting on a speech by the foreign minister of the Greek Cypriot administration, Mr Rolandhis, at a symposium in southern Cyprus where he alleged that a continuation of the Cyprus problem was not to the benefit of either community. Mr Atakol stated that what Mr Rolandhis said was untrue and in fact it was the benefit of the Greek Cypriot community if the Cyprus problem continued, because the Greek Cypriot administration posing as the Government of Cyprus had for years usurped the share of the Turkish Cypriot community in the foreign aid extended to Cyprus as whole.

He added that this usurped share had been used to the benefit of the Greek Cypriots. He repeated that the Greek Cypriots had also imposed an embargo against the Turkish Cypriots and prevented their economic development. Mr Atakol repeated the proposal that if the Greek Cypriots gave up their policy of wanting the Cyprus problem to continue, a bizonal and bicommunal federal republic of Cyprus could be established where the two communities would live in equality. The minister of foreign affiars and defense, Mr Atakol, has drawn the attention of world public opinion to new examples of Greek Cypriot fanaticism. He pointed out that in the days when the Cyprus intercommunal talks are to be resumed the Greek Cypriots had resorted to new propaganda campaigns. He cited as an example new match boxes being distributed in the Greek Cypriot zone, on which a map of Cyprus was printed with the Turkish zone covered in blood and bearing the subtitle: I cannot forget. He stated that what the Greek Cypriots should not forget ought to be the suppression and the racial discriminations they had inflicted on the Turkish Cypriot community in the years prior to the Turkish peace operation and the massacre of old people, women and children in the Turkish Cypriot villages during the peace operation which had brought peace and tranquillity to the island.

Mr Atakol said that this new campaign at a time when the intercommunal talks aimed at finding a just and lasting solution of the Cyprus problem were to be resumed showed the true mentality of the Greek Cypriots. Mr Atakol concluded by saying that the Turkish Cypriot community was hoping to forget in time the sufferings it had endured since the 1950s in a bizonal, bicommunal, independent federal republic of Cyprus but that the Greek Cypriots did not share the same hopes.

HOUSE DELEGATION LEAVES ON STATE VISIT TO CSSR

NC311515 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 31 Aug 80

[Text] House President Mikhailidhis left this afternoon at the head of an all-party parliamentary delegation on a 5-day state visit to the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic at the invitation of Federal Assembly Chairman Indra. The other members of the delegation are Deputies Pelekanos, Toumazis, Konstandinou and Theodhorou. In a statement, Mr Mikhailidhis said this visit, which is the first being paid to Czechoslovakia, falls within the framework of the more general efforts by the house to contribute toward the international projection of the Cyprus issue as well as toward establishing links of cooperation between the two parliaments. We also said that Cyprus-Czechoslovak relations are ones of friendship and cooperation--a fact which, as he stressed, has been proved by the firm support Czechoslovakia has rendered to the Cyprus struggle. Mr Mikhailidhis expressed his warm thanks for this support and stressed the immense importance Cyprus attaches to its continuation. He concluded: I believe that this visit, beyond the fact that it will open some additional possibilities for contacts with other parliaments, strengthens relations at the government level and also consolidates friendship between our two peoples. The all-party parliamentary delegation was seen off by Czechoslovak Ambassador to Cyprus, Mr Hejc and other officials.

PASOK, AVEROF EXCHANGE STATEMENTS OVER 'SECRET ARMY' ARTICLE

ATO11415 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 1 Sep 80 p 1

[Excerpt] Defense Minister Averof and the PASOK press office were exchanging statements until late last night. The reason for these sallies was an Averof article in a morning newspaper yesterday (AKROPOLIS) headlined "Andreas Is Organizing a Secret Army." In that article the defense minister stressed--because of the PASOK chairman's recent statements in Corfu (and because of past declarations)--that (Papandreou) will use this army at a suitable time to forcefully impose his aim: a totalitarian one-party state. "Greeks beware!" concluded Averof's article. "In order to understand how necessary it is for you to do so, you only have to carefully read everything PASOK has declared."

In reply to Averof, the PASOK press office last night made the following statement:

"The more Averof's political plans fail the more his imagination as a writer is strengthened. Overtly he writes against PASOK but, covertly, he plans and secretly makes designs against his own party. What his designs against New Democracy will produce neither concerns nor occupies us. On the contrary, his continued writings against PASOK charm us. We avidly want them to continue because we know how every speech by well-known Averof strengthens the people's will and faith in PASOK."

Rebuttal by Averof

In reply to my article yesterday PASOK studiously avoided discussing the substance of everything I wrote. This is natural because I proved, through PASOK's own texts, that it is a party encompassing all ideologies and believing in a one-party regime. Even more, as evidenced by its texts and actions, most probably it is already organizing strike groups. However, even if PASOK avoids touching upon the burning substance, many intelligent Greeks have studied it and will continue to study it; they will note the specific uneasiness which I have analyzed and the fact that PASOK is trying through quibbles to avoid replying to the terrible questions which emerge from its own official texts, from its own suspicious activities.

Counterreply by PASOK

It is clear that Averof's bitterness over the final loss of New Democracy leadership has led him into the realm of absurdity since it is also clear that he has lost all sense of the ridiculous. After all, his balancing act as a writer concerns New Democracy above all, not PASOK.

"Nothing About the Cigarette Case"

I will reply to PASOK with an expression that was dear to never-forgotten A. Papandreou: "Again not a word about the cigarette case" [allusion to a Greek saying which means "not a word said about the issue"]. I will add: New Democracy seems to be causing anxiety to PASOK and justly so.

Government Spokesman

ATO21312 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 2 Sep 80 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] Contrary to the PASOK leftwing which accuses Papandreou of having made "an opening to the right," National Defense Minister E. Averof has cited both past texts and recent statements by the chairman of this party to substantiate his accusations concerning the organizing of strike groups for the imposition of a one-party state.

In reply to the question of whether or not the government adopts Averof's charges, a government spokesman said that the minister of national defense, like any minister or deputy from New Democracy, is free to express his opinions and that it would be most democratic if that were the case in other parties, too. After all, the same spokesman added, Averof substantiated his evaluations with statements and texts by Papandreou.

ASSEMBLY COMPLETES DEBATE ON NSP MOTION AGAINST ERKMEN

TA040544 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] The National Assembly today completed discussion of the NSP interpellation motion submitted by NSP Deputy Necmettin Erbakan from Konya and his colleagues against Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen. The motion of no confidence against the foreign minister will be submitted to a National Assembly vote on Friday.

NSP Deputy Recai Kutan from Malatya was the first to address the assembly on the interpellation motion. Acting Assembly President Memduh Eksi chaired the meeting. RPP Deputy Hikmet Cetin, NAP Deputy Mehmet Dogan from Kayseri and JP Deputy Ali Naili Erdem from Izmir expressed their views on behalf of their party groups.

Replying to criticisms levelled at the assembly, Foreign Minister Erkmen said that the interpellation motion was the result of ungratefulness. Pointing out that it was unreasonable to allege that the EEC was a Christian conglomeration and that Turkey would be assimilated by it, Erkmen said that the EEC was not an organization above the national sovereignities. Observing that the cancellation of Notam No 714 was a realistic measure, Erkmen said that this decision had provided certain political and economic profits. Erkmen added that the government was pursuing a determined policy to safeguard Turkish rights in the Aegean and that it intensified efforts to find a negotiated solution to the Aegean problem. Erkmen rejected accusations that the rights of Turks living in Western Thrace were being neglected.

Referring to the issue of relations with countries in the region, Erkmen said that relations with Iran were being conducted within the framework of good neighborliness based upon the principles of respect for independence and sovereignty as well as equality and noninterference in internal affairs. Erkmen added that his government pursued a determined policy on Afghanistan calling for an end to the invasion and the right of the Afghan people to self-determination. Erkmen said that this stand would be adopted in the future as well. Erkmen continued: Turkey has a clear stand on the issues of the Middle East and Jerusalem. This stand has been pursued for almost a year in a determined and effective manner during all UN and Islamic Conference meetings. The assembly knows that Turkey's approach to these issues in solidarity with the Islamic world and the Arab countries has been appreciated by the Arab and Islamic countries.

Recalling that since the creation of the republic all Turkish Governments have pursued a national foreign policy without any partisan considerations and have made efforts to keep foreign policy issues out of internal policy matters, Erkmen said that the adoption of this motion threatened this traditional stand.

After discussions on the interpellation were completed, NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan and his four colleagues submitted a no confidence motion against Foreign Minister Erkmen. The motion charges Erkmen with efforts to make Turkey join the EEC in a bid to separate Turkey from the Islamic world and transform it into a province of Europe. It adds that the cancellation of Notam No 714 was against the national interests. The motion further claims that the government failed to protect the Turks in Western Thrace against cruelties and damaged the national interests by its stand toward Iran, Afghanistan and the Islamic Conference. The motion recalls that relations with Israel were not severed despite the fact that Israel proclaimed Jerusalem as its capital and adopted an aggressive stand on every occasion. The motion says that these were the reasons for no confidence in the foreign minister and requested a no confidence vote against him. Assembly President Eksi said that in accordance with the constitution, the motion would be voted on Friday, 5 September.

NSP Statement

TA031757 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] The decisions made by the NSP Administrative Council in its meeting last Monday were released today. The statement says that in the event of a request for a confidence vote as a result of the NSP interpellation motion against the foreign minister, efforts will be made to topple the government. The statement claims that the Justice Party minority government has not been able to fulfill any of its promises, that anarchic incidents are escalating, that there are liberated areas [dominated by leftists] throughout the country, that the citizen is being crushed under the burden of the high cost of living and that production has come to a standstill. The statement adds that despite the large devaluations of the Turkish currency, there has been no increase in foreign exchange revenues from Turkish workers abroad or in imports. What has been achieved is an increase in the country's foreign debts and damage to the purchasing value of the Turkish currency, the statement says. The statement ends by calling for an early resolution of the issue of early elections, the enactment of the social bills submitted to the Grand National Assembly and the speedy election of a president.

DUTCH FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA031635 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Dutch Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw arrived in Ankara by air today at 1525 for an official visit. The Dutch foreign minister and his wife were received by Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen at the Esenboga airport. In a statement at the airport's VIP lounge, Erkmen expressed his satisfaction with the Dutch foreign minister's visit to Turkey. He added that he was convinced that all matters between the two countries would be solved in the best possible way. Replying to Erkmen, the visiting foreign minister said that he would discuss with the Turkish foreign minister the international situation in addition to bilateral issues. Official talks between Turkey and the Netherlands will begin tomorrow.

VISITING BANGLADESH MINISTER SIGNS TRADE PROTOCOL

TA271919 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 27 Aug 80

[Excerpt] A Turkish-Bangladesh protocol aimed at developing the trade relations between the two countries has been signed in Ankara. The protocol was signed by Minister of Commerce Halil Basol on behalf of Turkey and by Bagladesh Jute Minister Habibullah Khan, who has been in Ankara for the last 2 days. Speaking at the signing ceremony, Basol said that Bangladesh will initially set up a jute bureau in Ankara in accordance with the protocol and that later a jute center will be opened through the joint partnership of the two countries. Noting that Bangladesh agreed to meet Turkey's jute needs, as stipulated by the protocol, Basol noted that Tukey will supply Bangladesh with railway cars. Khan said that his contacts in Ankara had been positive. He left Ankara for Izmir this evening.

[Text] Turkish Federated State of Cyprus President Rauf Denktas said that the latest statements by Greek Cypriot community leader Spiros Kiprianou proved his intention to once more drag the Cyprus issue into international platforms. President Denktas arrived in Istanbul today on his way to West Berlin to attend a 3-day seminar on freedom in development strategy and human dignity. He will leave for the FRG on Sunday. In a statement to reporters at Yesilkoy Airport, Denktas said that the seminar was an occasion to present the Turkish views on the Cyprus issue.

VOTCP CRITICIZES PRESENCE OF U.S. WARSHIPS IN ISTANBUL

TA030849 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Excerpts] The U.S. imperialists are bringing their warships to Istanbul by relying on their loyal lackeys. They are crushing our independence and our national dignity.

Two warships belonging to U.S. imperialists entered the port of Istanbul. This action by the U.S. imperialists, which tramples on our national independence and dignity, is occurring for the first time in over 10 years. As will be recalled, all the patriotic forces in our country had, at that time, chased the U.S. 6th Fleet from our ports and territorial waters.

Why are the imperialists able to come to our country now and not before? Why are they now able to pollute our ports with their warships and crush our national independence and dignity? This is because people like Demirel and Turkes and the NATOite and pro-American militarist generals at the head of the army are creating this opportunity and atmosphere for the U.S. imperialists. The motive of enhancing the sovereignty of U.S. imperialism lies behind the bloodshed caused by the likes of Demirel and Turkes through state terrorism and fascist terrorism and their attempts to establish a semimilitary despotic system. The truth behind the fact that U.S. warships are able to return to our ports after many years and after having been chased away is thus becoming apparent.

Why do the collaborationist and monopolistic bosses and people like Demirel and Turkes want to establish a despotic system? This is because they are the loyal lackeys of U.S. imperialism. Their masters--U.S. generals--want to use our country as a striking force against other peoples and countries in our region and in the Middle East.

The fact that U.S. imperialists are showing themselves in our ports with their warships during the 30 August period--one of the most glorious days for our national independence--is not a coincidence. All patriots inside and outside the army know that imperialist forces, which were chased away by our people, are now holding our country under their claws through new colonialist methods. A handful of collaborationist and monopolistic bosses and the likes of Demirel and Turkes, who are creating an atmosphere of bloodshed and oppression in the country in order to secure the bosses' interests, are the culprits of this situation.

Our patriotic people will not allow our national independence and dignity to be trampled on in this manner. The Turkish Communist Party, which was born in the flames of the national liberation war and which is now fighting in the first ranks of the independence struggle, calls on all patriots and all progressive parties and organizations to unite and form a powerful fist against U.S. imperialists and their bloody and tyrannical lackeys such as Demirel and Turkes. Murderous U.S. ships, get out of our ports!

TCP 60TH BIRTHDAY MESSAGE STRESSES DEMOCRATIC UNITY OF ACTION

TA031159 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Article from 1 September issue of ATIUM--the Turkish Communist Party organ--entitled "For 60 years," written by Party Secretary General Bilen]

[Excerpt] The archenemy has two facets. These two facets consist of imperialism and the bloody despotic system imposed on our people by the bourgeoisie--the reactionary, antipeople and collaborationist monopolies which tie our country to NATO. The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] is waging a struggle against this system and showing signs of success. It is preparing the working class and the masses for a progressive and democratic revolution, which will pave the way to socialism. It is working to organize such a struggle on a national level. Such a struggle can be successful only by first securing the unity of the working class. It can be successful by solidifying the worker-peasant alliance and by gathering all the class and political forces of the progressive democratic revolution in a national democratic front.

This is a very difficult struggle. The TCP is tackling such a struggle. The world and our country are facing an increasing threat. The issue of peace or war is emerging. The Soviet Union, the socialist countries and the world communist movement are waging a struggle to maintain and enhance peace and security on earth, to relieve the tension and to develop the process of detente. Imperialists, especially U.S. expansionist warmongers and the ringleaders of NATO, are increasing their moves to mount the tension, hinder peace, establish new regional warbeds and incite sensitive matters. The Chinese hegemonists are siding with the imperialists and competing with them in provoking wars.

Turkey is part of aggressive blocks and NATO. The U.S. imperialists are placing the new nuclear and neutron weapons, which they are now deploying in European NATO countries, in their aggressive bases in Turkey as well. The collaborationist monopolies and the blood-stained government are indifferent to the future of 45 million people. The government is pursuing a fraudulent policy. It is following in the wake of imperialism, ignoring the future and trying to make profits out of the crisis it is causing. The government is imposing a semimilitary despotic system and is thus increasing the threat of a fascist dictatorship. This is the dictatorship of the collaborationist and monopolistic bourgeoisie--which is advancing toward a state monopolistic capitalism and a financial oligarchy--and of 20 multi-millionaire families.

There are ways to struggle and they are concrete. The unity of action among the TCP and labor parties could serve as a means and an effective lever in gathering all progressive forces leading them to the struggles. This is even more real in the struggle against the semimilitary despotic system.

The duty of establishing a united, legal and massive labor party which will struggle in solidarity with the TCP is on the party's agenda. The developments in the class struggle present us with the solution of this problem. The TCP feels responsible for this.

The TCP is celebrating its 60th birthday with the following struggle slogan: Unity of action against imperialism and the semimilitary despotic system.

SPOKESMAN ON CABINET DISCUSSION OF POLAND

DW041038 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1110 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Correspondent Lenz interview with Deputy Government Spokesman Armin Gruenewald in Bonn--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Let me ask you about one topic of the cabinet meeting which the Federal Government occasionally paraphrases with the term developments in Europe, in this specific case meaning developments in Poland. Does the Federal Government believe that developments there have now been successfully concluded with the latest accords between the strikers and the government, that is to say between the strike committees and the government in Poland?

[Answer] We do believe that. We have high respect for the fact that the conflict was solved on the basis of an agreement and without the use of force. This goes to show how responsibly all the parties involved behaved. We hope that the Poles will succeed in making headway on the road they have embarked on and which is in keeping with the desire of all parties involved. We respect the desire of the Poles, by the way, to settle affairs on their own, without interference from outside, as is in keeping with the CSCE Final Act. For us this basically means that we continue to exercise restraint in our public assessment of the details agreed on over there, just as our alliance partners do.

[Question] Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has succeeded in convincing FRG banks that a credit in the amount of DM1 billion is important and appropriate for the Polish economy at this very time. The banks were amenable. However, they have offered Poland a credit of only DM1.2 billion instead of the DM1.5 billion desired by Poland. Yet this credit is obviously far from sufficient, considering that the chancellor, as we have heard, considers it necessary that other states grant credits as well.

[Answer] You can also put it the other way round and say that from the outset other states have agreed with us that Poland should be helped. They were in accord even before the events in Poland which have occupied us during the past few weeks reached a certain culminating point. You will recall that this credit deal which, as you correctly said, is being organized by private banks was the subject of public discussion a few weeks ago. And thank God the latest developments in Poland did not make the banks harbor doubts about the idea that Poland must be helped. Most of our allies share this view, and surely you have read that U.S. banks, too, want to lend a helping hand.

[Question] Is it possible that sooner or later the question of additional credits to the People's Republic of Poland will crop up in the Federal Republic?

[Answer] We must consider this a possibility, because if we take a look at the balance of payments figures and the figures illustrating the economic situation, it is conceivable indeed that this problem will reappear next year or the year thereafter. Then we will have to see how it can be solved.

[Question] Suppose politicians ask whether a credit to Poland will not encourage a development in the Warsaw Pact that NATO is watching with concern, namely, Warsaw Pact armament. Is this a question that does not trouble the Federal Government?

[Answer] No, that does not cause any problems. The politicians you have just cited do not ask about this, they state it. I must remind you that, for example, such conditions have never been introduced concerning development assistance and probably will not be introduced in the future. Moreover, development assistance involves credits given on the basis of tax revenue.

That is not the case with the People's Republic of Poland. A number of private banks are about to organize a credit. I fail to see how opposition politicians hope to make the banks link political prerequisites with a private sector credit. It is impossible for a private bank to make political demands on the People's Republic of Poland regarding its domestic situation. I consider that idea strange.

[Question] Not only Poland wants to obtain a credit from the Federal Republic which, as we know, is ready for the Poles at least within the framework of 1.2 billion. Yugoslavia has also made a request for a 3 billion credit [currency not specified]. Will the Federal Government support that?

[Answer] That credit is not up for decision at the moment. You may have heard that Yugoslavia is negotiating with the International Monetary Fund, of which it is a member. There is a difference here, for example, with regard to the People's Republic of Poland. The IMF exists--and that is its main function--to help its member states finance balance of payment deficits. Yugoslavia has such possibilities. Such possibilities are still open. As far as we know Yugoslavia is also negotiating with the World Bank. As long as these negotiations with international organizations have not concluded, there is no need for us to debate introducing direct bilateral help.

CATHOLIC HIERARCHY TRIP TO POLAND STILL PLANNED

LD041742 Hamburg DPA in German 1625 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn--A delegation of the German Catholic bishops' conference is to go to Poland next Thursday for a 5-day visit. The trip reciprocates the official visit of the Polish bishops' conference, whose representatives visited the Federal Republic 2 years ago. Besides the primate of the Catholic Church of Poland, Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski, the present pope, who was then archbishop of Krakow, was a member of the delegation. In the opinion of political observers the German bishops' trip had become uncertain for the time being as a result of recent events in Poland.

According to the program published in Bonn and Warsaw on Thursday, the delegation of the German bishops' conference will travel via Warsaw to the Polish pilgrimage center of Czestochowa on 11 September where they will be officially received by the Polish bishops. The German bishops will then visit Trzeonica, Wroclaw, Opole, Katowice, Oswiecim, Krakow and Warsaw until 16 September. At almost all the stops masses are planned at which the German guests will be the main celebrants and preachers. In Oswiecim the bishops plan to gather for prayer in the death cell of canonized Catholic clergyman Maximilian Kolbe.

The German bishops' conference delegation consists of Cardinals Joseph Hoeffner (Cologne), Joseph Ratzinger (Munich), Hermann Volk (Mainz), and Bishops Franz Hengsbach (Essen), Johannes Joachim Degenhardt (Paderborn), Eduard Schick (Fulda) and Reorg Moser (Rottenburg).

PRESS CONSIDERS FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS IN POLAND

DW041158 Cologne Deutchlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Press review on the end of strikes in Poland]

[Text] NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG writes: A so far unprecedented strike movement in the Soviet sphere of power has come to an end. Polish workers on the Baltic Coast and in Upper Silesia have wrested rights from the communist government which are not being granted in any other East bloc state.

So far the working people are the almost total winners. But it would be a fatally wrong conclusion to assume that Moscow has decided to put up with developments in the Western neighbor country. The threatening language in Soviet media reports and commentaries is a sign of the Kremlin's growing irritation. With the absolute statement that no conditions exist in Poland for a "so-called liberalization process," the news agency TASS yesterday addressed one of the sharpest warnings to the Warsaw leadership. The rude criticism of Western reporters in Poland is tantamount to an urge to follow a toughter course. The Warsaw government is acting at the brink of an abyss: If it implements liberalization persistently, it would have to fear the Soviet reaction; if it refuses to implement a basic reform of the system, a country-wide revolt of the workers would threaten.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU notes: The party and the government in Warsaw promised earlier that independent trade unions with their own administration can be set up everywhere in Poland where the workers want to have them. The miners in Upper Silesia, however, have introduced in addition some specific work-related requests in the negotiation package, such as termination of regular weekend shifts and the introduction of the 5-day workweek, and these have been accepted. Keeping the political and particularly economic promises made at the Baltic Coast and in Silesia will thus become in the future the greatest challenge of the communist regime in Poland.

BADISCHE ZEITUNG of Freiburg stresses: The greatest problem for the workers now will be to set up the independent trade unions they have been promised. Inexperience, resulting insecurity and errors could be exploited not only by the leadership, but also by forces that do not adhere to the opposition's sensible course. If the new strike and trade union leaders do not prevail, if they do not work out a common program in due time, the successful fight of this summer could have been in vain.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Commentary

DW041312 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 4 Sep 80 p 4

[Commentary signed JR: "In the End, the Miners"]

[Text] The truth about the strike movement in Poland--its origin, its organization, its leaders--will continue to remain in the twilight of speculations and unproved theories for quite some time. In a review by the Polish agency INTERPRESS, which has reported with amazing frankness and fairness in the past few critical weeks, a passage says that the idea of new trade unions did not originate among the workers, 'but since they consider it their own idea, it will be their task, too, to ensure that they do not slip into the path of political struggle."

Even if the suggestion voiced here were true, that the catalogue of the strikers' demands did not originate in the workers' milieu, it is nevertheless necessary to note that it did articulate their interests--otherwise the workers would not have behaved as they did. What is obvious, however, is that the strike movement in Poland in general and in the coastal region in particular was not born on the spur of the moment or from the ideas of an individual--perhaps Lech Walesa--but discloses mature tactics, strict organization and discipline. The miners' strike in Upper Silesia, which had begun even prior to the settlement in Gdansk and Szczecin, has confirmed this once again. It becomes even clearer now than at the week's end that the loss of coal extraction--and Poland cannot live without coal extraction--was the very weight which tipped the scale to the advantage of the workers. What happened in Upper Silesia was not an aftermath, but the concerted action of the labor forces in various industries. The people from Katowice were more than mere observers in Gdansk.

The question becomes obvious as to whether all this was simply organized underground or whether the desire for changes had advocates in the leadership as well. The reactions by the party, the government and the Catholic clergy show common elements which allow the conclusion that there is cooperation "upstairs" as well.

GENSCHER GIVES ADDRESS ON DETENTE POLICY

LD041112 Hamburg DPA in German 0927 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Text] Berlin--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher warned today in Berlin against the dangers of further arming. Opening the annual congress of "Liberal International" in the Reichstag building here, he said if only a fraction of current expenditures in money and human abilities for military purposes were transferred to development tasks then the future of the Third World would look totally different. Instead, there is the threat of arming in the Third World, and with it the increasing danger of military clashes.

Genscher emphasized to the 400 participants that East-West contradictions must be kept out of the Third World so that local and regional conflicts there can be solved more easily. The two empirical tasks of worldwide disarmament and development of the suffering South can only be mastered by the world's states jointly. The world does not need an arms race, but a race to help the developing countries.

Genscher emphatically advocated the continuation of the policy of detente in order to improve East-West relations wherever possible. This detente policy must also prove itself in connection with the events in Poland. Genscher said this means "that we and all others also recognize that the Polish people and the Polish leadership alone are responsible and competent for solving their country's problems." Following the settlement between the Polish workers and the Polish Government the agreements must now be proven in practice. Genscher stressed that the circumspection and restraint shown in recent weeks by the Federal Government toward the events in Poland must continue. This is also expected from everybody else.

Genscher also gave the assurance that Bonn wishes to consistently continue the policy of cooperation with the GDR. This should ease the burden placed on the Germans in West and East by the partition of the state.

In connection with the Berlin situation, Genscher stressed that the 1972 Quadripartite Agreement must be strictly adhered to and fully applied so that it can fully justify its role in the whole political framework of European detente to the benefit of all sides. Genscher emphasized, with a view to Soviet criticism, that no one should attempt to construe artificial violations against the Quadripartite Agreement.

Referring to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan Genscher stressed that those who want the rejection of force in Europe must not use force elsewhere. Otherwise suspicion may be aroused that they favor the rejection of force in Europe only because the West is ready and capable for an effective defence while pursuing military opportunities in the Third World. Neither West nor East must attempt to force their own ideas of values and order on the peoples of the Third World, the foreign minister stressed.

He said a disarmament conference in Europe should agree on confidence-building measures. The military budgets of every country should, on a worldwide level, become more open [durchsichtig] and comparable. It is time that the Warsaw Pact states established a similar openness to their military budgets.

SFRY PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION MEETS WITH CARSTENS

LD031538 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1320 GMT 3 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn, 3 Sep (TANJUG)--During his meeting here today with President of the Assembly of Yugoslavia's Chamber of the Republics and Provinces Zoran Polic and members of the Yugoslav parliamentary delegation, President of the Federal Republic of Germany Karl Carstens expressed his admiration for all President Tito did, not only for Yugoslavia but the entire world. During the talks, bilateral relations were discussed as well as the world situation and international economic problems.

The Yugoslav delegation, which is on a several-day visit to the Federal Republic, is today the guest of the Bonn city authorities. It is also expected to call on President of the Bundesrat Klose, Minister of State in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Dohnanyi and Minister for Federal Affairs Griesinger.

YOUNG VOTERS' ELECTION PREFERENCES POLLED

DW041435 [Editorial Report] The Bonn RHEINISCHER MERKUR of 5 September 1980 in German on page 14 carries four tables compiled by the Allensbach Opinion Poll Institute on the Bundestag election preferences of "young voters"--people aged 18 to 29. All figures in the tables are percentages.

Table 1:

	1972 Bundestag elections
	Total Voters	Age 18 to 24
CDU/CSU	44.9	35.3
SPD	45.8	49.8
FDP	8.4	8.4
	1976 Bundestag elections
	Total Voters	Age 18 to 24
CDU/CSU	48.6	40.2
SPD	42.6	49.8
FDP	7.9	8.5

Table 2 of the poll contains a survey of party preferences for the period January through July 1980:

	CDU/CSU	SPD	FDP	Greens	Others
Total eligible voters	45.2	43.4	7.3	3.4	0.5
Age groups
18 to 29	29	53	7	10	1

RAYMOND BARRE COMMENTS ON POLISH SETTLEMENT

LD041220 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Reporter Bernard Vallette interview with French Premier Raymond Barre in Selestat, France, at meeting with members of Young Giscardian Movement--live]

[Excerpt] [Question] I would like to discuss a news story which is still hot--the events in Poland. You spoke about them to the young people a short time ago. Well, what importance do you attach to what has just happened? Don't you have the impression that a communist regime cannot, for any length of time, give in on essential matters and let things happen? What is Moscow going to do? What can Moscow do?

[Answer] You will understand that I am being very reserved in my remarks on this issue. It is a matter pertaining to a country to which France has extended friendship for centuries, and we entertain cordial and trusting relations with Poland--whatever regime it has. We do note its economic difficulties which are, on the one hand, connected with the international situation, and on the other with certain difficulties in the functioning of the Polish system which the Polish authorities have themselves recognized. In consequence, I hope--as did the government--that the Poles will be able to resolve their problems with complete sovereignty, safeguarding their independence and in a direction which is in accordance with the traditions of that country and the aspirations of its people.

[Question] But does this situation worry you?

[Answer] It is a worrying situation but I hope that the wisdom of the Polish authorities and the wisdom of the Polish people will be able to contribute to the finding of effective solutions.

PCF LEADERS REACT TO DEVELOPMENTS IN POLAND

Marchais Sees Prior 'Mistakes'

LD041011 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 2 Sep 80 p 1

[L'HUMANITE interview with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais in Paris on 1 September: 'Change Depends on Struggle']

[Excerpt] L HUMANITE: Events in Poland have been in the forefront of the news in the past few days. An agreement was concluded between the Polish Government and the strikers this weekend. What is your assessment of this affair?

Georges Marchais: I share the opinion expressed this morning by L'HUMANITE on our party's behalf: The agreement reached is positive. I am pleased that the social conflict which Poland has just experienced has reached this happy conclusion. Experience has thus verified the working class' leading role in socialist society. The will to find a solution in the framework of dialogue, consultation and society's social and democratic progress, and a sense of responsibility prevailed. Today new decisions have been made and new methods defined for solving the major problems facing Poland.

These problems fall largely into two categories. On the one hand, like other socialist countries Poland, because of its foreign trade, is suffering the effects of the capitalist countries' crisis with the galloping inflation, restricted growth and monetary upheavals which characterize this crisis. In addition, however, Poland is facing internal problems arising from its own development.

Indeed, we must not lose sight of the fact that in the last decade Poland has undergone considerable industrial development and real social improvements. However, aside from the mistakes made, this development itself has brought some shortcomings to the fore, and has led to blockages which are felt particularly acutely in view of the increased social needs. I am thinking of the situation in agriculture which has not undergone the necessary changes and made the necessary progress. I am thinking of the fact that in this situation the productivity question becomes essential, and it is known that productivity is still largely inadequate in Poland.

In the new period which is beginning for this country I think that, in addition to the provisions contained in the agreements which must be implemented on the basis of what has been learned form the past, a decisive question is outstanding--the question of drafting and implementing reforms in the structures and running of the economy, the question of a new economic policy. It is obvious that such reforms must, in particular, encourage the workers' initiative, their participation in decisions and the exercise of their responsibilities. At Poland's present stage of development social progress, economic efficiency and the advance of socialist democracy are more intimately connected than ever before.

The importance which I feel this question has, has prompted me to discuss it in my book to be published in a few days' time. I would like to add that this question is not limited to Poland. It has been raised in other socialist countries and, furthermore, some countries have begun to provide interesting solutions to it by making economic, social and democratic changes which are proving effective.

I sincerely hope that the Polish leaders and the entire Polish United Workers Party will move resolutely forward toward these reforms and that the Polish people will ensure new and rapid progress for socialist Poland by their creative work. I also attach a great deal of importance to the development of independent Poland's international activity to promote peace and disarmament.

Fiterman on 'Difference' With Soviets

LD041215 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 30 Aug 80 p 3

[Unattributed report on French Television Channel 1 interview with PCF Politburo member Charles Fiterman on 29 August: "Effectiveness Means Struggle"]

[Excerpts] Question: After last night we still do not know whether trade union freedom will be granted in Poland. Do you feel closer to the Polish Government or to the Polish workers in this conflict?

Charles Fiterman: We are close to all those working for the development of socialism and democracy in Poland. However, with your permission I would like to make four points about this Polish question.

First, I would like to highlight the disgraceful fuss being made by the very people who, in our country, set the navy against the fishermen, sack trade union members and curb struggles, appeal for calm and a wait-and-see stance like Edmond Maire or Francois Mitterrand, and who cannot find enough words to express their praise for the Polish strikers. This behavior is politically motivated and is an attempt to win people's support in an irresponsible way which we condemn.

Second, I would like to say that we French Communists think there must be synthesis and fusion between democracy and socialism. Democracy is indispensable to socialism, and the more socialism is developed the more democracy is developed. We advocate the right to strike under socialism and are in favor of a trade union which is really representative of the workers' will, interests and aspirations and which is independent of political parties and the state.

However, the question of the forms in which and rate at which this democratic development should take place concerns the workers and people of each country, and in Poland's case concerns the Poles. We are very interested to observe, and we welcome the fact that Poland is moving in this direction, and we hope that this evolution, which is to some extent already irreversible and which can be attained, will not be endangered by irresponsible or provocative behavior. We hope that Poland--and we believe it can do this--will find the political means of solving the problems it faces alone.

I would like to add a final point. As you know, we follow no model. We are in France and not in Poland or any other country. We are working to build a French brand of socialism in our country, in our country's circumstances and according to its traditions.

Question: Therefore if trade union freedom were granted in Poland, you would hope it would extend to other communist countries?

Charles Fiterman: You are trying to break down open doors. You are well aware that it is precisely on this question of democracy that we have a serious and fundamental difference of opinion with our Soviet comrades and some other socialist countries.

Question: The Soviet weekly NOVOYE VREMYA has violently criticized the PS first secretary. It has placed Francois Mitterrand on the extreme right of the French political scene. Do you support that view?

Charles Fiterman: Listen, we do not tell the Soviet journalists what to do. They write things in their own way. That is their business. What can be said is that Francois Mitterrand, notably in a recent interview, has taken stances which I would describe as extreme Atlanticism. These are stances which tend to increase France's submission to U.S. policy, its integration in the Atlantic bloc--stances which lean toward confrontation with the Soviet Union. Under these circumstances, with regard to the root of the matter, I think that the Soviets' reaction is understandable.

Gremetz Calls For Free Unions

LD041153 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 2 Sep 80 p 8

[Text] PCF Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz answered Radio Luxembourg journalists' questions at 1300 hours yesterday and Europe I journalists' questions at 1900 hours. "I readily agreed to come here," he stated on Radio Luxembourg, "because contrary to what some people are saying, the PCF is talking as much about Bolivia as about Poland.

"As we said from the start, we hope that the problems raised by the Polish workers will be heeded and taken into account. I expressed the view, on the PCF's behalf, that the trade unions ought to be independent both from parties and government. I also stressed that, for the sake of its development, socialism must constantly increase worker participation and the democratization of public life. I note that agreements have been reached in Poland which move in this direction. That is why we are pleased."

Maxime Gremetz stressed the democratic requirement inherent in socialism which was at the center of the debates at our 23d congress. "This requirement," he said, "is universal for socialism.

"As for the forms this democratization should take, we consider that it is up to the peoples, the working class and the parties themselves to implement them. As far as we in France are concerned, we want a self-managing socialism, a French brand of socialism. We are opposed to any model and refuse to tell anybody else what to do. We have our own stances and our own proposals."

Jean-Pierre Cot: The government is--understandably!--worried at the prospect of Michel Rocard becoming a candidate next year. This is a good sign for the Socialists. It is understandable that under the circumstances Christian Bonnet should panic and use any kind of argument. And yet the matter deserved something better than hamhanded claptrap because it involves two different concepts of foreign policy in a difficult period. Rocard advocates firmness in a situation in which Giscard kowtows. Indeed, a discussion of a crucial nature should be held.

LE MATIN: But there was also a statement by [PS foreign affairs spokesman] Lionel Jospin which seemed to be a repudiation since it referred to "an exercise in tragic fiction" and an "error which should be avoided."

Jean-Pierre Cot: Lionel Jospin's attitude toward Poland is unclear to me. Does he want the Socialists either to remain silent or merely express verbal solidarity? Does he want them to abstain from warning the Soviet Union against the consequences of any intervention?

LE MATIN: Christian Bonnet also said Monday [25 August] that anyone who has not been either a minister or even a secretary of state cannot lay claim to the presidency. How do you view this concept of alternation?

Jean-Pierre Cot: The economic and social mess which 7 years of Giscard's administration have brought about...and Christian Bonnet do not present the governmental regime in a favorable light. It seems to me that the right has clearly shown that it is incapable of getting the situation under control. This state of affairs calls for the assumption of power by new men who have been able to reflect on our country's domestic and international situation and who could propose to the French people the long-term vision which the French now lack. As for Mr Bonnet's right to remain a minister forever, it is up to the electorate to decide.

MOZAMBIQUE FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WITH OFFICIALS

LD031928 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1030 GMT 3 Sep 80 EA

[Text] Joaquim Chissano, our minister of foreign affairs, has ended his visit to the French Republic. Yesterday was marked by talks with his French counterpart, Jean Francois-Poncet. The talks centered on the present situation in Namibia, Western Sahara and the Horn of Africa. Joaquim Chissano and Jean Francois-Poncet also discussed possible French investment in the Mozambique harbors and railways, according to information which arrived on our newsdesk today.

Earlier the head of the Mozambique foreign service was received by French President Giscard d'Estaing. The meeting lasted for about an hour and the talks focused on bilateral affairs and the situation in southern Africa. After his meeting with the French president, Joaquim Chissano said that cooperation between Mozambique and France is very positive and that future prospects are very promising. Another question discussed during the Mozambique minister's stay in France was the possibility of an air agreement which would allow Mozambique Airlines to make direct flights between Maputo and Paris.

PCI OFFICIAL NAPOLITANO DISCUSSES ROMANIAN VISIT, CSCE

AU030842 Bucharest LUMEA in Romanian No 35 28 Aug 80 p 8

[Interview with Giorgio Napolitano, member of the Directorate and secretary of the PCI Central Committee, by Romanian reporter Florin Velcu, date and place not given]

[Text] Question. During your visit to Romania you met with Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, RCP secretary general and president of the republic. What can you tell us in connection with this meeting?

Answer: This meeting is part and parcel of the regular exchange of information between the two parties. It was dedicated especially to international problems and to the activity carried out by the two parties. I noted a joint concern for the danger fo detente and peace and, at the same time, agreement in connection with the fact that a possibility for lessening tension has, nevertheless, emerged. We agreed that initiatives and a public opinion in favor of the East-West dialogue are necessary to promote the settlement of the serious unsolved problems that give cause for tension and conflict, a fact that can only alarm us today.

Question: Would you please say something about relations between the RCP and PCI, a subject that was discussed during the meeting.

Answer: These relations have been very cordial for a long time and the meeting with Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu confirmed that they are in excellent shape. Our party and the RCP have maintained similar positions--for example when we viewed the Paris meeting as insufficiently prepared and unsatisfactorily organized, which made us decide not to participate in it; at the same time, the two parties stressed that the participation or nonparticipation in the meeting did not and must not influence relations between the communist parties. In this respect, I believe that relations between the Italian Communists and Romanian Communists are developing positively also because the two parties believe to the same extent in the need to act outside any kind of rigid framework in order to relaunch detente. The PCI has carried out an intense international activity and, as always, the RCP has carried out intensive international activity and so has President Nicolae Ceausescu personally. He has numerous meetings and contacts with representatives of various movements, parties and governments.

Question: How would you characterize relations between our countries, between Romania and Italy?

Answer: I believe that, generally speaking, they can be viewed as positive relations between states, economic relations, trade and cultural relations between Italy and Romania and I would like to stress another interesting fact. The secretary of the Christian Democrats and a delegation of that party and the secretary of the Italian Social Democratic Party visited Romania recently to meet with Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu. This is viewed as a positive fact by us, irrespective of the political differences between our party and the Christian Democrats and the Social Democratic Party at the moment; we clearly advocate the development of all useful contacts for a policy of better understanding between Italy and Romania and, generally, for a policy of detente.

Question: A final question: What is the PCI's policy toward the upcoming Madrid meeting?

Answer: We believe that this meeting is of great significance; its importance and value may exceed all predictions precisely because it will be taking place in a moment of quite serious international tension. We are of the opinion that it is necessary to pay great attention to orienting the proceedings of the Madrid meeting; that it is especially necessary to ensure the correct delimitation of its mission, so as to avoid too great a number of subjects and too many demands.

I must also stress that a subject of great importance for which the meeting provides an opportunity for wide-ranging discussions is that of disarmament, of negotiations for reducing weapons and for reducing arms in Europe; for, we know that a dangerous escalation of the nuclear arms race is being recorded in Europe at this time; this tendency must be halted and a road must be opened for negotiations, especially on issues such as the so-called European strategic arms or "European missiles." We will, therefore, act so that the Madrid meeting will make a tangible contribution in this respect.

BOFFA CITES RELEVANCE OF POLISH PROBLEMS TO ITALY

[Giuseppe Boffa commentary: "They Are Talking About Us There Too"]

[Text] The important Szczecin and Gdansk agreements undoubtedly open up a new phase in the life of the Polish state and nation. This is a legitimate observation, due to both the specific content of those documents and the events leading up to them--through a harsh struggle which nevertheless always remained within the trade union and political context, in which the sides involved managed to demonstrate restraint and to make the logic of political reason prevail.

The new self-managed trade unions demanded by the Baltic workers were a necessity, we believe. We do not yet know how they will function. In circumstances of this kind dangers of cooperative fragmentation do exist and must certainly not be underestimated. Nevertheless, we hope that the presence of new bodies will help to profoundly regenerate Poland's thoroughly inflexible trade union life: Their role will be extremely useful because it will stimulate the forms of mutual dialogue and control between the country's masses and leadership forces that were so tragically lacking in previous years.

Obviously we realize that this will imply a new mode of government, and we have realized the need for this for some time. Within the East European framework, Poland was already a country acquainted with social pluralism (if for no other reason than the presence of a sea of small peasant holdings, equivalent to 80 percent of the total) and, though never officially admitted, even a degree of political pluralism (its major expression is the strength of the Catholic Church, which is represented on a massive scale even on the temporal plane).

The new trade union guidelines increase these elements of pluralism. New and contradictory pressures are making themselves felt in the country. Therefore increasingly decisive importance will be attached to the political ability to involve the masses in resolving the nation's problems, to conduct a dialogue with the various forces, to create consensus with the fundamental options and to create new links between the government and the governed.

Nobody must believe that this is easy or that a few little formulas of liberal democracy will suffice to set everything in order. It will not be easy, not only because it is never easy to innovate but above all because the problems being faced in Poland are to a large extent unprecedented problems in the path of modern societies. It must be all the more difficult in a very grave economic situation such as the one affecting Poland, where further sacrifices will inevitably be needed. Also it will not be easy because for too long there has been no experience with this new mode of government both in the economy and in every other field of public life. Finally, it will not be easy because the anti-socialist tendencies sometimes mentioned are not merely a fabrication for ulterior motives, though of course they were not dominant among the striking workers.

The risks of economic and political chaos or disorder which always lie in wait when delicate operations of reform are carried out could therefore threaten Poland's stability, which is--we believe we must not forget this--one of the linchpins of the entire European order. Everyone would pay dearly for such an eventuality.

The first to pay would be the Polish workers themselves. Let us by all means set aside the definitions and formulas with which so many commentators have become obsessed over the past few days in their anxiety above all to show that socialism is useless. In fact it must be acknowledged that if the Polish leaders themselves were able to take decisions which the majority of the press over the past few days has not hesitated to call courageous, then the socialist approach which they have so often proclaimed for their country must surely be of some relevance. The fact that the path of the masses' increased involvement in public affairs has been begun, albeit laboriously, shows that there is no desire to abandon that approach and that it is regarded not as a ritual formula but as an important commitment.

Many people now must feel some responsibility for the evolution of the Polish crisis. This applies first and foremost to the ruling party, which must not fail to meet the proposals of a new mode of government, even if the pressure now affecting it is attenuated. But this applies no less to all the state apparati, to the Catholic Church whose great authority has been seen once again, to the new trade union bodies and to the more or less tolerated opposition groups themselves. Finally, it applies to foreign political forces and governments, primarily those of Europe, especially if they are near Poland.

One last point must be borne in mind. The events in Poland have had inherent political, social and economic causes to which we have been drawing people's attention for some time. But it must not be forgotten that the detonator that brought the situation to a head is a broader crisis on a world scale. Poland is the first country to suffer its repercussions on this scale. But there is no reason to believe that it will be the only one or that the most sorely tried countries must be in East Europe alone.

The Polish workers have been treated with great esteem by the Italian press and television over the past few days. Even newspapers and television stations that have never been so generous with the Italian workers have stood out. We have read headlines and passages worthy of the messages carried on triumphant trade union banners, but signed by people who have hitherto addressed to our own workers only harsh rebukes for their alleged deafness to the country's supreme requirements. Though we find these hypocricies repugnant, we do not lament them. Better late than never. But beware. Because the story, which is in fact not a story, talks about us as well.

In Italy there are also difficult straits looming ahead. In Italy there is also a pressing need for thorough changes in political life. In Italy also the workers movement wants greater influence in the country's government and in the choice of economic approaches. All these problems do not belong to the distant future but have been looming over our society and urging action for some time. The Italian workers would do well, therefore, to promptly identify these impromptu friends of the workers and--why not?--ask them to remain true to their word and not suddenly discard all their fine pronouncements of the past few days.

SPANISH FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES CSCE WITH AMARAL

When contacted by the DIARIO DE NOTICIAS, Professor Freitas do Amaral disclosed that the CSCE conference, which will soon take place in the Spanish capital, was the main topic of the talks.

During the meeting, which lasted about 90 minutes, more frequent exchanges of information on the two countries' participation in the conference were decided on. DIARIO DE NOTICIAS learned from the Portuguese foreign minister that Dr Rui Medina, a Foreign Ministry director general and a career diplomat, will be the leader of the Portuguese delegation to the conference.

The two ministers also broached the international situation in their talks, touching on the crisis in Poland and other burning issues of the current political situation. Commenting on the meeting, Professor Freitas do Amaral told DIARIO DE NOTICIAS that it was a "normal event, within the excellent relations existing between the two countries and the two governments."

Last, during the meeting yesterday afternoon, Freitas do Amaral and Marcelino Oreja breached matters connected with bilateral relations and various ways of developing them.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH MEXICO

PA291742 Mexico City International Service in Spanish 0300 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] The agreement that Portugal and Mexico signed in Lisbon today represents the beginning of an intense economic cooperation between the two countries, Armando de Sousa e Almeida, state secretary for foreign trade, has stated.

The former Portuguese ruler revealed that the agreement includes vast areas of the economy and represents a turn in the economic and commercial relations between the two countries, which had been insignificant up to now. In addition, the trade exchange contemplates cooperation in industrial, touristic and technological aspects. De Sousa e Almeida, who [words indistinct] the Portuguese delegation, held talks with the Mexican official delegation and was very optimistic about their results.

PCP SCORES EXPULSION OF SOVIETS, 'DIVERSIONARY MANEUVER'

[Report on PCP Information and Propaganda Section 21 August note]

[Text] 1. The expulsion of four Soviet diplomats announced by the cabinet yesterday clearly forms part of a policy of a deliberate deterioration of relations with the USSR, which is dictated by the Sa Carneiro government's humiliating alignment with imperialism's campaign against detente, international cooperation and peace in the world.

2. The cabinet's decision represents a stance of calculated hostility against a friendly country which--at a time when senior figures in the Sa Carneiro government and the Democratic Alliance held prominent posts in the fascist regime and in the colonial administration--was giving active solidarity to the Portuguese people's antifascist resistance and firmly denouncing on the international stage the crimes of Portuguese fascism and colonialism.

3. Judging by the time chosen and by the concerted means of manipulating public opinion which are being used, everything indicates that this stance on the part of the cabinet constitutes essentially a coldly conceived pretext for unleashing a propaganda operation and a diversionary maneuver, with the clear aim of making people forget the scandals in which the government and its head are bemired.

By not hesitating to resort to irresponsible stances in the field of foreign policy the government clearly shows the extent of its base methods and reveals its despair and anxiety.

4. Despite the manipulation of the state-owned news media which they are practicing, the fact is that Sa Carneiro, the Popular Democratic Party [former name of Social Democratic Party]/Social Democratic Center Party government and the Democratic Alliance together will not succeed in escaping the severe judgment which democratic opinion in the country is forming of their policy of corruption, illegality and subversion.

5. No diversionary maneuver will be able to prevent the Assembly of the Republic's Standing Committee meeting on 25 August on the initiative of the parties representing the majority of the electorate, with a view toward calling a special session of that state body to debate the extremely grave accusations leveled against the prime minister and the Democratic Alliance government.

6. No propaganda operation, based on anticommunism and anti-Sovietism, supported by reactionary centers of deception and falsification, will be able to evade or eliminate the national demand to see that Sa Carneiro's responsibilities in frauds and irregularities perpetrated against the public interests themselves are fully investigated, and to see a situation which is a crying affront to the state's dignity and to the democratic institutions' prestige totally eliminated.

7. It is not provocative and diversionary maneuvers which will save the government from the people's judgment through the voting in the coming elections. The reactionary alliance is heading inexorably toward defeat.

PCP URGES DEBATE, CENSURE MOTION ON SA CARNEIRO GOVERNMENT

LD041630 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 28 Aug 80 p 3

[Reports on PCP Information and Propaganda Section 26 August note]

[Text] 1. In desperately opposing, at the meeting of the Assembly of the Republic's Standing Committee, the calling of a plenary session of the Assembly of the Republic, with a view toward holding a parliamentary enquiry and debating a motion of censure against the government, the Democratic Alliance has once more demonstrated that it is a body alien to the system originating from 25 April [1974], to the extent of deeming itself threatened by the very functioning of the democratic institutions.

2. The meeting of the Assembly of the Republic's Standing Committee demonstrated the enormous embarrassment and glaring difficulties of the prime minister, the government and the Democratic Alliance in countering to the slightest extent any serious explanation to the grave and documented accusations of involvement in a financial scandal leveled against the prime minister.

When cited by representatives of the PCP and the PS, these specific accusations were not refuted by the Democratic Alliance deputies, who at no time and in no way called into question the documents which indicate that frauds and irregularities took place.

3. The rejection by the government coalition of a parliamentary enquiry is the best proof that the prime minister, the government and the Democratic Alliance are avoiding accounting to the country and the institutions by every possible means, their fear of talking about the scandal being so great that even a deputy's innocent proposal of a meeting between members of the standing committee and the prime miniter met with keen opposition on the latter's part and a refusal to give any explanation before the elections.

National public opinion rightly cannot fail to interpret the rejection of the parliamentary enquiry caused by the prime minister, the government and the Democratic Alliance as an indirect but clear admission of guilt.

4. In addition, in rejecting the PCP's proposal of calling a plenary session of the Assembly of the Republic with a view to debating and voting on a motion of censure against the government--undeniably justified by its despotic, unlawful and subversive conduct--the Democratic Alliance parties once more made clear their contempt for the system and for the democratic institutions, the hypocritical nature of their declarations of attachment to democracy and their undisguisable plans and aspirations to govern as a dictatorship.

Defeated with respect to the Portuguese people's opinion and without a secure majority in the Assembly of the Republic, the Democratic Alliance was afraid for the second time that the PCP's motion of censure would give institutional expression to the national demand for the Sa Carneiro government's dismissal.

5. The government and the Democratic Alliance fear truth because their policy requires lying. They fear democratic debate because only manipulation and the policy of silence and the gag give them relative security. They fear the functioning of the democratic institutions because they dream of a unity guaranteed by arbitrariness, coercion and unlawfulness.

The dismissal of the Sa Carneiro government remains a democratic and patriotic aim of the first magnitude to safeguard the Portuguese people's interests, defend the democratic system and citizens' rights and freedoms and fully guarantee the integrity and democratic nature of the coming elections.

REACTION TO POLISH STRIKE COMPARED TO EVENTS IN WEST

LD031147 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 28 Aug 80 p 11

[Unattributed commentary: "Poland: What Concern?"]

[Text] The strike movement in Poland has served to demonstrate a truly curious fact: The bourgeoisie and its organs, parties and various organizations throughout the world and here also harbor the deepest concern about the living standard, freedoms and fate of the workers and all the working people of Poland and, in general, about the workers of the socialist community, while, at the same time, they have a well-known tendency to disregard the interests, demands and most elementary rights of the workers in their own countries.

Instances follow one another, from the United States, where human rights are so "scrupulously respected" that even those who feel fascinated by capitalism, such as the much talked about case of the Cuban "heroes," are hastening to leave that "promised land," for the various EEC countries, which met in this connection, deciding (as if this decision did not exceed the bounds of the most elementary rules of international law) not to intervene. France is succeeding in concerning itself about the specter of repression in Poland, keenly desired by the entire capitalist world, while sending its navy against the striking fishermen. Italy states that it is prepared to respond to "requests for aid aimed at improving the Polish population's living conditions," when we are witnessing the deterioration of the Italian workers' living conditions, unemployment is increasing and the urgent problem of the development of southern Italy remains unchanged.

In our country there is the same type of reaction. The Social Democratic Party, now in power, which has headed a direct attack against the Portuguese people's revolutionary gains, is staunchly "supporting" the Polish workers and asserting that the events demonstrate that in the socialist countries "there is no trade union freedom, there is no right to strike, there is no political freedom, there is no religious freedom, there is no freedom of expression and information, there is no restoration of purchasing power for the workers," and so forth. In the opinion of the Socialist Party, which with its policy of de facto alliance with the right has prevented the creation of a democratic government in Portugal, the events in Poland mean the "bankruptcy" of socialism, with the belief that placing the strikes in the capitalist countries and the present strike movement in Poland on the same footing is a matter of "geography". The general workers union, whose splittist conduct in Portugal is well known, asserts that the present strike movement in Poland should help the "establishment in Poland of free and democratic trade unionism--an essential precondition for the existence of democracy."

If it is already strange in itself that capitalists of the entire world should concern themselves so much about the fate of the proletariat in the socialist countries, this concern appears even more ridiculous when it is noted that--despite the problems inherent in building the developed socialist society, despite the difficulties which arise, the deviations and the delays--Poland has in absolute terms a remarkable living standard, a highly developed economy with a high technological level, and, in relative terms, an impressive process of recovery from the state of destruction in which it found itself in the postwar period--a process which, as the facts demonstrate, is only possible under socialism.

A few random figures will illustrate this reality.

As far as the population's living standard is concerned: In the seventies the real increase in earnings exceeded 60 percent on the average; for instance, as far as home appliances is concerned and with respect to the wage-earning population, there is more than one radio per household, 95.9 percent of homes have a television set, 99.8 percent a washing machine, 91.4 percent a refrigerator, 86.7 percent a vacuum cleaner; in comparison with 1970, the construction of homes exceeded 210.4 percent in 1978. This does not take into account the free nature of education and health care and the insignificant cost of housing, transport, culture, vacations, and so forth.

This is a reality which presupposes the commitment of an entire people to building a society worthy of them.

So it is not to be believed that there is cause for the great concerns which seem to be overwhelming a bourgeoisie which is less mindful of the real difficulties which are being experienced, for instance, in our country, where everybody's ability to have 200 gm of meat per day is an ambition which nobody could envisage as an immediate possibility.

These facts do not mean that the problems are any less real. A people's needs are relative, and for those who have already achieved the Poles' high living standard, other concerns are posed.

And because these problems exist, some measures have in the meantime been proposed. Nobody has sent the navy to fire tear gas canisters. The response has been dialogue and discussion.

Because it has been acknowledged that there are obvious delays in making necessary decisions, the changes to be made in the state's economic and social policy are now being discussed in all the enterprises in the country. A new trade union law will be submitted for widespread discussion among the workers, with more effective defense of their interests being advocated. A government reshuffle has even been undertaken, appointing to responsible posts the comrades who had opportunely noticed the deviations which were increasing.

Gierek's words at the Polish United Workers Party Central Committee plenum were clear: "We desire a real increase in citizens' participation in decisions on matters concerning the enterprises, the cities, the countryside and the entire country"; "we must jointly extricate our country from the present crisis; we can improve many things and change others, gradually resolve the economic problems, develop democracy and enhance the atmosphere of mutual respect and cooperation."

The Polish people will surmount their real problems. Problems which have nothing to do with those which seem to be of great concern to the bourgeoisie throughout the world. Problems of building socialism which for that very reason can and should be resolved jointly by all the workers, by their organizations and by the government.

HEAD OF CSCE DELEGATION DISCUSSES MOSCOW VISIT

LD300134 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 29 Aug 80

[Text] Javier Ruperez, ambassador in chief of the Spanish delegation to the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, CSCE, left Paris early this afternoon bound for New York after his visit to Strasbourg and Moscow. Next Thursday Ruperez will begin talks in Washington with representatives of the State Department. During his stopover in Paris he was interviewed by Angel Gomez Fuentes:

[Begin recording] [Question] What is the latest attitude which the Soviet Union seems to be adopting toward the Madrid conference after the reticence which it has shown at times?

[Answer] It seems that what the Soviet representatives are saying at the moment is highly favorable to the holding of the conference which naturally does not mean that all the points which the Soviets uphold necessarily coincide with our points of view and with those of the Western countries.

[Question] Yet public opinion thinks that it is hypocritical for the Soviet Union to attend a conference whose final objective is detente while it has invaded Afghanistan. What is the feeling in Moscow at the moment with regard to this problem?

[Answer] The subject of Afghanistan is indeed a serious one in the context of the conference, in the context of the whole international scene. What we should all undertake as a political--almost moral--reflection is to see whether the punishment is worth their absence or, on the contrary, whether it is better to continue a dialogue which might save us from catastrophic situations. I think that the conference will move between those two extremes, those two limits. I firmly believe that it will be like that, always bearing in mind Afghanistan--the conference cannot be held as though nothing had happened. But, on the other hand, it will try to go beyond this to a deepening of dialogue and understanding which, as far as possible and in the future [words indistinct] (are brought about by these things).

[Question] What reactions have there been in Moscow with regard to the events in Poland, reactions at perhaps a time of (irritation) among the Soviet leaders?

[Answer] Naturally I did not raise the subject of Poland in Moscow. In any case, I think that if the subject is going to be raised anywhere it will be in Warsaw, where it has to be raised. It is a subject which causes some concern in some places, but which at the moment is still a purely internal affair which could induce or produce a series of thoughts on the subject, but which is a purely internal affair and which I hope will continue to be so. [end recording]

POLITICAL, LABOR GROUPS WELCOME AGREEMENTS IN POLAND

PSOE, PCE, Statements

LD012352 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Reactions to the events in Poland: First, we have a note from the general press office of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE]: The agreement won by the Polish workers from the communist government of Poland is the first triumph of the Polish labor movement in its struggle for socialism and freedom, says the communique from the PSOE.

There was also a remark from the secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party [PCE], Santiago Carrillo: I think, said Carrillo, that the events in Poland confirm the Eurocommunist thesis on the need for socialism to be an effective extension of democracy and not a restriction of it.

CCOO Communique

LD011540 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 1 Sep 80

[Text] In connection with the labor conflict in Poland and the solution allowing a return to work, the Trades Union Confederation of the Workers Commissions [CCOO] has issued a communique saying that the agreements reached between the workers and the government represent a triumph for the workers and the policy of discussion and dialogue developed by both parties. For the Workers Commissions, the economic and social claims of the Polish workers have political connotations involving a strengthening of democracy. The workers commissions, the communique continues, takes the position that trade union pluralism or unity, with autonomy and independence from the government or the party, is a question to be decided exclusively by the Polish workers, but, for the Workers Commissions, the new situation in Poland gives greater union power. The Spanish union concludes by saying that the behavior of everyone concerned has allowed a solution to be found within the framework of socialist Poland to the contradictions existing in the economic and social context, which opens up new perspectives for the development of socialism.

GRAPO CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR KILLING GENERAL

LD050856 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Summary] The Madrid daily EL PAIS received an anonymous letter yesterday in which GRAPO [First of October Armed Revolutionary Group] claimed responsibility for the killing in Barcelona of Brigadier General Briz Armengol. The letter adds that after a necessary period of consolidation and preparation, GRAPO has resumed its operations.

Meanwhile, police in Barcelona investigating the killing believe that the three leaders of GRAPO who escaped from Zamora Prison last December did not take part in the attack, although it is possible that they are in Barcelona and masterminded the operation.

POLAND CANCELS TUC VISIT, DELEGATION STILL PLANS TO GO

LD041334 London BCC Television Network in English 1245 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Text] Next week's TUC [Trades Union Congress] visit to Poland has been canceled by the Polish authorities. Instead they've been offered a 1-day visit later this month. The proposed visit, when the TUC delegation would be guests of the official Polish unions, had caused major controversy after the fight by Polish workers to establish their own independent unions. But yesterday all seemed settled when TUC delegates at Brighton gave their overwhelming support for the visit to go ahead. Now, though, the Poles say that they are too busy preparing new legislation to have the TUC there for a week. [Correspondent Tim Sebastian reports from Warsaw:

[begin recording] This morning the British Embassy here was seeking urgent clarification from the TUC about whether they were coming at all. Until yesterday's debate at the congress in Brighton, it has been assumed that the trip was off. Officials at the Polish Central Trade Union Organization confirmed they'd canceled it because they were too busy preparing new legislation. A spokesman said the TUC has been invited to Warsaw instead for a day of consultation. If they want that, they can have it, he said, we are still waiting for an answer from them. Asked about the proposed week-long visit, he added: Plans have changed. It is we who are organizing their trip, not they themselves.

There seems little doubt that the 5-day projected tour which would have included the Baltic Coast and the industrial south would be considered highly inconvenient. At the moment lengthy and complex discussions are in progress to implement the new union reforms agreed after the crippling strike by Baltic workers. Already many factories throughout the country are deciding which unions they want to belong to, and the competition for supremacy is well underway. [end recording]

There has been strong reaction from the TUC itself. They say they are going for their week-long visit on Monday anyway. But David Basnett, who's heading the TUC group, told Martin Adeney in Brighton a few minutes ago that he didn't know if the Poles had called off the trip:

[Begin recording] [Basnett] Well, my reaction will be more certain when I know that the Polish TUC have done that. I would expect them to contact us. But if it is so, and clearly if you got reports there's a possibility that being so, all I can say is that we've got tickets to go to Poland and that we've got hotel rooms booked and we'll go. If there are problems facing the Poles--and obviously drafting new legislation they have a lot to do--we can discuss it in the light of the situation in Poland. I must also say that as I made clear in the debate yesterday, we want to go later on in the year to look at things more closely, when they're settled down. And indeed, when they've got more time, we have more time to talk to all the people involved.

[Adeney] So you are saying you will go regardless whether the Poles can see you or not?

[Basnett] I'm saying that we'll go and discuss the situation with the Poles, yes.

[Adeney] You'll be going next week?

[Basnett] Yes, yes.

[Adeney] On Monday?

[Basnett] Yes. [end recording]

DAILY TELEGRAPH CRITICISM

LD041147 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 4 Sep 80 p 16

[Editorial: Looking the Other Way"]

[Text] Thirty-five years after the Soviet armies imposed socialist dictatorship on nine neighbouring countries destroying any vestige of free trade unionism, the TUC leadership, so vocal in defence of trade union rights in other parts of the world, has reluctantly, under pressure from the media and its own dissidents, admitted the absence of free trade unionism in Poland and recognized its right to exist, but only after the Polish Government had already done so. The TUC General Council has not gone so far as to condemn the previously existing state of affairs. Indeed, after having remained silent during this critical period in Polish history, unlike many other European trade unions, it now adds insult to injury by offering to "assist a positive outcome" during a junket as guests of the very puppet unions against whom Polish workers were striking no less than against their government.

The TUC General Council neglected to comment on the lack of trade union rights in the other Soviet satellites, the Soviet Union itself and other communist states with whose "yellow unions"--its own word in like circumstances--it regularly met fraternally. The prejudice, double standards and sheer pandering to its pro-Soviet minority only stores up trouble for itself. It would have done better to heed Mr Callaghan's forecast that the struggle for freedom would spread from Poland to the rest of the Soviet bloc. Instead it waits on events. This is a reminder of how far the British trade union movement has travelled in our lifetime. The only credible excuse it could dredge up was that Lord Carrington explicitly refrained from commenting on Poland's internal affairs. That is for the Foreign Office to explain.

THATCHER URGES DEFENSE INDUSTRY TO INCREASE EXPORTS

LD041151 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 4 Sep 80 p 2

[James Wightman report: 'Arms Export Drive Urged by Thatcher"]

[Text] The prime minister tried last night to encourage defence equipment manufacturers to increase export sales.

Stating that sales this year would earn 1,200 million pounds in foreign currency and paying tribute to those who earned it, Mrs Thatcher added: "But it is not enough."

She stated that the procurement budget of government and the skills of the industry could, if used together to the best advantage, bring the country far larger sums, greater benefits both to the armed services and industries and more jobs.

The prime minister was addressing the Farnborough Air Show dinner in London.

Mrs Thatcher suggested that the aerospace industry could become more efficient and to spread the cost of reserach and development over longer periods.

Her message was that it might help to make prices more attractive and British industry more competitive, thereby reducing the needs for weaponry to be bought from overseas.

"First we must ensure that whenever possible the requirements for all of the Ministry of Defence are met in a way which is compatible with the needs of industry.

I DHIMOKRATIKI CLAIMS DIKO TO LOSE ASSEMBLY MAJORITY

NC011340 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 1 Sep 80 p 1

[Excerpts] DIKO [Democratic Party] will definitely lose its absolute majority in the House of Representatives. This is so because four of its house members will leave the DIKO parliamentary group, while two others intend to do likewise and are favoring the idea of submitting a statement that they will function as independents.

The four house members who will definitely leave DIKO--this has been clearly confirmed in a statement to I DHIMOKRATIKI by PEK [Pan Agrarian Union of Cyprus] Secretary General Andreas Yiangou--are the deputies who represent this organization in DIKO (Andreas Yiangou and Ir Dhimosthenous, who are directly connected with PEK, and A. Toumazis and Zakh Toulouris who are indirectly connected).

Mr Andreas Yiangou, who was asked about this report, said simply "no comment." However, he later confirmed the report but declined to disclose anything about the future intentions of the team.

In any case, according to confirmed reports, the next definite step to follow the withdrawal of the DIKO house members will be the complete disassociation of PEK's responsibilities from those of the president and his government. This will be done by means of a public statement.

In this connection, a spokesman for the PEK team has stated that it will be stressed that PEK does not intend to deviate from the Makarios line or the line of unity with the democratic, patriotic forces. It has also been stated that the house members who will withdraw from DIKO will not join any other party but they will closely cooperate with progressive forces which identify themselves with the Makarios line and the people's rights.

As for the other two house members, they have disclosed that they will first notify President Kiprianou about their intention and then they will submit a pertinent statement to the house.

However, irrespective of this, with the withdrawal of the four house members the DIKO parliamentary strength will drop from 19 deputies to 15; it will not have an overall majority.

NEW RIGHTWING TURKISH CYPRIOT PARTY FORMED

NC032147 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 27 Aug 80 p 5

[Text] Nicosia--It has been learned that a new political party known as Turkish Path [Turk Yolu] has been established in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. This new party is reported to be under the direction of the Nationalist Action Party.

Mehmet Cumali, a Turkish Cypriot who resides in Famagusta, is the founding president of the party. It is argued that a large number of the party founders are Turkish refugees. The emblem of the Turkish Path Party is comprised of the sun and six red stars around it, one of which symbolizes the unredeemed Southern Cyprus.

With the formation of the Turkish Path Party, there are now four rightist and four leftist political parties in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The rightist parties are: National Unity Party, Reform and Welfare Party, Turkish Unity Party, and the Turkish Path Party. The leftist political parties are: Republican Turkish Party, Communal Liberation Party, Populist Party, and the Democratic People's Party.

MINISTERS CITE PROBLEMS IN SOVIET COMMERICAL RELATIONS

AT301319 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 30 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] The Soviet Union has stopped buying Greek products despite the special commitments it has undertaken and the agreements it has signed. Responsible ministers affirm that there are no problems in relations with the Soviet Union but exclude the subject of commerical exchanges which show a deficit against Greece ($216 million in 1979).

It also seems that the alumina production unit--to be built in Greece with the cooperation of the Soviet Union--will not be established unless it has been guaranteed, through a long-term contract, that the Soviets will absorb at least two-thirds of the production (400,000 tons). This condition apparently is being set by the Greek Government which, at the same time, is trying to persuade the Soviet Union to resume purchases of Greek products (raisins, lemons, organes, cereals, thread, etc.).

Yesterday Minister of Coordination I. Boutos said that discussions with the Soviets on establishing an alumina production plant in Greece are still in the preliminary stages and that, during the upcoming meeting of two technical teams in Moscow, the content of a technical-economic study will be defined--on the basis of facts to be supplied by the Greek side--on the quantity and quality of available bauxite.

For his part Foreign Minister K. Mitsotakis confirmed that Greek-Soviet relations are developing smoothly and that agreements which have been signed between the two countries are being adhered to. Mitsotakis added that, in any case, problems exist for which efforts are being made for settlement--for instance, the deficit in the balance of trade against Greece. Deputy Minister of Commerce Tataridhis will seek settlement of this issue when he next goes to Moscow.

SHIFT IN PASOK TOWARD SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC MODELS NOTED

AT041245 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 4 Sep 80 p 4

["In-Depth" analysis by Alexandros Velios: "Causes and Relativity in Pasok's Crises"]

[Text] The sixth anniversary of PASOK's founding was recently crowned by yet another internal crisis which--naturally not coincidentally--broke out at a moment which is politically vital to it because of the start of the final stretch of PASOK's progress, which the movement likes to describe as "progress toward authority." Developments themselves were as eloquent as their coincidence in time--provided that their examination is undertaken with wisdom and not with fanfares (of an untimely triumph-mongering).

It is a fact that during these past six years of its existence PASOK followed an electorally successful course, going so far as to nearly monopolize socialism in Greece while it simultaneously attempts to establish itself--particularly with its recent initiatives--as a socialist party within Europe.

Electoral success, however, is not a certain or complete criterion of a party's success. Today, as on the first day of its founding, PASOK suffers from pressing ideological and organizational problems which specifically cancel out the picture of success which it attempts to project outward.

These problems are related to a fundamental weakness which was in itself the result of the original form of "self-organization" pursued by PASOK. This facilitated the entry into the movement of conflicting elements (ideologically and politically). Their assimilation was impossible. This was the cause of the repeated crises which PASOK endured during these past six years of its existence.

"Everyone who joined the movement during the first two years," a leading PASOK personality recently said, "viewed the movement from his own particular viewpoint. Originally the party was an amalgam of centrists, social democrats, Trotskiyites, disgrantled communists and homeless elements. A cleansing was necessary if the movement was to be established."

How was this cleansing prepared? The very handling of the repeated crises by the leadership provides a relief picture of another PASOK weakness. This consists of the organization's "peculiar" function. It is inherent in: the absence of democratic processes; the unilateral adoption of decisions "from above"; the sovereign role of the leader; and the lack of fundamental influence upon the leadership by the base. (certain recent efforts to make base organizations more democratic, undertaken in the last few years, did not proceed beyond the level of nomarchy committees with the result that central organs obviously predominate.)

It is obvious that if a complete democratic process and a firm organizational structure had existed then "absorbtion" of differing viewpoints would have been possible thus establishing and preserving a certain balance without crises within the movement.

As it has become common knowledge--and the recent Thessaloniki crisis only confirms this--it was impossible to reach this balance with the result that PASOK is shaken "along its course" by repeated crises which unavoidably always end in "self-purging" through the expulsion of members.

The historic background to these crises only confirms, in a spectacular way, the above conclusions.

"Social Democrats" and "Trotskiyites"

Less than one year after its founding, in June 1975, we have the expulsion of a large number (around 30) of central committee members as well as of hundreds of leading members under the charge of "social democratic" leanings. Among them were leading personalities of "democratic defense" (V. Filias, S. Karayiorgos, A. Stangas) and of the "panhellenic liberation movement," PAK, (Amalia Fleming, Melina Merkouri, D. Rokkofilios, K. Nikolaou, in order to mention only those who subsequently returned to the movement.)

The essence of their agreement was the lack of internal party democratic processes and the disregard of central party organs by the leadership. These reason encouraged leading personalities of different origins and beliefs to unite their efforts in the same direction, even resorting to a public denunciation (July-August 1975.) The expelled personalities from "democratic defense" subsequently formed the "socialist progress" group of that time.

The resignation of another 15 members of the Central Committee in September 1975 was the sequel to the same crisis.

Less than one year later, in the spring of 1976, the "sword of vengeance" changed direction. We have a broad purge of the party from the "Trotskiyite faction" (the so called "accessionists" or the organizations of lateral interconnections.) The purge affected several dozen primarily medium to small personalities.

A few months later, in September 1976, a new list of senior personalities was expelled (the group described as the "3 September" group) under the same charges.

In conclusion, in December 1976, the purge included several dozen members of PASOK's university student organization as well as the secretary of the youth movement.

It is characteristic that these repeated internal party explosions did not result in any cut in PASOK's electoral strength. This chain of crises, however, terminated with the convening of the first Panhellenic Conference (March 1977) which elected the current Central Committee. Since that time, until today, only siolated incidents were dealt with by the party's leadership.

Electoral Improvement and Deadlocks

It remains a fact that today the electoral rise of PASOK is not accompanied by a perceptible and simultaneous improvement of its organizational (and at the same time ideological) homogeny. It is also characteristic that despite the much advertized "mass conversion" of the movement the number of PASOK's registered members remains small in comparison to foreign models (its is not over 35,000 to 40,000).

At the same time, however, the prospect of elections (and the expectation of authority) has intensified ideological differentiation within the party. More specifically: During the intensified effort for the improvement of electoral strength there was a discernible trend toward the right favored by the centrist or center-originated personalities (with the parliamentary group as the main spearhead,) which, however, is radically opposed by the organized members of the (Marxist) leftwing. This trend by PASOK was specifically expressed through rapprochement with the European socialist parties; through "acceptance" of the reality of the EEC (possibly of NATO tomorrow?) through advoidance of frontal confrontations with the government.

In other words there is an obvious turn by PASOK toward social democratic models which is considered by its leftwing as a deviation from the declared "purely socialist" principles of the party.

At this moment it would be rather irresponsible to venture a sure forecast of the extent and repercussions of the Thessaloniki developments. It is most probable that the specter of elections will prevent any considerable disruption or spectacular crisis within PASOK. It is easy to state that the prospect of an election success and even of authority will retard any aggressive presentation of radical positions and diametrically opposed differences within it.

One, however, cannot say the same thing in the eventuality of a success or failure to reach authority in the next election which, it is certain, will have a catalytic influence upon the form and direction which the internal dispute may take.

Over and above any election success which PASOK will or will not have; over and above any sequel which the Thessaloniki developments will or will not have, it is certain that the severest "test" to its political maturity, as well as to its attainment of a complete ideological identity, will consist of whether PASOK will be able to overcome its internal problems through amalgamation and unifying processes--in other processes which are dimetrically opposed to those in existence today--in order to solve the deadlock which exists.

DEMIREL ANNOUNCES HE WILL NOT REQUEST CONFIDENCE VOTE

TA041537 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Excerpt] The Council of Ministers met under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel at 1100 today. Demirel made a statement to journalists at the end of the 3-hour meeting. In reply to a question about whether the government will request a vote of confidence following the interpellation motion submitted against Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen, Demirel said:

[Begin recording] This is not possible. Such a thing is not possible. There is an interpellation which is being conducted in accordance with article 89 of the constitution. This is being conducted according to a certain procedure which does not depend on us. There is also the matter of a request for a vote of confidence submitted by the government in accordance with article 104 of the constitution. These two things should not be confused. At this moment, I will not tell you anything about what the government will do. [end recording]

Replying to another question concerning the criticism leveled against the government by the government by the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is], the prime minister said:

[Begin recording] I consider the style of such criticism harsh. The statement that the government has turned its back on labor problems has exceeded its purpose. The government has been dealing with workers' problems before all the problems facing it and is still dealing with them. The government has to pay out a total of a million Turkish liras for seniority compensation and of this amout 4-5 million liras were already due when our government assumed office. In addition, six of the eight issues requested by Turk-Is have been fulfilled. Therefore, the statement was probably made as a result of worries. Moreover, labor tranquillity is very important for Turkey's future. While Turkey is struggling desperately for money and production on the one hand, it is being confronted with strikes, which could totally paralyse its industry, on the other hand. Turkey, which exports $5 million worth of glass every month, is now being forced to import glass. This country belongs to all of us. There are no glass bottles for medicines because glass factories are closed due to strikes. The price of 1 square meter of window glass has increased from 300-400 liras to 1,400 liras.

In other words, it is meaningless to discuss the issue in a one-sided manner. Workers rights--yes; paying the worker for his toils--yes. It is our--above anyone else's--duty to protect these rights. However, apart from the workers, we are faced with the needs of millions of citizens. Furthermore, strike postponement is not handled arbitrarily. The cases which require a postponement of strikes are determined by law. It is erroneous to present the postponement of strikes as a shameful act. It is a government's right as well as its duty to postpone strikes. Should we allow everything to be paralyzed in Turkey? Then they would ask why is everything paralyzed? They would ask us why we did not exercise our authority. No one should complain because authority is being exercised. [end recording]

VISSERLING DUTCH FOREIGN MINISTER SIGNS SOCIAL SECURITY AGREEMENT

TA041846 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Excerpts] The agreement updating the 1966 social security agreement between Turkey and the Netherlands was ceremoniously signed in Ankara today. The agreement was signed by Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen and Dutch Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw.

In a statement at the signing ceremony, Erkmen said that the Turkish workers employed in the Netherlands act as a bridgehead in developing the lively relations between the two countries.

In his statement, Van der Klaauw noted that the agreement will contribute to the development of bilateral relations as well as expanding the social rights of Turkish workers employed in the Netherlands.

According to the agreement, the workers' time of employment connected to the social security organization, the social security association relating to tradesmen, artisans and independent workers and the fund for retired persons will be added to their time of employment in the Netherlands. In addition, dependents of Turkish workers who benefit from unemployment insurance in the Netherlands will be eligible for medical aid. The agreement also stipulates measures regarding workers who receive child allowances from Dutch authorities for their children in Turkey but who fail to send this amount to Turkey.

After the signing ceremony, the Turkish and Dutch foreign ministers made statements on the official talks they held today. Van der Klaauw said that Turkish-EEC relations as well as international issues were discussed during the talks. He also noted that Erkmen briefed him on Cyprus developments. In his statement, Erkmen said that agreement was reached to further develop the cooperation between the two countries in various fields. Pointing out that Turkey and the Netherlands have the possibility for cooperation with a third country, Erkmen said that Dutch economy ministry officials will, in the near future, arrive in Turkey to hold technical contacts on these subjects. Erkmen added that agreement was also reached on maintaining mutual contacts between Turkish and Dutch businessmen and that work will be conducted to develop cooperation in agricultural.

Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel received the Dutch minister in his office at the parliament at 1630. Erkmen also attended the meeting, which lasted about 1 hour. Van der Klaauw will go to Istanbul tomorrow and leave Turkey on Sunday.

BLACK SEA DELINEATION SYSTEM WITH USSR IMPLEMENTED

TA050530 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Text] The delineation system between Turkey and the Soviet Union in the Black Sea has gone into effect. Two lighthouses were built for this purpose. One was built by Turkey on the shore and another one by the Soviet Union at a distance of some 350m from the shore. A ceremony was held in Batum today to mark the occasion. A Turkish delegation headed by Ambassador Asaf Inhan participated in the ceremony. A ceremony will be held in Sarp tomorrow for the inauguration of the lighthouse in the Turkish region. Turkish and Soviet delegations will meet in Tiflis on 6 September to sign the final documents regarding the delineation system.

KREISKY COMMENTS ON POLAND, MIDEAST, U.S. HOSTAGES

LD062342 Hamburg DPA in German 1734 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Dortmund, 6 Sep, (DPA)--Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky spoke out in favor of aid for Poland at the Deutschland meeting of the SPD in Dortmund's Westphalia Park on Saturday. "We must see to it that our governments help the Polish people and also the Polish Government overcome the current economic difficulties." However "unpleasant" the events in Afghanistan, Kreisky assessed the development "in another country neighboring the Soviet Union all the more pleasant." He expressed his confidence that the agreement achieved in Poland," provided it is realized," will have "beneficial consequences for the Polish workers and the entire Polish people."

The Austrian chancellor expressed satisfaction that the events in Poland had taken place without clashes and without outside pressure. Behind this "had obviously been the spirit of Helsinki." Without the agreements of Helsinki there would not have been, in Kreisky's view, this degree of restraint. Hence, Kreisky emphasized the special significance of the Helsinki followup conference in Madrid. Irrespective of the American presidential elections, it had a special task since the world situation is particularly unclear and threatening. It should not be allowed to become a "maze of false rhetoric."

Kreisky expressed the view that in the Middle East the rights of the Palestinian people and of Israel can be reconciled, and "that the one does not exclude the other." He expressed the hope that the Israeli Labor Party would "again win influence" and that the trend "rather peace today then in the distant future" would gain the upper hand.

The Austrian chancellor appealed to the new parliament and the president in Iran to solve the problem of the American hostages. The Social Democrats can understand that the Iranian people had revolted, that they wanted to shape their own development without outside interference. A solution of the hostage problem will make it "much easier" for the Social Democrats to stand by Iran.

Kreisky said that unlike "Bavarian Minister-President Franz Josef Strauss," who had interfered in the Austrian election campaign, he did not wish to interfere in German domestic politics.

USSR FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER PATOLICHEV POSTPONES VISIT

AU041652 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 4 Sep 80 P 9

[Text] Vienna--Soviet Foreign Trade Minister Patolichev has postponed his official visit to Austria that was scheduled for next week. For that reason, the long-term cooperation agreement to be valid until 1990 will not be signed for the time being. However, Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Zhuravlev will come to Austria on the occasion of the Vienna fall fair, and Pitovranov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Chamber of Commerce and Industry, will arrive in Austria as early as today. So far it is not known when Foreign Trade Minister Patolichev will pay his visit to Austria. Informed quarters expect him to come in mid-October. Moreover, there is the prospect of a visit by USSR Premier Kosygin, but the date is still undecided.

LEADERS ON CHANGE OF GOVERNMENT IN POLAND

LD061142 Hamburg DPA in German 1102 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Dortmund/Bonn, 6 Sep (DRA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has intimated that the policy of peace and detente must continue regardless of the change in leadership in Poland. At an SPD Deutschland meeting in Dortmund, Schdmit this morning did not deal directly with the latest developments in Poland but stressed that the policy of peace has to continue, no matter who governs in the neighboring countries. "It is the peoples who have to get along with one another."

With reference to the current developments in Poland a government spokesman in Bonn today stated that personnel policy changes are an "internal Polish affair." There is no reason for the Federal Government to comment on these changes.

Genscher Remarks

LD061636 Hamburg DPA in German 1453 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Text] Bielefeld, 6 Sep (DPA)--FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher, federal foreign minister, at an FDP election rally in Bielefeld, has called for circumspection regarding developments in Poland. Genscher said that strident speeches and political dogmatism are of little use to the people in Poland who want a little bit more freedom and better living conditions. According to a party spokesman Genscher warned against turning the events in Poland into an election campaign topic and leaving behind the joint Western policy of political restraint and practical economic aid through exaggerated reactions.

The FDP chairman said that the People's Republic of Poland was still dealing with solving its grave problems. Anyone interested in a solution for the people in Poland ought to show the same degree of responsibility which the Polish workers and the Polish Catholic Church had so impressively shown. Concerning the change of leadership in Poland, Genscher said: "The Federal Republic does not interfere in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Poland. We resolutely reject any claims to the contrary and appeal to all other states to exercise the same degree of restraint as we."

OFFICIALS REJECT CLAIMS OF INTERFERENCE IN POLAND

Schmidt Interview

LD071036 Hamburg DPA in German 1013 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn, 7 Sep (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has firmly rejected claims by the Soviet media that the West has interfered in Poland. What the Soviet media have written was "massively aggressive, especially toward the West," the chancellor said in a Deutschlandfunk interview on Sunday.

Furthermore, it is not restraint if a state does not interfere in the internal affairs of another, but the norm, prescribed by international law. "The Soviet leadership," Schmidt said, "surely knows that through the military incursion into Afghanistan and the continuing fighting it has exposed itself to the danger of worldwide isolation." It would certainly be difficult to stomach if it now had to face similar charges on another count. However, the chancellor added: "We have no indications whether somebody in Moscow has played with such ideas."

In the chancellor's opinion the process launched in Poland will take a lot of time to be completed. In the economic sector Poland needs outside help. The Federal Republic is interested in the well-being of the Polish national economy. The better off the Poles are the smaller the danger of international complications. Once again the chancellor rejected the idea of tying credits to political conditions.

Genscher Denial

LD071032 Hamburg DPA in German 0951 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Baden-Baden, 7 Sep (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has sharply rejected charges made against the Federal Republic that it has interfered in Polish affairs. "Anyone making such charges ought to realize that he thus contributes toward poisoning the political climate in Europe," Genscher said in a Southwest Radio Baden-Baden interview on Sunday. Genscher proceeds from the premise that Polish foreign policy will remain unaffected by the change in government leadership. Poland is currently going through a difficult period, which should persuade all states to express themselves with great restraint on those events and to look for opportunities to help Poland in solving its economic problems.

German-American relations are in good shape and are based on the awareness that NATO is more than a military alliance of the old type, the federal foreign minister continued In assessing all important international questions the Federal Government is in full agreement with the American Government.

Formal Protest

LD051210 Hamburg DPA in German 1119 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn: The Federal Government has formally and vigorously rejected the GDR's massive accusations about alleged interference by the Federal Republic in the events in Poland. Government Spokesman Boelling disclosed in Bonn today that the chancellor's office had yesterday sharply protested to embassy counsellor Hans Schindler of the GDR's permanent mission in Bonn, against the "slanderous attacks" directed by the main SED paper NEUES DEUTSCHLAND against political personages in the Federal Republic, including Federal President Carstens, and against the media. Schindler who is deputy to the GDR's permanent representative Ewald Moldt, had been summoned to the chancellor's office.

According to Boelling the Federal Government is of the opinion that as regards both their form and content such attacks are contrary to efforts for continuing detente which are the avowed aim of the GDR Government also. In connection with the Western interest in the events in Poland and possible Western aid, the SED paper spoke of "anti-Polish wolves in sheep's clothing" and of "impudent interference" by Western politicians and media and accused prominent politicians in the Federal Republic of "peace-endangering machinations." Boelling pointed out that the Federal Government had observed the utmost restraint concerning events in Poland. Chancellor Schmidt has repeatedly stated, during the past few days as well, that the events are Poland's own internal affair. Clearly aiming at official Soviet commentaries as well, the government spokesman strongly rejected attempts "by third parties to strain the good German-Polish relations."

According to Boelling the Federal Government proceeds from the premise that SED chief Erich Honecker's recent remarks at the Leipzig Fair about the GDR's continuing interest in the further normalization of relations with the Federal Republic continue to hold good. The Federal Government also intends to persist in its efforts for sensible cooperation with the GDR.

BOELLING NOT EXPECTING CAMPAIGN AGAINST QUADRIPARTITE AGREEMENT

LD061040 Hamburg DPA in German 0916 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn, (DPA)--In spite of recent criticism in the Eastern press in connection with the Quadripartite agreement on Berlin, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling does not expect a campaign against the agreement. In a BERLINER MORGENPOST interview (7 September edition) Boelling said that Bonn has supplied neither grounds nor pretexts for action of this kind, nor should it be in the interest of the other side to jeopardize the solid progress of the agreement on Berlin.

The government spokesman added that the Federal Government and every opposition politician endowed with common sense knew "that this agreement must not be misused as a trampoline. As far as we are concerned, we are not going to stir things up, as Herbert Wehner once vividly put it. Berlin must not in the future become an arena for political prizefighters."

Boelling also pointed out that the Federal Government had vigorously rejected the "uncouth and polemical attacks" by the SED central organ NEUES DEUTSCHLAND on the federal president and the "unsubstantiated accusations" against the media in the Federal Republic.

Boelling again stressed that despite the postponement of the meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED General Secretary Erich Honecker, "normal working contacts" between Bonn and East Berlin are continuing.

NEW DATE OF SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING DISPUTED

LD051534 Hamburg DPA in German 1511 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn, 5 Sep (DPA)--A Bonn government spokesman said in reference to an ADN report that the Federal Government adheres to its statement that a new date for the meeting between the chancellorand Honecker will be arranged at a suitable time. The Federal Government had said this on 22 August when the planned Schmidt-Honecker meeting was canceled on short notice.

Following the cancellation of this meeting on account of the political effects of the unrest in Poland on the GDR, the chancellor's assessment became known, according to which his meeting with Honecker would not come about this year and possibly not even next spring.

DER SPIEGEL Report

LD061710 Hamburg DPA in German 1650 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Text] Hamburg, (DPA)--According to DER SPIEGEL, the meeting between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and GDR head of state and party Erich Honecker, which was canceled on short notice, will still take place this year at the request of the SED chief. The newspaper reports in its latest edition that Honecker has sent a private message to the chancellor saying that Schmidt would be welcome in December, despite the fact that the official East Berlin news agency ADN reported on Friday that Honecker did not expect a new date to be set soon.

According to DER SPIEGEL the venue for the meeting is the small island of Vilm, off Ruegen, where the GDR Government has a guesthouse. The choice of this secluded island indicates that Honecker is not eager to cause any spectacular ballyhoo on the sidelines when meeting the chancellor.

In reply to an enquiry concerning this report a government spokesman in Bonn pointed merely to the previous day's statement that as far as the Federal Government is concerned a new date for the meeting between the chancellor and Honecker will be arranged at a suitable time.

Statement by Spokesman

LD071808 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Text] No new date has yet been agreed upon for the postponed meeting between Federal Chancellor Schmidt and GDR state and party chief Erich Honecker, a government spokesman said in Bonn in response to a report in tomorrow's DER SPIEGEL according to which Honecker had sent a private message to the chancellor indicating that Schmidt was welcome to visit the GDR in December. The Bonn government spokesman stressed today that the Federal Government still considers a meeting to be necessary, but the date must be regarded as appropriate by both sides.

Huonker Interview

DW051059 Stuttgart SUEDDEUTSCHER RUNDFUNK Network in German 1710 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Excerpts from reporter Kreus interview in Bonn with Guenter Huonker, minister of state in the chancellor's office--date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Do you have any concrete ideals--and did you perhaps discuss them with the chancellor already--as to a proper date [for the Schmidt-Honecker meeting]?

[Answer] The Federal Government has not made up its mind about it yet.

[Question] Does this mean that speculation that a meeting might take place before the elections is purely theoretical?

[Answer] This is purely speculation, and so it will remain. If you visualize the appointment book of the chancellor you can imagine that in the last few weeks just prior to the Bundestag elections he is totally booked up--which had been set up far in advance.

[Question] How should the international East-West situation, in which this meeting, after all, plays some role be assessed? What does PRAVDA's warning against disturbances, of an endurance test in Berlin, mean in this connection?

[Answer] I want to warn urgently against overrating this statement or this article by PRAVDA. It is not unusual at all for such or similar articles to appear in PRAVDA on the occasion of the anniversary of the quadripartite agreement. I see no cause at all to dramatize this or to draw from it any conclusions to the effect that this article indicates a worsening of relations between East and West. We proceed from the premise that the Quadripartite Agreement is being strictly observed and fully applied by both sides.

FRG STAND AT CSCE MADRID MEETING DETAILED

LD061348 Hamburg DPA in German 1241 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 6 Sep (DPA)--The official Bonn view is that the process of detente in Europe must be continued despite Western displeasure at the Soviet march into Afghanistan.

Diplomatic sources stressed over the weekend that at the forthcoming followup security conference in Madrid there should be businesslike but unpolemic discussion of the topic of Afghanistan, without "a door being closed." Bonn agrees with the United States and the EC partners to a large extent on this.

The preliminary conference at the ambassadorial level which is to settle mainly procedural questions begins in Madrid on Tuesday. During the main conference which opens on 11 November in the Spanish capital, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher himself intends to explain Bonn's plans. He feels that as many counterparts as possible from the 35 participant states should follow his example and also go to Madrid.

Bonn's Objectives

LD070946 Hamburg DPA in German 0505 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Sep (DPA)--The Federal Government has set itself the following specific objectives for the CSCE conference:

1. In order to achieve a balanced conference equal attention ought to be given to all main areas of the Helsinki Final Act, the so-called three baskets. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt emphasized in a Deutschlandfunk interview on Sunday that European security topics will naturally have a big part to play in Madrid. However, this should not mean brushing everything else aside. According to the chancellor it should be examined to what extent the declarations of intent of Helsinki have actually been realized and what still has has to be done.

2. The conference members should arrange militarily significant and politically binding confidence-building measures in Europea, giving a mandate for launching a pan-European disarmament conference. One important basis for this would be France's relevant proposal which has the advantage of including the whole of Europe "from the Atlantic to the Urals," including the Soviet Union's European territories. Similar proposals have been made by the Eastern, especially the Polish, side.

Diplomatic circles believe that the European security conference has had a positive and stabilizing effect on East-West relations. No member has shown the intention to let this process of detente "run aground." Hence Bonn expects a further followup conference to take place in a few years' time, probably in 1983.

BUNDESTAG DELEGATION TO ATTEND EAST BERLIN CONFERENCE

LD051456 Hamburg DPA in German 1306 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Summary] Berlin/Bonn (DPA)--A delegation of 19 members of the Bundestag will take part in the 67th conference of the Interparliamentary Union in East Berlin from 16-24 September. According to information from the Bundestag, this will be the first visit of a Bundestag delegation to the eastern part of Berlin. The invitation was issued by the interparliamentary group of the USSR. The Bundestag delegation will be led by West Berlin CDU Deputy Franz Amrehn.

BUNDESWEHR USES SOVIET TANKS FOR MUNITIONS TESTS

LD051532 Hamburg DPA in German 1407 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] Hamburg--The Bundeswehr has tried out new types of ammunition on a Soviet tank, at a troop training area in the Federal Republic. DPA learned from a well-informed source today that the tank was a T-62, which was introduced into the Soviet Army at the beginning of the Sixties.

A report in HAMBURGER ABENDBLATT that the most modern Soviet tank, the T-72, has been temporarily in the hands of the Bundeswehr was emphatically denied. The Hamburg paper also reported that the trial took place at the Munster Nord training area. It was also confirmed that the United States temporarily placed a Soviet BTR-152 armored troop carrier and a PT-76 reconnaissance tank at the disposal of the Bundeswehr for the trials. The Soviet equipment has meanwhile been returned to the U.S. Army.

It is not known how the United States obtained the Soviet tanks. According to information available to DPA it is certain that they were not captured in Afghanistan. The trials were necessary to enable the Bundeswehr to improve its antitank capability in view of the Eastern bloc's enormous superiority in tanks. The new types of ammunition are apparently intended for the Leopard II and the antitank helicopter.

It was also learned that up to 10,000 modern Soviet T-72 tanks are already stationed in the GDR. Some have already been introduced into the National People's Army. They have also been seen in Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

ALLEGED GDR SPY ARRESTED IN LILLE 19 AUGUST

LD061430 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Text] Clarifications on the information given late this morning : The Territorial Security Directorate [DST] on 19 August arrested in Lille a former chief of staff of the East German Air Force, General Zorn. Well, he had arrived at the beginning of August on a tourist visa but in fact had come to spy. The DST found him in possession of military information regarding armored cars and antiarmored car weapons. Transferred immediately to Paris, the spy was sent before the prosecutor of our state security and is now detained in the Fleury Merogis prison.

BANGLADESH'S RAHMAN SEES 'GOOD PROGRESS' ON NUCLEAR DEAL

LD051437 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Aug-1 Sep 80 p 2

[Patrice de Beer report: "Bangladesh and France Have Signed a Draft Agreement on Nuclear Cooperation"]

[Excerpt] The Bangladesh president's short "working visit" to France ended on Friday evening. After luncheon atthe Elysee followed by talks with Mr Giscard d'Estaing, the two presidents watched the signing of two bilateral agreements--a financial agreement and an agreement on nuclear cooperation. Secretary of State to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Olivier Stirn is to visit Bangladesh before the end of the year. Gen Ziaur Rahman, with whom we met after his visit to the Elysee, stated that he is "very pleased with France's friendly attitude toward Bangladesh." He hopes that "as a result of better understanding, cooperation between the two countries can develop even further." He attaches great importance to the agreement on nuclear cooperation which, according to him, should make it impossible to build a nuclear power station at Ruppur in the country's northern region, "which suffers from a serious electricity shortage." "Details are being worked out and we are now making the necessary financial arrangements. We have made good progress and the question should be resolved in the near future," he added. He was referring to requests for credit made by Dacca in several Arab countries, including Saudi Arabia and Abu Dhabi, with a view to financing this project whose cost has been estimated at Fr400 million.

Common Interest in Indian Subcontinent

However, it has been noted in Paris that the agreement signed by the two countries is only a draft agreement which lays down conditions for such cooperation and also for exchanges of information and trainees, and that no decision has been made with respect to Ruppur. In addition, Bangladesh wants to build a research reactor. In conclusion, Gen Ziaur Rahman told us that his country and France have "similar" views on Afghanistan and Kampuchea and that he is "pleased to see that France is showing increasing interest in the Indian subcontinent." Let us recall that since the beginning of the year Mr Giscard d'Estaing has visited India, Mr Monory Sri Lanka and Mr Stirn Pakistan.

LEADERS ATTEND ATLANTIC TREATY ASSOCIATION SESSION

LD071054 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Excerpts] The 26th session of the Atlantic Treaty Association, ATA, ended in Funchal yesterday. It was attended, among others, by Joseph Luns, Sa Carneiro, Mario Soares, Freitas do Amaral and Amaro da Costa.

Here is a report from Funchal by Jorge Ventura :

The situation in Iran and the new rises in oil prices are among aspects of the international situation considered with a frown of concern in the final resolution released by the participants in the 26th session of the Atlantic Treaty Association here in Funchal. The ATA resolution also notes the growth of Soviet military power in certain nuclear spheres, a state of affairs, it adds, which must be balanced out through modernization of the West's military forces. At the same time ATA condemns the arms race.

Another point in the resolution places emphasis on Portugal's growing importance in the context of the Atlantic alliance, and on the need to strengthen the defense capacity of the strategic triangle defined by the Portuguese mainland, Madeira and the Azores.

Reflecting the tone of the participants' speeches, the final resolution condemns the policy pursued by the Soviet Union, which it describes as expansionist. It also accuses the USSR of resorting to military means in pursuit of its goals. The Soviet intervention in Afghanistan is viewed by ATA in this context. The participants' analyses of Soviet policies all led to the same question: What policy should be pursued by the Western bloc to effectively confront Soviet influence?

Generally speaking, the replies to this question were formulated from two main standpoints: the military, and the political-economic. The latter seemed to be favored by the Portuguese political leaders, who pointed to the need for economic aid to be rendered by NATO to the developing countries as the most adequate and effective means of defusing what they described as the Soviet threat. They certainly had in mind the need to call on the Western bloc for aid initiatives toward our country--economic as well as military aid.

In this connection it may be worth recalling some of what has been said here in the last few days. Thus, the head of the Madeira regional government, Alberto Joao Jardim, declared at the opening session that the Soviet Union would predictably exploit the (?aspirations) of the most underprivileged sections of the European populations. This, he added, called for a concerted effort at technical, cultural, economic and financial cooperation among the Western allies. Portuguese Prime Minister Sa Carneiro took up the same topic in the context of what he described as the two major threats confronting the world: underdevelopment and Soviet imperialism.

Defense Minister Amaro da Costa also referred to the need to take into account the aspirations to justice and freedom in the countries of the so-called Third World.

Mario Soares said that the interests and security of the NATO countries depend on the guaranteeing of democratic stability and the creation of the necessary conditions for their economic development.

In his speech Freitas do Amaral stressed the urgent need for the NATO countries to step up their dialogue on foreign policy. In his opinion, the coordination and articulation of common goals and priorities is a fundamental prerequisite for the definition and implementation of a true Western foreign policy.

DEMARCHE SENT TO TURKISH GOVERNMENT ON FOREIGN MINISTRY CHANGE

AT071345 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 7 Sep 80 p 1

[Excerpt] In a demarche Greece has asked the Turkish Government to explain whether Erkmen's resignation from his position as foreign minister means a change in Ankara's foreign policy of Greek-Turkish problems. According to our information the demarche was considered necessary for the following two reasons:

1. During the Turkish parliament's debate on the motion of censure, criticism leveled against Erkmen also extended to his handling of Greek-Turkish issues.

2. Because contacts (Greek-Turkish dialogue, meeting between the Greek and Turkish foreign ministers and others) are in progress at this moment which were jointly agreed upon during the recent meeting of Mitsotakis and Erkmen in Ankara.

The ATHENS NEWS AGENCY reported from Ankara that Erkmen, who was relieved of his duties as foreign minister by the Turkish National Assembly, stated the other night that he hoped there would be no future change in the Turkish Government's foreign policy.

Reported Assurances From Turkey

AT071520 Athens KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 7 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Thessaloniki, 7 Sep--From our correspondent Aristidhis Manolakos: Assurances to the Greek Government that the dismissal of Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen will not affect the climate of Greek-Turkish relations were supplied by Ankara to Athens. This was reported yesterday by well-informed sources which did not conceal the concern of the Greek Government over developments which could possibly follow the Turkish foreign minister's resignation.

As reported, however, there is no question of any postponement of the scheduled Greek-Turkish talks. Dialogue between the two countries will continue with the arrival, within the next few days, of representatives of the Turkish Foreign Ministry in Athens. At the end of this month Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and the Turkish foreign minister, to be appointed to replace Erkmen, are scheduled to meet in New York during the annual UN General Assembly meeting.

USSR INITIALS ACCORD ON STUDY OF ALUMINA PLANT

AT061602 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 6 Sep 80 p 16

[Text] Minister of Coordination I. Boutos stated yesterday that an agreement had been initialed in Moscow for the preparation of a feasibility study that envisages the establishment of an alumina plant in Greece. According to reports, no decision was made on substantive issues because these will follow the feasibility study. One of the most basic issues will be the absorption of the plant's production.

Political observers noted yesterday that this agreement has overcome a significant obstacle in Greek-Soviet relations; they expressed optimism about the further development of cooperation between the two countries in the economic sector. After the preparation of the feasibility study discussions will follow on the absorption of the plant's production (600,000 tons annually). As is well known the Soviet Union appears prepared, together with other socialist countries (Bulgaria and Hungary), to absorb the entire production.

At the end of September, relevant talks will take place with a Soviet delegation which will visit Athens.

ASSEMBLY OUSTS FOREIGN MINISTER; CEYHUN ACTING

TA051425 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1410 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen received 230 votes of no confidence and 2 votes of confidence at the National Assembly today and was thus ousted from office. The no confidence motion proposed by NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan and four of his colleagues following the interpellation debate on the foreign minister was submittedto a vote at the assembly today. Deputies from the JP and the NAP, three NSP, three independent and one Order Party deputy abstained during the voting. One JP deputy from the Leadership Council and one Republican Reliance Party deputy voted against the no-confidence motion. RPP deputies, 19 NSP deputies, 1 Turkish Unity Party deputy and 5 independent deputies voted in favor of ousting the foreign minister.

According to the pertinent article in the constitution, 226 no confidence votes are necessary to topple a minister. Assembly President Cahit Karakas announced the result of the voting, which was held by roll call, as follows:

[Begin Karakas recording] 230 in favor and 2 against; thus the foreign minister is ousted. The simple majority required by the last paragraph of article 89 of our constitution has been observed. [end recording]

Erkmen Statement

TA051651 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen, who has been ousted by the National Assembly, has said: I hope that this decision will not cause a change in Turkish foreign policy. Speaking to journalists in parliament, Erkmen described the outcome of the voting as a political decision. Pointing out that the people who submitted an interpellation motion against him resorted to this method because they could not attack the government, Erkmen said: Such a result was obtained, obviously, because the government did not consider this the right time to transform the issue into a vote of confidence regarding the government itself.

State Minister Ceyhun's Appointment

TA070808 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0800 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Text] It has been decided that State Minister Ekrem Ceyhun will be acting foreign minister. The decision appointing Ceyhun as acting foreign minister was published in the Official Gazette today. The post was vacant following the ouster of Hayrettin Erkmen through an interpellation motion.

Party Reactions

TA051725 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Excerpts] Speaking at the RPP parliamentary group meeting, which met in an extraordinary session after the assembly meeting, party leader Bulent Ecevit said: It is now evident that this government has lost its majority in the assembly. It is a government hanging in the air. Ecevit continued: It is obvious that such a government will not be able to overcome the problems currently facing us, especially the problems created as a result of this government's performance and attitude. The opposition of the RPP in the assembly has overcome the obstruction of parliamentary functioning, which has been continuing for months, and has secured the necessary effectiveness. Ecevit added that the RPP will continue to fulfill its task of opposition with the same understanding of effectiveness and responsibility throughout the country and that it believes that it will assume power.

In his statement, JP deputy leader Yigit Koker said that the situation created in the wake of today's voting will be discussed by the authorized bodies of the JP. Noting that the JP Leadership Council will meet at 1100 tomorrow and the General Administrative Council will meet at 1700 on Monday, Koker said that a statement will probably be issued at the end of these meetings.

A statement issued by the Republican Reliance Party Leadership Council noted that it is not possible to agree with the reasons cited in the interpellation motion about the foreign minister submitted by the NSP. The statement said that the fact that the prime minister and the JP abandoned a minister who was defending the government's foreign policy before the parliament is as astonishing and onerous as the fact that the RPP submitted the NSP motion. The statement adds: The NSP submitted the interpellation motion about the foreign minister because of the foreign policy pursued by the Turkish Government and not because of the personal attitude of the minister.

Demirel News Conference

TA061758 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Text] Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that given the current conditions Turkey cannot be delivered into the hands of the RPP administration because the country might be greatly harmed. Demirel said: Actually they are not asking for it. However, they are pursuing a policy of "after me come what may."

The JP Leadership Council met today and discussed the situation following the ousting of Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen. At a news conference he held while the Leadership Council was in progress, Demirel said that the JP General Administrative Council will meet on Monday. Noting that the situation cannot be underestimated, Demirel said that he found it beneficial to further clarify the situation. Pointing out that Turkey was suffering from political instability, Demirel added: It is natural that we view the situation with a cool head. It is easy to drag Turkey into crises. However, Turkey cannot benefit from crises. Seeking measures and remedies to prevent further crises in our country, which is already facing many problems, is tantamount to securing national interests. I believe dragging the country into crises is not in the interest of Turkey. Therefore, the JP administration and the JP government consider it their duty to assess the incidents with a cool head.

Demirel said the RPP was running away from the people but that at the same time it preferred to continue its attempts to shake the government by resorting to intrigues and plots within the parliament. Noting that Turkey had a government which was in control of the nation's problems and that the country's administration was becoming more difficult, Demirel said: I do not know what the RPP wishes to obtain by shaking the government each day. Demirel said that as part of this policy aimed at shaking the government interpellations were being submitted for various ministers. Noting that the interpellation concerning the foreign minister was directly aimed at creating a crisis, Demirel said the interpellation was not serious or logical nor was it based on facts. Describing the interpellation as a plot, Demirel then criticized the allegations leveled in the interpellation.

Demirel described as an empty, meaningless and ridiculous slander and lie the allegation that attempts were being made to enter the European Common Market in a bid to make Turkey a province of Europe, thus separating it from the Islamic world. Demirel said: No one can make Turkey a province of any place. This is impossible. Turkey is a sovereign country. It is an independent and free country and it will remain so. No one should ever doubt it. Those who dare to make such an allegation are actually lacking in trust. They do not believe in Turkey's traditional policy and its future. Noting that a decision was made by the [word indistinct] government in 1963 to join the Common Market and that the Ankara agreement was signed, Demirel recalled that Ecevit was a minister in that government.

Noting that the NSP had formed a coalition government once with the RPP and twice with the JP, Demirel said that the NSP did not consider relations with the EEC to be a move which would lead to Turkey becoming a province of Europe.

Referring to the allegation that the Aegean Sea was left to Greece through the lifting of NOTAM 714, Demirel said: If the Aegean was really left to Greece where were you before yesterday? It has been months since the NOTAM was lifted. Demirel continued: The nation is a witness. Does even one person believe that there are attempts to make Turkey a province of Europe? What are the symptoms and the proof? Who has seen them, who has heard of them? The nation is my witness. Is there one citizen in Turkey who believes that the Aegean will be left to the Greeks? Votes cast in favor of such an interpellation full of lies and slander can only be called part of a plot.

Recalling the allegation within the interpellation that the rights of Turks in western Thrace, who are being persecuted, are not being defended, Demirel said the government defended their rights in a dignified and determined manner. Demirel continued: However, those who submitted this interpellation, those who have signed this interpellation, namely, Necmettin Erbakan, recently visited Baghdad. While the blood of our 10 citizens who crossed the border into Iraq near Hakkari and who were shot after being forced to kneel, can still be witnessed, while 17 and later 5 more Turks were sentenced to death in Iraq, while a majority of them have already been executed and while the nation is still grieving over these incidents, Erbakan, who dared to say that sufficient interest was not being shown to Turks in western Thrace, has visited Iraq. Upon returning from Iraq, Erbakan announced that the killing and execution of our innocent citizens and kinsmen was justified. Demirel said that someone who could say such a thing could not possibly speak in defense of the Turks of western Thrace.

Noting that one of the allegations in the interpellation was the failure to sever relations with Israel following the latter's decision declaring Jerusalem its capital, Demirel said: Had we severed relations with Israel, would Israel renounce its decision? Pointing out that the major goal of Turkish foreign policy was securing Turkish interests, Demirel added: The RPP has consented to the foreign policy guidelines drawn by the NSP. In other words, the RPP, by casting a no confidence vote, has consented to a foreign policy proposed by the NSP. Why? Because if certain allegations are leveled against a government or a minister and if votes are cast in line with these allegations then this is tantamount to consent.

Now I ask you: Will the RPP, in the event it assumes power, pursue such a foreign policy? If the RPP claims that it voted only to cause trouble for the JP then is this not hypocrisy? If it intends to pursue such a foreign policy then Turkey will be greatly damaged. I ask: If the NSP and the RPP jointly gain power, will they pursue such a foreign policy? Or will they pursue another policy after having discarded this one and using it as a tool to accuse the JP government? These questions are awaiting an answer. They will have to answer to the nation not to us. We are asking these questions on behalf of the nation. We will continue to ask these questions. If you say that these allegations were made because the government was vulnerable we will not leave you in peace.

Noting that the RPP was following Erbakan, Demirel said conscientious people could not have voted in favor of such accusations. Noting that the conditions prevailing in November 1979 had caused the establishment of the current government, Demirel said: These conditions still exist. Demirel said the issue of whether or not the government can still function concerns the JP General Administrative Council and that the council closely follows the developments. Demirel said: Next week we will know the decision which is to be made by the JP Administrative Council. The moment we realize we can no longer help this country we will retire in a dignified manner. I would like to point out that there is no need for anyone to panic or to be in doubt. We will continue to act reasonably in accordance with national interests while keeping a cool head. There is no need for panic. We can be overly active in case various state organizations are paralyzed. In other words, everyone should continue to perform his duties.

In reply to journalists who recalled allegations to the effect that Erkmen was left alone, Demirel said that these allegations were ridiculous and that the JP was struggling with all its might in unity. Demirel added that the JP group did not participate in the voting because it considered the interpellation to be full of worthless lies and slanders. Referring to allegations that he was hindering the presidential elections, Demirel said that these allegations could not be taken seriously.

NSP Leader's News Conference

TA051937 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan has said that the fact that the foreign minister was ousted following an interpellation motion has demonstrated that the parliament is not a toy in the hands of the JP minority government.

In a news conference at parliament at the end of the voting on the no-confidence motion, Erbakan noted that for the first time in the history of the republic, a minister is being ousted through an interpellation motion and that this is not an everyday occurrence.

Erbakan said: This decision was taken regarding a minister who has not severed relations with Israel despite the fact that the latter declared Jerusalem its capital and continued to follow an aggressive policy. Pointing out that the Turkish people are also in favor of severing relations with Israel, Erbakan said that by adopting this decision, the parliament showed that it represents the nation.

Noting that bringing the JP to power one more time resulted in bankruptcy, Erbakan said that NSP will make a new assessment of the situation and will view the future from a new viewpoint.

Reiterating his opinion that only the national solution can save Turkey from its current situation, Erbakan said that as soon as his party is convinced that a government which will pursue this path will be established, it will exert every possible effort to insure its establishment. Expressing the belief that the parliament will fulfill this duty, Erbakan said that it is necessary to topple the current government. However, the next government should perform much better than this one.

Replying to journalists'questions, Erbakan said that the RPP call to establish a restoration government is not sufficient for his party and that more details should be given on this subject.

Replying to a question on whether or not the NSP will support the interpellation motion to be submitted by the RPP on the finance minister, Erbakan stated: What do you expect from a mentality which crushes the poor, creates competition for raising interest rates and only raises the cost of living. It is clear that we will continue to fulfill our duty in parliament.

Demirel Statement Before Vote

TA051822 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] Prime Minister and JP leader Suleyman Demirel has said: This interpellation motion is a plot. The 89th article of the constitution has been used as a tool for a plot and not as a means of supervision.

Speaking at the JP joint parliamentary group meeting before the voting on the no confidence motion at the National Assembly, Demirel said that if the desired result is obtained through this motion, a crisis will thus have been started. He continued: If the red votes are in accordance with the constitution, then we have nothing to say. The finger that the law cuts off does not hurt. Then, we will consider what we will do in a cool-headed manner.

We can discuss the matter at our authorized councils and group meetings with a cool head and reach a decision. Whatever is best for the country and the nation will prevail. If the accusations cited in the interpellation motion to be voted on today were, even a little, truthful, then our consciences would be disturbed. However, the allegations in the motion are totally without foundation. They are all imaginary and [word indistinct].

If the RPP, which is following in the wake of the NSP, votes in favor of the no-confidence motion, it will bear the responsibility of its consequences.

In his speech Demirel referred to the allegations cited in the interpellation motion. On the subject of the accusation that the government has attempted to transform Turkey into a province of Europe by joining the EEC, Demirel said: God is a witness, the nation is a witness and the world is a witness that this is a mere lie. Demirel said that no one could do such a thing, that the RPP is being hypocritical on this matter and that the JP will not let the RPP forget this hypocrisy.

Pointing out that the claim that the Aegean Sea was abandoned to the Greeks by lifting NOTAM 714 is senseless and illogical, Demirel said that the allegations regarding the Turks in western Thrace are also utterly groundless.

He continued: The persons who submitted this interpellation motion did not think about our 10 brothers who were shot in the back because they crossed the border and about the rights of our kinsmen who were executed in Iraq. We were the first country to react to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. We were the ones who said that this is an invasion. We were the ones to demand an immediate Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan. It is this government which assisted Iran when numerous countries were imposing an embargo on Iran and causing it to starve. It is again this government which reacted first when Israel declared Jerusalem as its capital. The attitude and stand of the government on this subject should be appreciated and not disapproved. As it is, the representatives of Muslim countries in Ankara extended their gratitude to our government.

Asking whether Jerusalem will be taken from the Israelis by the Muslims if the interpellation motion yields a result, Demirel said: Were we the ones who caused Israel to declare Jerusalem its capital? Why are we considered to be guilty?

Noting that those who vote in favor of this interpellation motion are actually voting for falsehood, because all the allegations are unfounded, Demirel inquired: Will the RPP sever relations with Israel when it comes to power?

Demirel added: Will those who submitted this interpellation motion adopt the allegations cited in the motion as guidelines of their foreign policy if they assume power in the future? Such a foreign policy would completely contradict Turkey's interests and our prestige would be irreparably damaged. National interests do not consist of slogans. National interests consist of calculations. We defended Turkey's rights. We will explain to the nation that those who vote in favor of this motion will bear the consequences of their action.

Demirel said that the interpellation motion does not place the government in a difficult situation. On the contrary, it demonstrates that the government is right.

Expressing his views concerning interpellations, Demirel noted: We do not question anyone on why they submitted interpellations. This is a constitutional right. It is necessary to regard and assess it in this way. However, it is also necessary to reflect on the aims and gravity of interpellations. It is necessary to reflect on why an interpellation is submitted. We do not have a sufficient majority in the National Assembly. If we had a sufficient majority in the assembly, then we would have rejected these interpellations, which consist of imaginary allegations and which hinder the enactment of the bills on combatting anarchy, before they were included in the agenda.

We have always stated that we do not have a majority to ensure the survival of a government. The number of seats we have in parliament did not bring us to power. It was the national inclination, which became apparent in the elections on 14 October 1979, that brought us to power.

Recalling that the government has been confronted with five interpellations, one for the Council of Ministers and four for ministers, during its 10-month reign, Demirel said: Our conscience is clear. We acted with dignity and we will continue to hold our head upright and act with dignity.

Ecevit's Comments Before Vote

TA051920 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Excerpts] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that the government is trying to survive by consenting to get rid of its ministers as useless when it is unable to block interpellation motions in the assembly.

Expressing his views on this subject during the first part of a news conference in Ankara today, Ecevit said: The government first demonstrated this with the interior minister. Now it is risking the further examples. The government cannot even be considered to be surviving; it is merely hanging in the air. In other words, the government is in a vacuum. The government is formulating and implementing the economic decisions which render the struggle to make a living unbearable for the majority of the people outside the assembly. It is, on the other hand, blocking the enactment of the social bills, which could, to some extent, balance the effect of these decisions. The government has even been hindering the enactment of the bills on security and martial law, which it wants itself.

Pointing out that Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel also drove the issue of presidential elections into an impasse and left the state without a head for months, Ecevit said: It will be greatly irresponsible to force our nation to celebrate Republic Day without a president. Noting that early elections before the election of a president would drag the country into a constitutional and state crisis, Ecevit said that even an acting president cannot fill the president's post in such a situation. He noted: The RPP has not claimed that early elections are in violation of the constitution. It is only claiming that holding early elections before the election of a president would create certain situations that are contradictory to the constitution.

Expressing the view that the government is attempting to damage the prestige of the Grand National Assembly, Ecevit stated that outside the assembly the government is able to survive only through the support of rightist terrorists. He continued: The fact that the Konya Prison was raided by armed militants from the outside and the fact that numerous rightist terrorists and criminals were helped to escape is very shameful. This indicates that the state has collapsed. It also shows that the government has collapsed. The government is pretending not to be aware of networks that assist prisoners to escape despite the fact that this fact has been published in the press for weeks. The prime minister is still saying that the government does not have a dossier on this subject. The shameful incident in Konya yesterday is the outcome of this conscious indifference.

In reply to a question on whether or not he would approve the toppling of the present government and its replacement by a RPP-NSP coalition, Ecevit stated that an election campaign has started, even if it is not for early elections, and therefore the RPP will stress field work. He said: Saving Turkey from this government before the elections are held constitutes one of the basic conditions for insuring security.

THORN CITES POSSIBILITY OF AID TO POLAND

LD051308 Hamburg DPA in German 1157 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Excerpts] Berlin--Acting President of the EEC Council of Ministers Gaston Thorn thinks that a European Community aid program for Poland is not out of the question. Speaking at a news conference in Berlin, where he is staying in his capacity as president of the Liberal International, he said today that this was conditional on Poland wanting such aid. An inquiry among the member countries of the European Community had revealed their readiness for such a program.

Thorn strongly defended the EEC's Middle East initiative. It was not dictated by Europe's dependence on oil but was made in response to the great cultural and geographic closeness of the Arab states.

In his principal speech at the Liberal congress in the afternoon, President Thorn sharply criticized the disregard for human rights in Latin America. It is the task of the Liberal International to provide a hearing for those "voices of reason" who believe in a "viable alternative to communism and military dictatorship."

Thorn regretted that "the countries of the Eastern bloc, especially the USSR, have persistently refused to play an active role in the North-South dialogue." Even the report of the Brandt Commission was "much too soft" in this respect.

In Afghanistan, Thorn said, the Western governments must insist on the complete withdrawal of Soviet forces. At the same time it was important that the United States and the USSR should "continue to talk to one another." Every effort to reduce the present tensions should be encouraged. The West should make it clear to the USSR that "its expansionist foreign policy is contrary to any for detente."

Thorn declared that the Liberals had a special role to play in "the urgently needed political dialogue across the Atlantic." The Canadian Liberal Party could be of special help in this respect. After the U.S. presidential elections "serious efforts" should be made to determine those contacts which the Liberal International "can and should formalize with Liberal personalities and organizations in the United States."

GERMAN NATO GENERAL NOTES VALUE OF ELECTRONIC WARFARE

DW051337 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 5 Sep 80 p 7

[Adelbert Weinstein report on an interview with Lt Gen Ernst-Dieter Bernhard, deputy supreme commander of the Allied Air Forces Central Europe: "NATO Needs More Planes and Arms"]

[Text] Ramstein, 4 September--The construction of a bomber which avoids radar detection is possible. This is what German Lt Gen Ernst-Dieter Bernhard, deputy supreme commander of the Allied Air Forces Central Europe (AAFCE), told this newspaper. The corresponding enlightenment of the public by the U.S. secretary of defense is "information of technical substance." The United States is developing a type of airplane whose special characteristic is its immunity to enemy radar surveillance. The means exist for minimizing the radar echo of any vehicle. The reaction of airplanes to infrared detection can also be reduced. The scientists and engineers have discovered production systems which allow aircraft to remain invisible on radar screens. "I fail to see any reason to accuse the U.S. secretary of defense of harboring futuristic ideas. My experience as a pilot and military leader in the air force has taught me that the technological dreams of yesterday turn into the achievements of tomorrow. But one must be prepared to pay the price for them."

No doubt the future "invisible" bomber will be costly. Yet no price is too high for retaining the bomber as a weapon. Despite the stormy development of the missile as a weapon, the airplane remains an important part of air forces. "The bomber controlled by a man can be recalled or detoured by the military leadership in any situation. This means that the bomber thus also provides the leadership with flexibility in action and flexibility in the strategy of deterrence. The missile, in contrast, once launched follows its course, and if for any reason it is not supposed to hit the envisaged target it is necessary to destroy this weapon which costs millions of marks."

Besides, Lieutenant General Bernhard said, the hint of the U.S. secretary of defense shows that the discussion on the question of whether it is expedient to retain the bomber or to promote the missile weapon is unnecessary. Technically, reality once again has refuted all those who considered the bomber to be obsolete. But also militarily, in tactical, operational, as well as strategic respects, to be specific, the airplane retains a central position. "After all, it is also a flying missile carrier. This quality benefits the missile as a whole, for the missile also has its enemy. If a missile were only able to be launched from the ground or from a submerged submarine, it would lose much of its effectiveness as a weapon." Besides, it is the variety of weapons systems in and extending beyond the theater which makes up the strength of an armed force. There are so many targets, objects that must be hit, destroyed or temporarily inactivated that only a broad variety of military instruments can produce success. Besides, it is possible to counteract the numerical superiority of the enemy, whose military doctrine is totally tailored to attack and who, therefore, also has a gigantic arsenal of offensive weapons, only with a variety of defensive arms.

When he as an air force general speaks of the theater, General Bernhard said, then he must explain what the air force believes. For the pilot the theater does not have any bounds such as it has, say, for the tank driver and ordnance man. "For the pilot the theater is everything within the range of his plane." The tactical air operations in the theater do not just include the classical missions of direct support for the army. "Air defense also belongs to them, as does dogfights against enemy air forces, stopping offensive thrusts and air reconnaissance."

Thus the NATO air forces are required to live up to a multitude of competing demands. Just like the other armed forces they are facing the task, geopolitically, of setting up a defensive posture far ahead of their lines. In that respect it is inevitable to accept the disadvantage that the initiative might have to be left to the potential adversary. A high level of readiness and a diversified weapons arsenal therefore constitutes the prerequisite for the deterrent effect of the AAFCE.

It is against this background that one of the most important problems must be viewed if one wishes to assess the potential theater of central Europe in a militarily proper way. The catchword is quantity. "The numerical proportion in bombers at present amounts to more than 2:1 to the disadvantage of NATO." The thesis about the technical superiority of the Atlantic air forces is not longer valid. "Nor can you balance the numerical disproportion by means of our better training level." The time has come to state that "what NATO needs is not only airplanes and weapons with greater range of usability, but also more planes and more arms."

The constant observation of the further development of the (possible) enemy's potential, the analysis of his military doctrine and the findings, corroborated by reconnaissance results, that he would launch the first assault, allows but one conclusion: "Our air forces must not only be able to survive this first assault. The special capabilities of the Western 'air power' must be used for an immediate retaliation strike. The allied air forces of NATO must foil the concept of the potential adversary from the outset. They must deprive the Red air force and the assault of the ground forces of the Warsaw Pact of their impetus from the very first moment."

This calls for a number of continuous though independent Western air operations. "Leading such defensive operations, however, creates a number of problems." The Warsaw Pact has modernized its tactical air forces in the past decade. Despite an increase in quality, the Soviets have not limited the number of planes ready for action. "Along with modernization, the structure and mission of the Soviet tactical air force will change." In earlier times the Warsaw Pact air force had a limited range. It was supposed to support its ground forces. It was to act defensively. "Now the Soviet Armed Forces are oriented offensively. They can fly sorties deep into the battlefield, while simultaneously giving direct support to their own land forces."

Three remarkable developments have increased the technical performance of the Warsaw Pact's air force. First, the planes of the so-called third generation of Russian aircraft have been equipped with new bombing devices and refined navigation capabilities. "They can carry three times heavier payloads over a considerably longer distance than the earlier types of plane." These planes can be used either for low flights or flights at great altitudes. They can be refueled in the air. "All NATO airfields, including those in Great Britain, are now within the range of the Warsaw Pact air forces."

Second, the Warsaw Pact has reinforced its air defense systems down to the level of divisions and regiments. That permits the Red air force to use its planes in a "multiple role." The other side can use its planes for an air attack and for air defense. Third, the Warsaw Pact is about to introduce a considerable number of combat helicopters. "This arms system must be considered to be another element of air support for the ground forces. Every new combat helicopter will free other air force units of the enemy, particularly forces that can fly deeper into our combat zone."

So NATO must reckon with attacks from many directions and with many different weapons. There has been broad adjustment for this situation. Western air defense forces have been set up in considerable depth. Ground-to-air missiles and fighter planes together with an integrated guidance and communications system are the core of wide spread defense at all altitudes. The all weather ability of NATO has been improved with such types of planes as the F-15 and the FGR-2. "The Tornado fighter plane can be called a plane with highly modern avionics, which is in a position to operate in enemy areas under all weather conditions." But neither the introduction of new models, nor the flexibility of the Western military potential will suffice to offset the numerical superiority of the East. "From my point of view we must make plans to increase the number of our planes."

If the Western air forces want to deprive the adversary of the possibility of unleashing an air offensive, they ought to be able to hit the Warsaw Pact "hard and energetically" with NATO air warfare operations. A prerequisite for the implementation of this strategy of deterrence--and in case it should fail, for a successful immediate counteroffensive--is the existence of electronic equipment. "Electronic warfare is a war within a war."

NATO is well prepared for electronic countermeasures. "Our modern telecommunication systems, sensors and arms systems have considerable protective devices against an electronic fight." Highly sensitive passive warning systems have been developed for our tactical planes. There is still a shortage with regard to active electronic warfare. However, the variety of threats demand that the West must prepare a "varied package of countermeasures" with priority given to electronic warfare.

Priority must also be given to cruise missiles. "Cruise missiles or guided long-range weapons can intensify the offensive fight against enemy air forces. Cruise missiles, which can soon be produced at low costs, can also be used against highly valuable and heavily protected enemy targets." This is important because the Warsaw Pact has realized the difficulty of protecting its own troops against air raids in quickly changing combat situations. The Soviets have therefore developed a number of arms systems which are supposed to support the planned early success. They believe that the advantages of a short preparatory time must be exploited. After a massive concentration of their firepower, they want to roll up Western defenses with their breakthrough armies. In order to do that, they need a mobile air defense shield to escort the advancing troops. That shield consists of the mobile missile systems SA-6, SA-8 and the one-man SA-7 missile. In addition, there would be guns on multiple gun mounts (ZSU-23-4). "Holding down the adversaries air defense therefore has become a factor of vital significance for Atlantic air operations, with the help of which a possible adversary's 'breadth of attacks' should be taken away immediately."

In conclusion, Lieutenant General Bernhard stated that no satisfactory answer exists about how the West ought to counter the military threat from the East. NATO has outstanding technological knowledge. Personnel of high quality handle modern equipment. The financial resources of the Atlantic alliance are not unlimited, but they are of such a nature that the possibilities of the Warsaw Pact are being offset. "What we need--next to the political will to preserve freedom--is the preparedness to counter the adversary with more arms. New armanent systems must be quickly introduced in the fields of precision and distance arms. If we want to keep our ability to produce deterrence, we need more allied planes and more equipment for special missions." NATO ought to follow the example of the American ally who is making preparations with a new type of a bomber for the next decade.

MOTIVES FOR TRANSFER OF DUTCH EMBASSY TO TEL AVIV

LD080717 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKTRANT in Dutch 27 Aug 80 p 3

[Text] The Hague--"The Netherlands found itself between the rock-hard Israeli stance on the Jerusalem law and the rock-hard Arab demands and the consequences which these would have for the explanation of the decision to move the Dutch Embassy from Jerusalem. He pointed out that this decision was made partly because of the position of coercion into which the Netherlands had been maneuvered.

Minister of Economic Affairs Van Aardenne stated Tuesday in a note on Dutch interests in the Arab world that the turning off of the oil faucet by the Arab countries would have had grave consequences for the Dutch oil companies and for the price movement on the free oil market. The minister described Dutch trade with the Arab countries as "considerable."

The Dutch Government's statement on the decision to move the embassy from Jerusalem to Tel Aviv states that this decision was made on the basis of "all relevant political factors."

Van der Klaauw regretted that "despite all consultations," pressure to move the embassy was maintained by the Arabs. Van der Klaauw referred, among other things, to a conversation which he recently held with the Arab League secretary general at the non-proliferation conference in Geneva.

Van der Klaauw also explained that the Security Council's resolution on the Jerusalem law, in which the removal of embassies from Jerusalem is recommended, not made obligatory, played a major role in the Dutch Government's decision. "The Netherlands has always implemented Security Council recommendations," the minister stated.

The Dutch decision was also indirectly influenced by the fact that the Netherlands will become EEC chairman in 6 months' time.

Van der Klaauw said: "It played a part at the back of my mind." With respect to the question as to why the Dutch Government did not decide to move the embassy immediately after the Israeli parliament's decision to annex East Jerusalem, the minister stated: "It was not immediately contemplated. Or rather, it did not occur to me while I was on vacation. In any event, it was not comtemplated by the Dutch Government.

Consultations on the technical aspects of the embassy's transfer began the day before yesterday in official circles in The Hague. Minister Van der Klaauw stated: "The removal decision is already being implemented." Dutch Ambassador to Israel I. Verkade is still in the Netherlands. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said that it will not be easy to carry out the transfer rapidly. The spokesman said that he does not rule out the possibility of the Netherlands retaining a consultate general in Jerusalem has hitherto been simultaneously consul general.

In his note on Dutch interests in the Arab countries Minister Van Aardenne discloses that the Netherlands' total exports to these countries in 1979 totaled 4 billion guilders. Imports--primarly oil--totaled 12 billion guilders. Dutch enterprises are currently engaged in several billion-guilder projects in Saudi Arabia. According to the minister, possible Arab economic sanctions could lead to the cancellation of contracts involving billions of guilders.

Van Aardenne doubts whether the partners in the International Energy Agency would have been prepared to help if the Netherlands had become involved in a grave conflict with the Arab countries as a result of a principled stance. "Some caution therefore does not seem out of place," the minister states.

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON POLISH DEVELOPMENTS, CSCE

DW081155 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0900 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Reporter Donat interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt--date, place not given; recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, your joint statement with the French president after the Soviet attack on Afghanistan said approximately the following: Detente policy would be unable to withstand one more event like Afghanistan. Do you believe that Moscow's approach, or rather restraint, in matters concerning Poland has been and will be dictated by this insight?

[Answer] I would formulate it a bit differently. First of all, I do not find that the Soviet Union has maintained restraint. What I am reading in the Soviet media is strongly aggressive, particularly vis-a-vis the West. They are saying that the West has interfered in Poland and so on. I cannot consider this to be restraint. These are in part some very far-reaching exaggerations which must be very clearly rejected as a whole. It is not restraint if one state does not interfere in the internal affairs of another. That is normal; it is prescribed by international law, it is prescribed by the Helsinki Final Act.

The Soviet leadership certainly knows that the military invasion of Afghanistan and the continuing warfare have created the danger of great isolation from the whole world. It has not merely heard sharp protests from the whole world--clearly outlined also by the Federal Republic of Germany, by me in the Kremlin without diplomatic niceties--but it has also been shown--through votes such as in the United Nations or at two conferences of all the Islamic states of the world and there are more than 3 dozen of them--that the Soviet Union is taking a back seat because of its Afghanistan policy, and rightly so. It would certainly have been difficult for it to face such accusations with regard to another point, in addition to the continuing battles in Afghanistan. But I will complete this answer by saying that we have no indication whether somebody has been toying with such ideas in Moscow.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, I believe that the people here in the Federal Republic, and those not only here but throughout the entire Western world, have been trembling somewhat, and still are, with regard to whether everything will work out smoothly. Does the chancellor also tremble?

[Answer] Trembling is not the right word. But, Mr Donat, I have certainly observed with profound interest--together with millions of people in the entire world, not only in the West but also in the East--how this domestic political conflict developed in Poland, and how it might be solved through coming to terms. You just said that actually the process has not yet ended, and that is certainly true. It is now a matter of putting the mutual agreement into practice. That will work quickly with regard to some points of the agreement, and more time will be needed for others. The economic points, for example, will require much time, and they will require external help. The People's Republic of Poland would need a great deal of time to implement them on its own, with external help it will work somewhat more quickly.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, prior to touching on the economic side, such as credits, may I ask a question with a view to the forthcoming CSCE meeting? Can you imagine a new CSCE conference taking place if the Polish path toward reform is disrupted or even turned back by force?

[Schmidt] The four letters of this key word stand for Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. The first great conference in this field took place 5 years ago in Helsinki. Diplomatic preparations and negotiations for that conference took several years. Then there was a followup conference in Belgrade. Now there will be another in Madrid this fall. The followup conferences are supposed to handle the problem of the extent to which the intentions agreed on in Helsinki have been implemented and what

I would prefer not to answer your very hypothetical question on how the Madrid conference might proceed if there should be domestic political difficulties in one of the states involved and should these lead to the application of force. One should not answer hypothetic questions in politics, particularly if they involve another state.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, I have a question that is not of a hypothetical nature because the Soviet Union obviously seems to have taken a position on this conference. One reads and hears that if it were up to the Soviet Union only the security issue would play a role. Would that fit into the title: Security and Cooperation? Can one simply leave out other issues such as Afghanistan, for example, concentrating the conference only on the issue of security?

[Answer] It is called the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. There are many significant problems in the world, problems also involving conflicts, there are terrible events, most critical developments in many parts of the world that do not belong to the CSCE issues involving Europe. But within Europe it cannot deal only with security. It must involve all three so-called baskets of the joint final statement of Helsinki.

The expression "baskets" is somewhat confusing. There are three major chapters: a first chapter dealing with a number of principles, and further chapters dealing with cooperation and security. One cannot very well pick out only those issues pertaining to security, leaving everything else aside. That would be an impermissible curtailment of intentions jointly signed in Helsinki, something we would in no case tolerate. But I must also stress that European security issues must naturally play a great role in Madrid. We are interested in their playing a great role there.

[Question] Let us come to the key topic of economic assistance and credits. You advocated credits for Poland prior to the strikes, and now, after the strikes, you support them even more. You are in agreement with the Western alliance. Assuming that the outcome of the strikes had been different and the agreements remained just paper, would you still think what you thought before about credits, or--because you do not like hypothetical questions--to put it somewhat more basically: Is there a connection between economic assistance and political developments in the relevant countries?

[Answer] There is no such link on principle. We grant development aid to a relatively small number of developing countries which have democratic systems such as we are accustomed to in Western Europe; we also grant development aid to states with forms of government which one might call leftist radical. We grant development aid without intruding into the internal affairs of other states. The principle of nonintrusion into internal conditions is one of the major principles, not only of international law, but also one of the major principles that needs to be heeded if the existence of states together is to be peaceful.

Now as far as the credit to Poland is concerned, it is true--and I have made some efforts toward this end in the past few months--that a number of private banks in the Federal Republic, though not only here but also in North America and elsewhere in the world, are coming to the aid of the Polish national economy with commercial credits, that is to say with credits at a relatively high interest rate, at market rates. This is not the only instance in which we are helping. There are credits to other states which, though no longer developing countries, require the credit nevertheless. This is true for East and West alike. We are interested in seeing the Polish national economy's well-being. The better off the Poles are, the lesser the danger of a foreign policy aggravation.

You said that I advocate credits even more after Gdansk, Mr Donat. This is not quite correct. I recommended these very high credits by a number of private German banks both before and after, and I defended them against critical attacks from the ranks of the CDU/CSU, attacks which basically made conditions of what you have just posed in the way of a question.

They--and Mr Strauss has done so just recently--wanted to make it a condition that we grant credits only in the event of good behavior, whatever this may mean in the view of the CSU. I am strictly against this stance, and in that respect I am in full harmony with the U.S. President. After all, the CSU chancellor candidate makes a point of being in harmony with Mr Carter everywhere. He should take a close look at what Mr Carter has said about this topic.

[Question] You mentioned Strauss, Mr Chancellor. I believe that in one point Strauss does articulate the opinion of many people, namely, in the anxiety that Poland might become a bottomless it because of its economic system. What makes you feel that this, or any Western economic said will really nurse the Polish economy back to health?

[Answer] I do not at all believe that credits by German banks could put the Polish national economy back on its feet. Nor can they put the national economies of other states back on their feet; they are always just contributions. The actual efforts must be made in the various states themselves and by the various peoples themselves and by the governments involved. Nor can we nurse the national economy of developing country x, y or z in Asia, Africa or Latin America back to its feet. But we do advocate development aid, of course, and we grant it, too, even though this means sacrifices for us. We could just as well promote social housing construction at home more strongly if we granted less development aid. But we are morally and politically obligated to do something. The strong must help the weak; but the strong cannot nurse the weak back to health, as you just put it.

[Question] A fundamental question that has cropped up again in connection with all these hopes for a liberalization or democratization--or reforms at any rate--in Poland is: Can a communist regime be reformed at all along the lines of democracy?

[Answer] This is a philosophical question which the German chancellor in 1980 should not answer with any concrete reference to Poland. The German Federal Government, and this should apply also to other leading politicians, should be very reserved even with respect to mere verbal interference, mere journalistic interference, into the internal processes of other countries. We must not, however, overlook the fact that the developments that have now been concluded in Poland and that have led to agreements are on the general line of what was agreed on in Helsinki.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, had you known how things would turn out in Poland, would you have met with Mr Honecker after all?

[Answer] You can never tell in advance how things might turn out. We cannot even know now what further developments in Eastern Europe will be like. But had I had an absolute certainty, which does not exist, I would probably not have cancelled the meeting with Mr. Honecker. But you cannot be certain even now. You know perhaps that I had envisaged the meeting for the spring of 1980 and that it had to be postponed for reasons I was not responsible for but because of the serious impairment of the international climate resulting from Afghanistan.

In the summer of 1980, too, the international climate was impaired, only this time this impairment did not emanate from Afghanistan. I believe that everybody in the GDR as well as in the Federal Republic understood that. What was incomprehensible, however, was the discordant attitude of some politicians in our own country who, to begin with, partially were for and partially against this meeting, partially they themselves wanted to participate in it, partially they objected to it and at the same time published a large catalogue of demands which was supposed to be not only negotiated but also enforced on that occasion.

One can not exaggerate all this. The dialogue between East and West in difficult world situations is already of great value in itself. If beyond that anything of a positive nature can be agreed on, all the better. I am quite sure that when Mr Honecker and I meet something positive will be agreed. The chancellor at this time cannot and must not participate in unleashing a situation which might possibly contribute to the aggravation of internal tensions in the Warsaw Pact area, because internal tensions there may very [Question] With regard to the value of dialogue per se and positive agreements, Berlin's governing mayor has advocated the view that such a Schmidt-Honecker dialogue must not necessarily be linked with a stopover in the GDR province. Do you share this view?

[Answer] I do not wish to comment on this at the moment. This had been planned at the time, in the spring of 1980, and it had also been planned for the summer. There is no call for speculating on it now. After all, I will not go there to arouse great emotions. Some of my political adversaries at home have said that the GDR leadership prevents friendly calls to me by the GDR citizens there. In reality this is not the issue involved. My viewpoint was that I wanted very much to go to a church in a town over there, on the other side, to make the GDR citizens as well as the citizens of the Federal Republic a bit more aware of the common German culture. I definitely would wish to do that again at the next opportunity.

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON POLAND, BUNDESWEHR

DW081042 Baden Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1045 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Reporter Von der Tann interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher--date, place not given; recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] There has been a more or less surprising change of government in Poland. What are the implications for the future policy of the People's Republic of Poland? What do you think?

[Answer] The People's Republic of Poland is passing through a very difficult period of its development. That should be reason enough for every state to maintain great restraint in commenting on these developments. But one ought to look for possibilities to help the People's Republic of Poland solve its material and economic problems. This policy is followed by the Federal Government and by the allied states. We realize that help in solving material problems also means helping the people in Poland. I assume that the foreign policy of the People's Republic of Poland will not be affected by the current events.

[Question] Mr Strauss said recently on television that the Soviet Union would certainly have invaded Poland if there were not the handicap of Afghanistan and if, secondly, it did not have to exhibit concern for the elections in the Federal Republic and the United States, concern that an invasion would have meant Mr Reagan's and Mr Strauss' coming to power. What do you say to that?

[Answer] First of all I want to say that the responsible attitude of the strikers in Poland, the responsible attitude of the Catholic Church in Poland and the efforts of the Polish leadership aimed at achieving understanding certainly have greatly contributed to developments in the People's Republic of Poland taking shape in the form we have observed. Proper reserve with regard to developments in the People's Republic of Poland also includes philosophical discussions about whether other countries should become involved or not, and why or why not.

I believe that our restraint ought to influence all states of the world to maintain restraint in line with international law and in line with the commitments of the Helsinki Final Act. Accusations against Germany, however, saying that we attempted to interfere are absolutely unfounded. They must be strictly rejected. Those who voice these accusations ought to realize that by doing so they are contributing to a poisoning of the political climate in Europe.

[Question] Mr Strauss also said the other day that the first thing he would do if he became chancellor would be to make a trip to the United States in order to restore order in U.S.-European relations at long last. Do you think something needs to be put back into order here?

[Answer] Mr Strauss talks quite a lot these days, and we need not weigh every single word. U.S.-European relations and the U.S.-German relationship are in order. They are based on mutual confidence and on the common awareness that we belong together, that we can retain our freedom only together and that we are allied in NATO, the Western alliance, on the basis of common values. NATO is more than just a military alliance of the old variety.

When I was in Washington on Tuesday of last week I found impressive confirmation again that we are in full consensus with the U.S. Government in assessment of all important international issues. This is also reflected in the joint statement issued by the U.S. secretary of state and myself. If Mr Strauss wants to establish good relations with the United States--and I have no doubt that he does just as we do--then this would mean that the Union parties would have to change their foreign policy approach in essential issues because at the moment the CDU/CSU is in an absolutely isolated position with respect to important foreign policy matters, not only in the European Community but also in the Western alliance. This is particularly true for East-West relations.

[Question] What is your party's relationship with the Bundeswehr? A state of affairs seems to be emerging lately where our country is having a hard time with its soldiers.

[Answer] I do not have the impression that the state is having a hard time with its soldiers, nor do I have the impression that the vast majority of the citizens of our country is having a hard time with our soldiers. It is my solid impression that small, militant and to a considerable extent very militant groups exist which intend to undermine the relationship of confidence between the Bundeswehr and the public, and which plan on disturbing the Bundeswehr in the fulfillment of its mission. They are aware that this Bundeswehr is making an essential contribution to the common security of the allies. Consequently it is necessary for the political parties not to leave any doubt about their positions on our Bundeswehr.

The Bundeswehr is part of our democratic state. Under the constitution it is its mission to contribute to the safeguarding of peace. Service in the Bundeswehr is service for safeguarding peace. Those who serve in the Bundeswehr are our brothers and sons, our neighbors, our colleagues. They are citizens in uniform. They are entitled to our recognition, and they deserve our refraining from entertaining an attitude toward the Bundeswehr along the lines of the motto: If you see me, pretend not to know me. He who wants to push the Bundeswehr behind the barrack gates and who believes he has to keep the Bundeswehr out of sight exhibits a disturbed relationship with one of the institutions of a democratic state. What the Bundeswehr needs, on the contrary, is publicity. It is at the center of our democratic life, and we will not allow it to be slandered. Democrats must consider an attack against the Bundeswehr an attack against themselves.

DKP'S MIES ASSURES POLISH LEADERS OF PARTY'S SOLIDARITY

LD081150 Hamburg DPA in German 1054 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 8 Sep (DPA)--DKP Chairman Herbert Mies has assured the new Polish leadership that the "West German Communists are in firm solidarity with the struggle of the Polish communists for the further strengthening of socialist society." This was stated by the DKP chairman to journalists when he introduced his party's election appeal. Mies would not comment on the Polish worker's demand for free trade unions.

The parties represented in the Bundestag who proclaimed their sympathy with the Polish workers now have to answer for their attitude on the demands of working people in the Federal Republic.

PRESS EXAMINES CHANGES IN POLISH LEADERSHIP

DW081112 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Press review on Polish developments, Gierek replacement]

[Text] FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU writes about developments in Poland: Just 2 weeks after the first reshuffles in the Polish political leadership, it was the turn of Edward Gierek, the chairman of the Polish United Workers Party. His successor's career seems to have been sensational. Stefan Olszowski, who was generally believed to be the rising star on the dark Polish party sky, did not become party chief. The rather unknown Stanislaw Kania became the successor to Gierek. So far he has been responsible in the Politburo and the Central Committee Secretariat for domestic policy and thus for the security apparatus. The paper goes on to say: The selection of Kania looks like a guarantee that everything will be handled so that power will not fully slip from the hands of the party, even if the reform promises are fulfilled only in part. A party chief who has experience in handling the security apparatus must seem much more acceptable to the traditionalists in Moscow than an ideological reform prattler.

KIELER NACHRICHTEN writes: It was now the turn of the most responsible person during the Gierek era, the chief of the Polish Communist Party himself, the one who set the guidelines of Polish policy for a decade: Edward Gierek. It would have been hard to understand if he had politically survived the strike wave which reached from the Baltic Sea to Upper Silesia. Comparisons with his predecessor Gomulka offer themselves: He too became a victim of a strike by his compatriots, but Gierek could after all point out the advantage of not having fired at the strikers. But because he was unwilling to accept the consequences voluntarily, he was deprived of power, however, under less than glorious circumstances. His poor health has been calmly exploited to send him to the political old age home. This is how it works in the East bloc, quickly and heartlessly.

RHEINISCHE POST of Duesseldorf has the following to say: The ice-cold way in which the ailing party chief was removed, without a word of gratitude and without any hesitation, demonstrates the true reason for the change of power in Poland. Gierek, who started out in 1970 with laurels already given in advance, and who succeeded the unfortunate and dull Gomulka, has now failed just like his predecessor. He completely lost his early capital, namely, the confidence of many Poles in the Silesian miner's unused abilities. Even the last minute sacrifice of his closest aides could no longer save Gierek. From a Soviet point of view he had become too much of a danger to the entire regime. RHEINISCHE POST concludes: Basically it almost does not matter whether Kania, Olszowski or somebody else is at the helm in Warsaw. Poland just seems to be the latest example of the paralyzing effect which socialism being put into practice has on the people.

AUSBURGER ALLGEMEINE voices the following comment: In the past few days the threats to the Polish leadership from the Soviet capital became plainly audible. The dissolution of the existing power structures was to be halted; it was also clearly shown that the will for reforms needed to be res ricted on the Vistula as well. Viewed from this angle Gierek's secret meetings with Soviet Politburo member and intimate Brezhnev friend Kirilenko in the past several days gain special significance. It almost looks as though Gierek offered himself to the Russians as a sacrifice to forestall intervention by the Soviet power, AUGSBURGER ALLGEMEINE believes. On the other hand, we cannot rule out the possibility that during his meeting with the Kremlin emissary he negotiated his capitulation with the objective of lifting an orthodox successor to the top of the Communist Party, thus preventing a complete victory for the reformers.

Let us now turn to FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE. We quote: Moscow would like to see Poland governed now with a firm but also dexterous hand. The life and party career of the new boss, Kania, as well as his role during the weeks of strikes indicate such a desire. Gierek's successor knows how to handle the security apparatus, but he also seems to have an educated sense for how to avoid touching the Polish nation's sore spots just now. The fact that he is a colorless man can only enhance Moscow's sympathies for him: Party leaders who behaved a bit like popular tribunes at the beginning of their eras have come to a bitter end in land twice already.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN views the situation as follows: The reshuffle at the Polish party top shows how a new power nucleus has formed in which the followers of a careful reform course have the clear majority. The new party chief, Kania, may be unknown in the West; in the Polish party apparatus and last but not least in Moscow, however, he enjoys considerable prestige as a man who operates carefully and who is reliable. His appointment means, besides, that Gierek's recall, which was surely put into effect for reasons other than only poor health, met with the full approval of the security and military apparatus. MANNHEIMER MORGEN continues by saying: After Bierut, Ochab, Gomulka, and Gierek, Kania is Poland's fifth party boss since the communist seizure of power. His destiny depends on two factors: It is important to establish a breathing spell and to devise a convincing reform program. Only in this way can the Poles, who have often been disappointed in their hopes, be persuaded to cooperate actively.

Now a glance at SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG, which argues as follows: Gierek's replacement can be explained by Poland's internal conditions as well as by the logic of communist use of power. And yet the role which Moscow played in the process cannot be overlooked. What had to be granted to the strikers is in Soviet eyes quite close to counterrevolution. Viewed from Moscow's angle these concessions are objectionable because they might induce the workers in other East bloc countries, too, to start something similar. But the Kremlin leaders cannot allow that, for it would be tantamount to admitting that their system has actually been outrun by social reality. It would mean that the masses would have denied the communist party the leading role it claims.

GENSCHER WELCOMES FORTHCOMING MUSKIE-GROMYKO MEETING

LD081346 Hamburg DPA in German 1058 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn, 8 Sep (DPA)--Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister, has welcomed the forthcoming meeting between Foreign Ministers Edmund Muskie and Andrey Gromyko as a sign that two great powers, the United and the USSR, are showing continuing willingness to talk. According to FDP sources, Genscher, speaking today to the FDP Presidium, recalled the joint declaration which he and Muskie made on 26 August on negotiations on medium-range missiles. The hope expressed then for early preliminary talks has now been confirmed. The Federal Republic, which played an essential role in bringing about NATO's two-part resolution--the decision on "counterarming" with medium-range missiles and the offer of negotiations to the East to limit such weapons--is interested in achieving concrete negotiations on medium-range missiles.

DER SPIEGEL REPORTS NEW PLANS ON SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING

DW091009 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 8 Sep 80 p 14

[Text] The inter-German meeting between Helmut Schmidt and Erich Honecker is planned to be held before the end of this year in compliance with the latter's wish. Even though Honecker last Friday had the statement disseminated by the official news agency ADN that an "early selection of a new visiting date" should not be anticipated, he conveyed to the chancellor via internal channels the message that Schmidt will be welcome in December.

Honecker wishes to reschedule the meeting, which had been postponed because of the strikes in Poland, that early because the SED leadership does not rule out the possibility of new unrest in Poland next year. Honecker is afraid, besides, that the Soviets, having instructed the GDR last week to deliver foodstuffs to Poland, might obligate East Berlin to grant foreign exchange aid to Warsaw. This might worsen the foreign exchange situation, and thus the economic situation, of the GDR. This is why the chairman of the State Council plans to strengthen the economic cooperation with the Federal Republic at the summit before Christmas and to offer, in return, easing travel restrictions for those East Germans who have relatives in the West. In this way it would be possible to satisfy his own citizens who had already attached considerable expectations to the abortive conference at Werbellinsee in August.

The planned meeting place will be the small island of Vilm, just off Ruegen Island, on which the SED elite has been spending its summer vacations for years in total privacy. There are 20 villas with 12 rooms each. Besides, the GDR Government guesthouse is located there. The selection of the isolated island indicates the SED chief Honecker would like to forego any specutacular trimmings for his meeting with the Bonn chancellor and to place the emphasis on the private discussions.

PRESS ON PRAVDA ATTACKS CONCERNING QUADRIPARTITE AGREEMENT

DW051055 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Press review on PRAVDA attacks against FRG]

[Text] MANNHEIMER MORGEN comments: The PRAVDA attacks because of an alleged violation of the Quadripartite Agreement and the warning against testing its limits must greatly surprise everybody observing the Federal Government's extremely careful adherence to treaties. The 9th anniversary of the signing of that agreement is not much of a jubliee warranting such a basic attack. There must be some fundamental reason for PRAVDA mentioning dangerous gambling in connection with Berlin, warning against testing it to its limits, because not only Bonn but its Western allies as well are being attacked. It seems obvious that one ought to search for a connection here with the Soviet criticism of alleged interference of Western press organs and politicians in developments in Poland. The SED press has meanwhile joined these attacks. It cannot be ruled out that Moscow wanted to remind the West of the fact that it is always in a position to use Berlin as a lever to counteract detente policy effects the East bloc does not like.

GENERAL-ANZEIGER of Bonn states: A few days prior to the beginning of the East bloc maneuver "Comradeship in Arms"--Marshal Kulikov, the Soviet commander in chief of the Pact arrived yesterday in the GDR to take part in it--the verbal missile strike from East Berlin could well be interpreted as propagandistic preparatory fire for an intervention in Poland. More likely, however, is the assumption that the nervous leadership wants to follow the old pattern of holding the so-called class enemy responsible for the difficulties in their own camp, and the Federal Republic has always been good for that.

NORD-WEST ZEITUNG of Oldenburg writes about Federal Foreign Minister Genscher's reaction to the PRAVDA attack: On Thursday Hans-Dietrich Genscher opened the annual congress of the Liberal International in the Berlin Reichstag building by giving a basic speech. In this way the federal foreign minister could give an answer right away. He did it with dignity, without sharpness, by holding up the banner of detente policy. He stated that cooperation with the GDR will be continued persistently, the Quadripartite Agreement on the basis of the Brandt-Schmidt-Brezhnev clause will be strictly adhered to and fully applied, and therefore nobody should willfully construe violations of this agreement.

That is a rather mild reproach. Genscher actually should have said that the Soviet Union constantly tries to misinterpret the Berlin agreement and that it is obviously unwilling to adhere to the Berlin clause. If somebody is poisoning something here, it is Moscow.

SCHMIDT ADDRESSES OPENING OF WORLD ENERGY CONFERENCE

LD081316 Hamburg DPA in German 0922 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] Munich, 8 Sep (DPA)--Apart from the safeguarding of peace, energy is the big topic of our era, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt stated today in Munich at the opening of the World Energy Conference. Speaking to some 5,000 participants and guests from 64 countries and in the presence of Federal President Karl Carstens, Schmidt said that a sufficient energy supply is a decisive element in maintaining peace. Bavarian Minister-President Franz Josef Strauss referred in his welcoming speech on the conference's theme "energy for our world" to the "powerful political explosive" hidden behind this.

Federal Chancellor Schmidt deems it economically wrong for all the national economies of the world to rely solely or mainly on a single energy source: yesterday on coal, today on oil and gas, tomorrow on nuclear energy. The Federal Government here acknowledges its general responsibility and has long pursued the plan of providing a wide energy choice.

Schmidt supported [words indistinct] energy dialogue between producer and consumer countries and backed the Brandt Commission's proposal for a representative dialogue between North and South. The chancellor called on the OPEC states and the industrial states of the East bloc to give more development aid and help in particular those countries particularly badly hit by oil price rises. Schmidt called on the conference to (?take into consideration) the environmental problems arising from the burning of solid fuels. (?He) shared the worries about possible dangers to the earth's climate. On the question of nuclear energy, Schmidt said that no one should today pretend that mankind's nuclear innocence can be restored. "That has been finished for some decades." But no one should maintain that complete reliance on nuclear energy will free us of all worries.

To conclude his speech Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt also referred to nuclear arming. He gave an assurance that Germany will remain loyal to its obligation not to develop and possess any nuclear weapons. The nonproliferation treaty signed at the same time, however, also includes the "vested right" to unimpeded peaceful use of nuclear energy. The chancellor lamented the fact that there have recently been tendencies toward wanting to hinder Germany in this. He added: "On the other hand, the great powers who in this treaty also undertook to limit arms have for their part in no way fulfilled this obligation."

GENSCHER DESCRIBES NORTH-SOUTH PROBLEM

DW051047 Cologne DEUTSCHE WELLE in German to Europe 0930 GMT 4 Sep 80

[Hans-Juergen Pickert interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Berlin--date not given; recorded]

[Text] [Question] The FDP's Friedrich Naumann Foundation, Mr Minister, has just held a symposium in Berlin on North-South issues. The main topic of the Liberal International conference which opened this Thursday likewise addresses North-South problems. Do the North-South problems already have greater significance for mankinds future than the ideological conflict between East and West?

[Answer] No doubt the solution of the North-South problem, the elimination of the difference in living conditions between the states of the southern hemisphere and those of the north have become an issue of survival and a question of securing peace. For this reason this problem must be carried much more strongly into the public awareness of our states. This does not make the East-West antagonism lose any of its importance; but at this meeting we are trying to achieve that this West-East antagonism not be transplanted to the Third World, which would make the situation there even more complicated.

[Question] Couldn't it be, conversely, that the North-South problems merge with the East-West antagonism which already is nearly traditional? What I have in mind is Afghanistan, Africa, and Latin America.

[Answer] All I can say about that is that the industrial states of the North, regardless of whether they are market-economy industrial states or socialist states, are jointly obligated to help the South in its development. And in that respect the socialist states definitely have to make up for a lot of lost ground. The fact that the Federal Republic of Germany is doing more in public development aid than all communist industrial states together is telling its own tale. This is why we advocate the view that the United Nations set up a register which will provide information about development aid per capita of their population granted by individual countries. At the same time this register is to show what each country spends per capita on armaments for our efforts for disarmament and arms control are supposed to mitigate the dangers of conflict and at the same time contribute toward better possibilities of helping the states of the Third World.

What we must avoid in any event is transposing conflicts of the North, that is to say East-West conflicts, to the South. The example of Afghanistan which you mentioned is of significance in an entirely different way. It shows that Soviet policy increasingly becomes at odds with the interests of the states of the Third World, who do not wish to see their independence and freedom again jeopardized which they have just won. And in this respect especially the nonaligned movement harbors great worries about this expansionist policy of the Soviet Union.

[Question] Granted an antagonism between the Soviet Union and some countries of the Third World, yet, on the other hand, aren't we driving some peoples of Asia, Africa, and some day surely also of Latin America into the Soviets' embrace if we insist on extending our liberal principles to these countries whenever a young national state is taking its initial steps toward adequate nourishment on a socialist course? Couldn't we be a bit more tolerant than we have been at times?

[Answer] It is my fundamental view that the relationship between the industrial states and the states of the Third World must be a relationship of partnership, of equal rights. This includes both sides respecting the internal order the other partner wishes to have for himself, his economic, political, and social system. We do not want to export our state and social system. We offer it as a model, but I would consider it a totally erroneous policy should Western states try to impose their systems on states of the Third World. The problems which the Soviet Union has with the states of the Third World are attributable to the very fact that it makes this mistake over and over again.

[Question] Mr Minister, an absolutely topical question: The East Berlin SED party paper NEUES DEUTSCHLAND this Thursday has joined the concert of the Soviet media in attacking the West massively with the contention that the West intrudes in Polish affairs. What significance do you attach to such attacks? Must we reckon with a Moscow intervention along the lines of the Brezhnev doctrine of limited sovereignty of communist states and of the so-called proletarian internationalism after all? And what will happen to detente in such a case? A bundle of questions, Mr Minister.

[Answer] We have been advocating the view from the outset that the Polish people and the Polish leadership must solve the country's problems on their own and that nobody has a right to intrude in Poland's internal affairs. The Federal Government has consistently adhered to this stance, which is also the reason why we are warning everybody to be very careful in defining their position on the events in Poland, because we see the efforts being made there to overcome recognized problems through political solutions. It is not surprising that Germans in particular sympathize with the events in Poland, for Germans and Poles are linked with each other through a history with many ups and downs and, unfortunately, also through many tragic phases- This is why we Germans hope most warmly for the Polish people that the problems can be solved just as all sides in Poland obviously are trying to solve them. Above all I would like to pay tribute to the responsible attitude of the Catholic Church. We will not change anything in our reserved attitude, in our careful approach, and not even polemics will lure us out of this reserve.

EXPERTS REPORTED TO DOUBT EFFICIENCY OF NEW TANK

DW081303 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 1 Sep 80 p 30

[Text] Officers and technicians have voiced doubts about the combat readiness of the Leopard 2 combat tank. Design faults jeopardize the safety of the soldiers. Praise had been unanimous. With this tank the Germany Army "has made a clear leap ahead," Army Inspector Lt Gen Hans Poeppel announced late last year when the first Leopard 2 tank was delivered in Munich. "We are in the lead."

But technicians and soldiers are skeptical. The Leopard 2, praised by experts as "the world's best combat tank" even prior to its introduction in the armed forces, shows such serious shortcomings that the mission readiness of this weapons system seems to be impaired.

The reason is that the noise level to which the tank soldiers are exposed in the moving Leopard 2 is above 130 decibels at a speed of just 30 kilometers per hour, and this also is above the threshold of pain. Bundeswehr procurement engineer Wachs in a confidential memorandum (File No: BWB-FE IV 7 H 2) reported the Leopard's noise level to his superiors as early as the end of last year. Wachs: "The noise burden is intolerable."

So far nothing has changed about the noise. There is still so much noise inside the Leopard 2 that State Secretary Andreas von Buelow had to admit "difficulties in voice communications" when asked. In the opinion of the state secretary the burdens are "within tolerable limits," however. CDU Deputy Carl Damm, member of the Bonn defense committee, has a different opinion about the miracle tank. He considers the tank clamor so objectionable that he speaks of a "definite scandal" in a letter to Army Inspector Poeppel. The deputy wrote that the Leopard is "not usable" without "suitable head protection," and he suggested that the tank crew be issued helmets with built-in two-way radio facilities such as have been in use for years in U.S. and Soviet tanks.

Meanwhile criticism against the expensive vehicle has also been forthcoming from the technicians of the manufacturing corporation Kraus-Maffei and the soldiers of the TNKA training brigade in Munster.

An increasing number of shortcomings have cropped up which delay the planned date for turning the tank over to the troops. Thus, the track, one of the causes of the noise trouble, has to be redesigned; the newly developed combustible grenade cartridges often block the barrel lock of the gun; the barrel must cool down for several hours after the firing of 8 to 12 rounds before exact hits can be scored again; the supply of spare parts and ammunition does not work smoothly.

Experienced military men such as Maj Gen Fritz Birnstiel, ex-general of the combat troops in the Office of the Army, had foreseen in good time the organizational and technical problems. Years ago they had warned the Defense Ministry against an overly hasty introduction of the complicated weapons system--but to no avail.

Instead the concert between the arms lobby and the top army leadership proceeded as before: Parliament had already allocated the funds, industry was waiting for subsequent orders for Leopard 1, and the Bundeswehr leadership once again recalled the allegedly increasing tank threat from the East in order to push the Leopard 2 tank project politically.

To obtain as many of the new tanks as possible as quickly as possible, Hardthoehe even consciously waived a Leopard 2 pilot series; after all, in the case of Leopard 1 as many as 50 tanks had been tested and improved prior to the main series.

The result of the dubious success in achieving speed [of production]--is that the shortcomings must now be eliminated laboriously during assembly-line production and the design must be revised on the current model. Besides, the entire spare parts and supply system must be set up and organized afterwards.

What remains uncertain is how much more expensive the Leopard will be once the noise in the turret and the heat in the barrel have been eliminated. The price to date had been steep enough: DM4 million per unit.

COLUMNIST VIEWS CHANGES IN NUCLEAR ARMS POLICY

DW080910 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 6 Sep 80 p 10

[Adelbert Weinstein article: "Will War Become Conceivable Again?"]

[Text] Brussels, September--Strategy is a dynamic concept. In the age of revolutionary technological developments the industrial nations must constantly adapt their defense planning to new situations. The Americans have done this lately with the formulation of the so-called Directive 59. This initiative has created unrest. The allies have asked with concern whether nuclear arms still are political weapons for the Americans. The Soviets, who were still uncertain in their assessment, appeared to be shocked. They insinuate that the Pentagon is preparing for nuclear war. The reaction was not positive in America either. Intellectuals voiced moral reservations. What has led to such a confusion of mind and spirit? Directive 59 does not consider the military strength of the atom as merely a psssive element in the strategy of deterrence. According to it nuclear arms can be used selectively and become active means of warfare.

This characterization of American nuclear strategy calls for explanation. What seems to be a spiritual change in the American way of thinking is first of all the natural result of technological development. When the atom was introduced a generation ago into military strategy, soldiers and politicians were helplessly faced with the phenomenon of apocalyptical destructive strength. When the analysts were handed the problem, they realized that it was impossible to philosophically handle the atomic dimension. Karl Jaspers once said that this would have called for another kind of man. So nuclear strategy has since been handled as a technical problem, to be solved like a mathematical problem.

Nuclear planning ran through several phases of interpretations of strength, such as super artillery, "massive retaliation," as well as the theory of "saturated destruction." But basically we are still not in command of the atom today. Nobody knows how to ride the atomic tiger. Obsessed by technology, all nuclear planners followed every technical innovation in nuclear arms systems with technical refinements.

Under McNamara it was held that one needed just as many nuclear arms on each side as was necessary for passive deterrence. Nuclear arms were clearly political arms. It was considered in the seventies that the global balance of power can be maintained only if nuclear strength becomes an active means fof policy. The term political weapon had become more widespread in connection with the atom. Under James Schlesinger a change in the American nuclear way of thinking took place. Schlesinger touched on the taboo that nuclear arms were solely political instruments. Directive 59 days now that atomic strength is an element that can be used selectively for the destruction of the enemy's attack weapons.

What effected the change was technical progress. Today it is possible to produce precision weapons which, covering a long range, can hit pinpointed targets thousands of kilometers away. It is possible to threaten the adversary with smashing his missile bases. This would thus deprive him of his offensive weapons and would not make his cities and industrial centers the targets of deterrence strategy. This must not be seen in a negative way. A U.S. president will much rather allow a nuclear attack on military objects than on human settlements. The U.S. deterrence threat becomes more credible, at least partially. This is the advantage which Directive 59 intends to exploit.

Naturally this simplification contains but half the truth. During the past 30 years nuclear strategy has remained a confusing complex of contradictory theories and practices. The selective strike is one option in many. The thousands of nuclear weapons hold hundreds of variations in store for bringing about chaos on the American and Russian side alike. Moreover, the planning concepts of the early nuclear era have not been rendered obsolete. The arms arsenal allows massive retaliation. It makes possible the annihilation of entire provinces. If used it does not rule out the mutual suicide of the giants. But what can be done now is to take a limited selection of targets without an escalation inevitably following, an escalation which either a military or a political leadership could hardly halt. All sides are put into a position of limiting their nuclear target planning: the Soviets, for example, with their SS-20; the Americans in the near future with the improved Trident missiles; NATO perhaps with the Pershing II and the cruise missiles at some point. All these weapons are accurate. They can describe a small circle of destruction. They "isolate" the military objects from the civilian targets.

It is uncertain whether the perfection of the technical systems will exert a philosophical influence on deterrence strategy as well. Granted, the atom bomb still wields mythical force. The hope is justified that the governments will continue shrinking back from taking the step into the unknown dimension of nuclear war. But it no longer holds true that there could not be any winner in nuclear war. It would depend on what kind of nuclear war could be waged; whoever strikes first with precision weapons and smashes the enemy's offensive weapons does have the chance to win.

Besides, the nuclear arsenals are filled to more than their capacity. The more perfect the systems become the more the inclination may grow to smash a Gordian knot in politics the nuclear way. World War II tolled 40 million lives. Selective nuclear war would not demand this sacrifice. Hence would war be conceivable again to an unscrupulous statesman? The answer will be different for Western governments than it will be for dictatorships. The free world is under the merciless control of public opinion. But who keeps tabs on the communist rulers?

GISCARD REPORTEDLY POSTPONES VISIT TO POLAND

LD090854 Hamburg DPA in German 0811 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Excerpts] Paris, 9 Sep (DPA)--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing has dropped his planned visit to Poland at the end of this month, following Edward Gierek's ouster. The Elysee Palace told DPA today in response to an inquiry that the visit, which has still not been announced officially, would certainly not take place at the planned time.

According to the Elysee spokesman, a visit to Poland by Giscard remains a possibility. However, in Paris it is expected that Giscard, also on account of the impending French presidential election campaign, wants to wait until the attitude of the new leadership and further developments in Poland can be clearly identified.

EGYPT'S MUBARAK MEETS WITH GISCARD ON MIDEAST ISSUES

NC081132 Paris AFP in English 1123 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] Paris, 8 Sep (AFP)--A consensus with Israel on Jerusalem is a necessary preliminary to a three-way United States-Egypt-Israel summit on Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank, Egyptian Vice-President Husni Mubarak said here today.

Speaking at the close of an hour-and-a-quarter meeting with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, General Mubarak described the status of Jerusalem as a crucial point of the autonomy issue.

Egypt broke off autonomy negotiations with Israel early last month after the Israeli Knesset (parliament) declared the city, which is considered holy by Jews, Muslims and Christians, the "external and indivisible" capital of Israel.

Defines Egyptian Position

NC081650 Paris AFP in English 1637 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] Paris, 8 Sep (AFP)--Egyptian Vice-President Husni Mubarak saw French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing today in the context of a new initiative on the part of France and her eight partners in the European Economic Community to break the deadlock in Middle East crisis.

Egyptian sources indicated here that the vice-president was gratified to have been consulted the same as all other parties to the long lingering conflict. The Arab world has been boycotting Egypt ever since its Camp David agreement with Israel nearly 2 years ago on a bilateral negotiation.

Mr Mubarak, a general, arrived here yesterday for a 4-day visit on the fourth stopover of a European tour that included Rome, London and Bonn and is to be followed as of Wednesday by Vienna and Bucharest.

Upon emerging from the Elysee Palace after a 90-minute talk with the French president, Mr. Mubarak restated the two basic tenets of the Egyptian policy line. These were that the key question in negotiations with Israel remains Jerusalem, and that the U.S.-sponsored Camp David agreements launched a diplomatic process deserving to be pursued.

About Jerusalem, the Egyptian official declared it represented "a primordial aspect of (Palestinian) autonomy talks" because it was "an integral part of the Jordan West Bank."

Mr. Mubarak was apparently referring to the eastern Arab part of the Holy City, because he went on to say that it "interests 800 million Moslems and 1,000 million Christians because of its sacred character--it does not concern the Jews."

The Egyptian aide added that when he saw Pope John Paul II in Rome recently the pontiff expressed "a religious view" of the Jerusalem issue where the Israelis have "a political concept."

Turning to the Camp David procedure, Mr. Mubarak underlined the crucial importance of American participation in the negotiation, describing it as "necessary" if a way was to be found out of the current impasse. He thus indicated a measure of hope in the effectiveness of the summit meeting between President Jimmy Carter, Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat and Israeli Premier Menachem Begin tentatively scheduled [words indistinct].

Mr. Mubarak was extremely vague about the hypothetical European Mideast initiative, contenting himself to say it was an "important" project.

L'HUMANITE'S LEROY INTERVIEWED ON POLISH EVENTS

LD081258 Paris Domestic Service in French 0550 GMT 8 Sep 80

["Let's Talk Straight" studio discussion with moderator Joseph Paletou and Roland Leroy, member of the French Communist Party Politburo and director of L'HUMANITE--live]

[Excerpt] [Question] The Polish crisis, the Gdansk strikes, the working class revolt will have cost the Polish leaders dearly. Following the premier, it is now the turn of the first secretary of the Polish Communist Party, Mr Gierek, himself to stand aside. Don't you consider it an abberation that there could have been a conflict between a workers party and the working class? Doesn't this Polish crisis, this failure, illustrate the fact--and this has just been stated by both Messrs Mitterrand and Edmond Maire--that there is incompatibility between the Marxist-Leninist system and institutional liberties, between the communist regime and liberty? Or, if I may speak more discreetly like your special correspondent--and I cite him--the political structures are ill-adapted to the necessities of a real democratic life.

[Answer] We have explained ourselves at length and we are continuing to do so on the Polish events. You mention the presence in Warsaw of Jacques Estager who with Jacques Dimet is, as they say in the language of the trade, covering the Polish events. Indeed, it is particularly interesting and enriching to read Estager's articles; we are not seeking to hide anything, but on the contrary we are trying to help the French workers understand what is happening there. As you have seen, Georges Marchais expressed his opinion on this issue as soon as he returned from his holiday. Clearly Poland finds itself faced with serious problems which have emerged on the basis of an economic and social development which was very rapid, too rapid for the structures of the society. That is the source of all the problems, to which is added the existence of real faults and inadequacies.

But I would point out two things: The first is that the problems posed have up till now been resolved through negotiations, which are sometimes difficult but where are undertaken publicly and in a spirit of responsibility toward the interests of the working class. Don't you see the difference between what happens in a socialist country and what happens in a capitalist country? When problems arise in the working class, it is in the nature of a socialist regime to resolve them as well as possible because these are problems which affect the decisive force of society.

The second observation I would like to make is that because of these events the solutions which have been reached advance democracy in the Polish socialist society. This is something which tends toward our direction, toward our concepts, as you know. I read attentively the speech made by the new first secretary of the Polish United Workers Party, Kania. This speech is founded on the activity undertaken up until now by Edward Gierek, who as you know is unfortunately ill, and it calls for the strict application--the bold but at the same time strict application--of the agreements which have been concluded toward the development of democracy and to strengthen socialism.

[Question] Does this Polish crisis not imply the condemnation of a system?

[Answer] On the contrary, I think that the way that the problems are being resolved currently goes toward further strengtheinng [passage indistinct]. The main cause is the existence of problems which have arisen from very rapid development and, as Estager says, the societal structures were not ready to resolve these completely new problems which will perhaps take time.

[Question] Well, don't you have the impression that Mr Brezhnev wants to bring Poland back to heel with Mr Kania, as numerous commentators are saying this morning?

[Answer] I have simply observed that the Soviet Union has, since the beginning of the events in Poland, stated that it was up to Poland to solve its problems itself. The same cannot be said for the French commentators.

LE MONDE: KANIA MUST TRY TO ACHIEVE THE 'IMPOSSIBLE'

LD081159 Paris LE MONDE in French 7-8 Sep 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Attempting the Impossible"]

[Text] For the third time in socialist Poland's short history a party first secretary has left the stage in chaos. Although it is probable that Mr Gierek, harrassed from all sides for the past 2 months and vacillating over what line to take, has been taken seriously ill, his removal once again follows a political failure which had become irremediable. Like Mr Gomulka in 1970, the first secretary has left without his colleagues and advisers' thanking him for the services which he nonetheless gave.

Caught between the demands of a population which is now aware of its power and a protector which has every confidence in his strength, the new first secretary must try to achieve the impossible. Poland was never a completely classic communist country because the party failed to impose the complete hegemony to which it aspires. Society has not been terrorized and annihilated by a political-police machine which nonetheless exists. Society lives outside the system, seething and from time to time shaking those who think that they guide it.

However, since 31 August the regime has changed much more than in 30 years of development and upheavals. Mainstays of the regime have collapsed. Self-managed trade unions are springing up everywhere and the trade union federaton on which the government relied to standardize the workers' demands has no grasp of the real situation. Events are taking place in this country which are so extraordinary that they have astonished the authorities to the extent of paralyzing them. The party itself, which regards itself as the driving force in national life, at present no longer has any inspiration. Having failed to grasp the consumers' discontent and the citizens' bitterness in time, it did not foresee the eruption. It is no longer taking action but merely reacting to the initiatives of people whose existence it formerly disputed.

Mr Kania has, therefore, become the leader of an entity which is still in the throes of an upheaval. Will he finally accept, even in a reduced form, the democratization so unexpectedly imposed in August? Or will his main concern instead be to restore an order which conforms much more to Leninist tradition, with a party which gives the orders and a people who obey? Poland's Communist Party contains leaders and members who are faithful to what Moscow calls "real socialism," and for whom nothing is valid outside the Soviet "model" with a few slight alterations to take account of national characteristics.

In Poland those leaders face a considerable obstacle. To firmly impose the power about which they dream they would first have to "change the people." Up until now various hierarchies have regarded that as an impossible task. They have had to compromise with the Catholic Episcopate, which may be troublesome but without whose understanding it is decidedly impossible to govern the country. They have also been forced to tolerate dissidence which may have hastened the workers' awakening but which, during the troubles, gave the government vital interlocutors.

How can the institutions be adapted to the needs of a dialogue which was established in crisis and which must now be made permanent? This is the problem of all those, communist or noncommunist, who intend to act "like the Poles." However, do that country's inhabitants really have the right to act "as Poles"? Will the changes they are determined to introduce be tolerated in Moscow?

GISCARD, SENEGAL'S SENGHOR DISCUSS CHAD

LD081135 Paris LE MONDE in French 30 Aug 80 p 5

[Text] On Thursday, 28 August, Mr Giscard d'Estaing lunched with Senegalese head of state Senghor, with whom he notably discussed the Chad question. After this meeting Mr Senghor stated that the African heads of state, having failed in their efforts to set up a neutral force within the OAU framework, had been forced to turn to the United Nations. "I think a UN force will be sent in September," he specified, "and that will make it possible to enforce the cease-fire in Chad."

MALAGASY LEADER ON INDIAN OCEAN CONFERENCE, TIES WITH FRANCE

LD081143 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Aug-1 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] A planned conference aimed at ensuring security in the Indian Ocean was the main topic of talks between Mr Didier Ratsiraka, president of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar, and Mr Giscard d'Estaing on 29 August.

"Since President Giscard d'Estaing was among those who reacted favorably to our idea of holding a conference on the Indian Ocean, I was anxious to discuss the matter with him more thoroughly than would have been possible by letter," Mr Ratsiraka stated at the end of the meeting. "The Russians," he added, "have already said yes. The question of U.S. participation remains to be decided. However, I believe that the United States will not be able to say either yes or no before November."

As for Franco-Malagasy relations, Mr Ratsiraka described them as "excellent at present."

Referring to the French islands in the Indian Ocean to which the Malagasy Government has laid claim, Mr Ratsiraka stated: "I hope that this problem will be resolved at a later date in a responsible, wise and understanding manner."

BERLINGUER SENDS CONGRATULATIONS TO POLAND'S KANIA

LD082148 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1900 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] In a congratulatory telegram to the new Polish leader, Stanislaw Kania, Secretary of the Italian Communist Party Enrico Berlinguer expressed the hope that Poland might overcome its present difficult situation and enjoy the benefit of its socialist conquests through an expansion of its democratic life.

PCI LEADER LONGO IN SERIOUS CONDITION AFTER STROKE

LD082241 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Summary] The condition of PCI President Luigi Longo, who was urgently admitted to hospital in Rome this morning is very serious. Correspondent Giuseppe Brunai reports that, according to the senior surgeon at the clinic, Longo suffered a stroke and is now in the intensive care ward. After hearing the news, President Pertini immediately visited the clinic where he found Enrico Berlinguer and other political figures.

L'UNITA RESPONDS TO CRITICISMS IN PRAVDA ARTICLE

LD031051 [Editorial Report] Rome L'UNITA in Italian on 30 August carries an unattributed report on pages 1 and 14 on PRAVDA's 29 August editorial entitled "Anxious Days for Italy," followed, on page 1, by the following unattributed commentary:

"Ever since this phase of deterioration in international relations began none of the stances adopted by the PCI, its leaders or its press organs has underestimated the danger of the rearmament race or the threat which this spiral poses to the world; indeed, this danger has always been emphasized and given the most prominent position in the Italian Communists' analyses, anxieties and struggles. This is demonstrated by the PCI's entire policy, but especially--to keep to the arguments raised by PRAVDA--by the initiatives on the issue of the medium-range missiles in Europe and the proposals made in parliament and elsewhere for reaching negotiations on arms reduction both in the West and in the Eastern Bloc, naturally bearing in mind the real nature of the tragic problem, proceeding from the facts of the real situation and on the basis of the principle of mutual balance and security. Hence the need that has always been stressed for a dialogue capable of guaranteeing such conditions.

"However, our concern regarding East-West tensions could not and cannot prompt us to ignore certain aspects of the USSR's policy or to underestimate the problems and difficulties of the countries of so-called real socialism, of which we have witnessed a serious and worrisome example in the past few week's events in Poland.

"Last, regarding the final point raised by PRAVDA, it must be said that the hypotheses mentioned by the CPSU organ were mentioned by journalists during interviews with PCI leaders. In their replies, the PCI leaders, while judging such hypotheses to be unfounded, did confirm, in line with the Italian Communists' policy, the commitment to defend national independence against whoever threatens it."

NATO'S LUNS CONFERS WITH GOVERNMENT LEADERS

LD081527 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Sep 80 p 3

[Excerpt] NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns had meetings in Lisbon yesterday with the president of the republic, the prime minister and the ministers of foreign affairs and defense. During these brief meetings Luns discussed with the Portuguese leaders the current international political situation, as well as, in the case of Portugal, the reequipping of our armed forces within the alliance framework.

After being received in the late morning by Ramalho Eanes, a lunch was held for Luns at the Foreign Ministry, which was attended by Foreign Minister Freitas do Amaral, Defense Minister Amaro da Costa and the chiefs of staff of the three armed services.

Speaking at the conclusion of the lunch, Freitas do Amaral welcomed the NATO secretary general and reaffirmed Portugal's stance with respect to the alliance and his government's "clearly pro-Western and pro-European foreign policy." In this connection he emphasized that "only great firmness and determination on the part of NATO can prevent the success of Soviet expansionism and the progress of the Warsaw Pact forces."

"Especially after Afghanistan, NATO's cohesion and the solidarity among its members must be greatly strengthened. The Portuguese Government will do all that it deems appropriate to that end," Freitas do Amaral stated.

Joseph Luns emphasized in reply our country's strategic importance within the framework of NATO and of the defense of the West.

In addition, during the meeting with the prime minister, which took place in the early afternoon at the official residence--the Sao Bento Palace--matters connected with Portuguese domestic policy were discussed. According to a Sao Bento Palace source, Sa Carneiro analyzed the current internal situation from an "institutional and political viewpoint," and at the same time informed Luns of his government's stance with respect to Portugal's role in NATO at both the political and military levels.

Sa Carneiro and the NATO secretary general also analyzed the current international situation, specifically with respect to the threats with which the alliance member countries are contending. In this connection the prime minister explained to Luns the Portuguese viewpoint on the current political situation in Europe and the world, specifically the way in which Portugal views its role in the alliance, so as to counter the common dangers and threats.

During the meeting with Defense Minister Amaro da Costa in the late afternoon, matters connected with the reequipping of the Portuguese Armed Forces, specifically the navy, were discussed. The announced purchase of three ASW frigates was one of the topics broached, and the NATO secretary general promised in this connection, according to a spokesman for the minister's office, "to use his personal incluence to resolve as soon as possible the problems still unresolved with respect to NATO aid for that purchase."

IBERIAN SOCIALIST SUMMIT COMMUNIQUE REPORTED

LD081245 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Sep 80 p 3

[Excerpt] The leaderships of the Socialist parties of the peninsula, headed by Mario Soares and Felipe Gonzalez, stressed yesterday in the final communique emerging from the Socialist Party [PS] Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] summit in Viana do Castelo that the conduct of the two countries' governments--governments which those political parties regard as "rightwing"--is "making the working classes pay the price of the economic and social crisis." At the same time they reaffirmed their desire for Spain and Portugal to join the EEG.

With respect to this matter they agreed on the need for mutual solidarity in that process. Nevertheless, they recognized that the two processes of entry present specific problems, although they expressed the conviction that "the enlargement of the Community is essential to guarantee not only democratic stability in Spain and Portugal but also stability in Europe itself." To this end the PS and the PSOE issued an appeal "to the progressive democratic forces in Europe to help accelerate with their solidary support the two countries' entry into the EEC."

The signatories of the document emphasized their desire to devote themselves to a policy of dialogue which will promote detente and create the preconditions necessary for a gradual and simultaneous big-power disarmament which will contribute to international peace and security. With respect to the Madrid Conference (CSCE), the PS and the PSOE expressed their confidence in the success of its conclusions. For this to be able to occur, "it seems essential that the decisive political will of the countries taking part--and, in particular, of the big powers--be reaffirmed, bearing in mind the aims to be achieved."

In the international political field the parties expressed satisfaction at the progress of some Latin American countries toward democracy, and at the same time expressed their concern "at the persistence of many dictatorships on that continent." They accordingly expressed their vigorous condemnation of "General Garcia Meza's fascist military coup in Bolivia, as well as Argentina's involvement in it." They also did not fail to denounce the Chilean Government's initiative of calling a referendum scheduled for 11 September in order to secure approval of "a pseudoconstitution, which is just another farce via which the dictator is seeking to legitimize himself, in view of the conditions of lack of freedom in which it is taking place, that is, restriction of political parties and the atmosphere of increasing repression of the last few months."

The current situation in Poland also received "thorough analysis" at the summit, which expressed its solidarity with the striking Polish workers and with "the Polish people's justified aspiration to an atmosphere of democratic openness and trade union freedoms, without external intervention of any kind." In fact they stressed that the major problems which are today affecting the world's stability are connected with the lack of "a real and just dialogue between the industrialized countries--both West and East European--and the countries of the co-called Third World." Without that dialogue, which would make it possible to establish a more just new economic, social and cultural order, "there will be no stable future for mankind."

The Portuguese and Spanish socialists included among the contacts to be developed active participation in a joint process which will promote detente, disarmament and the north-south dialogue.

Finally, they decided to continue to intensify the ties of cooperation between the two political parties, "having in mind the building of a future of freedom and justice in the two countries."

Thus in a clear allusion to the recent visit to Portugal of Adolfo Suarez, Spanish prime minister and Union of the Democratic Center leader, any kind of interference in each country's internal affairs "through false pretexts of cooperation" was condemned. In conclusion the PS and the PSOE expressed their intention to struggle to insure that "democracy in Portugal and Spain is an irreversible reality."

CARRINGTON STILL TO VISIT POLAND, HUNGARY IN OCTOBER

LD071525 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1448 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Text] The foreign secretary, Lord Carrington is going ahead with plans to visit Poland and Hungary at the end of October the Foreign Office confirmed today.

Plans for these visits were in the pipeline long before Mr Edward Gierek was replaced as Polish leader. Lord Carrington is expected to meet the new leader, Mr Stanislaw Kania.

The visit was planned to strengthen Anglo-Polish relations. Officials stressed today that the visit should not be seen as the immediate reaction to the leadership change. The British Government has remained silent both on the Polish industrial unrest and the leadership change.

TUC VISIT TO POLAND OFFICIAL CANCELED

LD051140 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0922 GMT 5 Sep 80

[By Ken Dennis, PA chief industrial correspondent]

[Excerpt] The TUC's [Trades Union Congress] controversial visit to Poland has now been officially cancelled. This was announced to the Trades Union Congress in Brighton today by Mr David Basnett, chairman of the TUC Economic Committee, who was to have led the delegation. They were originally intending to spend next week in Poland. But Mr Basnett told Congress that the Polish state trade union body, the CRZZ, had announced that the visit would be for only one day on September 10 and by a three-man delegation.

This would clearly be of no value to either side and the visit would therefore not take place, Mr Basnett declared. He said that the three-man, one-day visit was "totally unacceptable"--which was greeted with the applause of congress.

Mr Basnett's full statement was: "The TUC has had informal discussions with the CRZZ in the past two days on a proposal from the CRZZ concerning the programme of the visit due to take place next week.

"The TUC argued that any variation in the programme would be much misunderstood in Britain whatever the strength of the practical reasons for it including the intensive talks on trade union reforms which we fully understand.

"The delegation have, however, been doing their best to find an accommodation.

"We are therefore shocked by the unilateral decision of the CRZZ now to announce that the visit would be for only one day on September 10 and by a three-man delegation. This would clearly be of no value to either side and it is totally unacceptable to the TUC.

"It is clear that the Polish authorities do not wish to allow the TUC to make their own arrangements for a visit and the General Council have therefore had to conclude that it is not in the interests of the development of trade unionism in Poland for the TUC to be in a position of having to force the issue of a visit.

"The visit will not therefore now take place.

"The General Council will continue to adhere to the philosophy of the resolution which Congress has adopted and the statement made in support of it, namely that it is of the utmost importance for the development of independent and democratic trade unionism for the recent agreements now to be embodied in Polish life.

"The TUC will continue to watch the situation with great concern and sympathy and do all it can to assist in this process."

After reading the statement, which had been adopted unanimously by the TUC General Council, Mr Basnett said he wished to express a personal word.

"I say nothing about the Polish behaviour, excepting to express my sense of sadness. We support those who fight for democratic independent trade unions and we want to help them.

"The TUC will continue to watch the situation with great concern and sympathy. We shall be watching the events in Poland with the greatest care in the coming weeks."

Up to late last night, the TUC delegation was persisting in its determination to fly to Warsaw on Monday and had arranged for Polish Ambassador Mr Jon Bisztyga to meet the delegation in Brighton this morning. But when Mr Bisztyga realised that his proposed visit to Brighton was coming under the glare of publicity, we contacted Mr Basnett to call it off, saying he did not wish to have discussions "in a goldfish bowl".

Mr Frank Chapple, the Electricians' Union leader, who has opposed the TUC visit, said: "I think the General Council has made the right decision and it took some courage to make that announcement. It is only a pity it has been delayed.

"I wish they had gone a bit further and established contact with the workers' committees and the dissidents KOR.

I see no reason why they can't as we already have had talks with the South African trade union movement."

Mr Chapple said it was significant that not only had the Poles restricted the visit to one day but had reduced the number in the delegation from six to three.

Mr Basnett said on BBC Radio 2's Jimmy Young programme "it wasn't until last night that we knew what the clear proposition was.

"I am most surprised that the Polish trade union movement announced it unilaterally, when we have been in discussion we find it not only surprising but offensive as well."

He accepted that pressure of writing new legislation was a reason for cancelling the visit, but he did not want to speculate on other reasons.

"I think we have got to watch with extreme care the developments in Poland. We support anybody who is struggling for democratic independent trade unions and the Polish workers should have no doubt about that at all," he said.

Mr Basnett emphasised that the delegation had widened its agenda with the intention of meeting some of the people concerned in the strikes in Poland.

"We had the assurances we wanted and I am quite sure it would have been a useful visit had it been allowed to go ahead," he said.

UK WITHDRAWS ALL DIPLOMATS FROM IRAN

[By Chris Moncreff]

[Text] Britain has withdrawn its diplomats from Tehran, the Foreign Office announced this afternoon. Under the move the British Embassy has been closed, but a Foreign Office spokesman stressed that the decision was not a break in diplomatic relations. Britain's interests in Iran, particular consular responsibilities, will now be looked after by the Swedish Embassy. The Swedes will continue to try to gain consular access to four Britons detained in Iran, whom British diplomats have failed to see. The decision was taken following recent statements in Iran about Iranian students detained in Britain after the demonstration outside the United

TURKISH FOREIGN MINISTRY SECRETARY GENERAL ARRIVES FOR VISIT

TA061331 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1300 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Text] Turkish Foreign Ministry Secretary General Ambassador Ilter Turkmen arrived in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus today. Turkmen, who arrived at Ercan State Airport at 1430, is accompanied by the head of the Turkish Foreign Ministry Cyprus desk and by his special adviser. The Turkish delegation was received by Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Kenan Atakol, the Turkish ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia], Inal Batu, and the commander of the Turkish Cypriot Peace Forces, Lt Gen Dogan Kromors, the under secretary of the presidency and other officials. Turkmen and those accompanying him will stay in the federated state until 9 September and will hold meetings with Turkish Cypriot officials.

Arrival Statement

TA061912 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Text] The secretary general of the Turkish Foreign Ministry, Mr Turkmen, has said that Turkish policy on the Cyprus problem does not change with the change of the political party in power in Turkey. Mr Turkmen was speaking this afternoon at Ercan State Airport on his arrival in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus for a visit. He said that during his stay he will have talks with federated state officials on various problems facing the Turkish Cypriot community.

Asked whether his visit was connected with the imminent resumption of the Cyprus intercommunal talks, Mr Turkmen said his visit had been planned when he was first appointed as secretary general but as the talks were to be resumed in 10 days time his visit would give him the chance to learn the Turkish Cypriot view on these talks. To a question on whether the censure motion at the Turkish National Assembly on the foreign minister, Mr Erkmen, would affect the Turkish policy on Cyprus, Mr Turkmen replied that the Cyprus problem was a national issue and even the change in the political party in power in Turkey would not make any change let alone a change of a minister.

Asked whether the constitutional adviser to the federated state would be discussed in his talks in the federated state, Mr Turkmen said that this was a question for the federated state officials. He also said that the Cyprus problem concerned the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities, Turkey and Greece could only support these two communities to solve the problem.

Visit With Denktas

TA081138 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] Turkish Foreign Ministry Secretary General Ambassador Ilter Turkmen has begun his contacts in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Turkmen was received by President Rauf Denktas this morning. The Turkish ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia], Inal Batu, was also present at the meeting. The head of the Cyprus desk [of the Turkish Foreign Ministry], Tugay Ulucelik, the special adviser of the secretary general, Daryal Batibay, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Kenan Atakol, Turkish Cypriot Negotiator Umit Onan and his adviser Necati Munir Ertekun also joined the meeting, which had been in progress for a short while.

According to information received, Turkmen was briefed on the policy to be pursued in connection with the Cyprus problem, the problems of the Turkish Cypriot community were explained and Turkey's aid was requested.

It is reported that complete harmony was achieved at the meeting in connection with the attitude to be adopted at the intercommunal talks. Meanwhile, in a statement to press officials, Turkmen said that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and Turkey wished for a positive conclusion to the negotiating process initiated by UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim. Turkmen will leave for Turkey tomorrow after having completed his contacts.

DENKTAS REITERATES READINESS TO NEGOTIATE ON BIZONALITY

TA070548 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 7 Sep 80

[Text] Turkish Federated State of Cyprus President Rauf Denktas has said that the Turkish Cypriot side is ready to negotiate any proposal stipulating a bizonal federation. Denktas, who attended a conference on human rights in West Berlin, returned to Lefkosa [Nicosia] last night. In a statement to a TRT correspondent at Ercan Airport, Denktas noted that the conference was very beneficial and that he also had the opportunity to meet with West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and numerous other statesmen. Denktas stated that the Cyprus issue was not included on the conference agenda. However, it was discussed during his bilateral meetings.

Commenting on a remark by the TRT correspondent that the Greek Cypriots are preparing new proposals on the basis of the proposals they submitted in Vienna in April 1977, Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriot side is willing to discuss anything the Greek Cypriots bring to the negotiating table. He noted: If they wish to Hellenize Cyprus, to establish a Greek Cypriot majority administration under the name of a federation or to return to the pre-1974 conditions, then their proposal will not be valid. If they are not doing this and if they are coming to the negotiating table to discuss a bizonal federal system--which Makarios agreed upon--then they could start with any point. The Greek Cypriot proposals submitted in Vienna in April 1977 envisaged a unitary state with a strong central administration and granted only municipal authority to the Turkish Cypriot Community.

Government Spokesman's Response

[Text] The government spokesman when asked to comment on Denktas' intransigent statement made the day before yesterday on his return from West Berlin, reiterated that the government had no intention of embroiling itself in a public debate with the Turkish Cypriot side on the eve of the talks. He said: "We are waiting for the Turkish stand that will be manifested at the negotiating table."

UN ENVOY GOBBI EXPRESSES OPTIMISM ON RETURN

TA060827 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] After he completed his contacts at UN headquarters in New York, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi, returned to Lefkosa [Nicosia] today--a day before he was expected in Cyprus. In a special statement to the TRT in Lefkosa, Gobbi said that he was in New York for consultations. He added that he was optimistic about the outcome of the intercommunal talks. In reply to a question Gobbi said that he brought no special message from UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to the Turkish and Greek Cypriot community leaders. Gobbi is expected to conduct a series of talks with the Turkish and Greek Cypriot community leaders next week in a bid to complete preparations for substantive intercommunal talks scheduled for 16 September. Meanwhile, Kenan Atakol, Turkish Cypriot foreign affairs, defense, tourism and information minister, said that preparations by the Turkish Cypriot side for the resumption of the intercommunal talks would be completed by 16 September. Atakol added that he would work for this goal with the Turkish Cypriot negotiator at the intercommunal talks, Umit Suleyman Onan, as well as with opposition party officials.

PRIME MINISTER RALLIS REVIEWS NATIONAL ECONOMY, EEC PLANS

AT061310 Athens Press and Information Secretariat in English 6 Sep 80

[Prereleased text of speech by Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis at dinner following opening ceremony of 45th Salonica International Fair on 6 September]

[Excerpts] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen: It has become traditional for the Trade Fair of Thessaloniki to provide the prime minister with an opportunity to inform the Greek people on the state of the economy. The opportunity for this communication and contact is particularly significant today, at a time when the country is on the eve of an event which shall decisively influence the course of the economy. In a few months, we shall formally become the tenth member of the great European Community and we shall actively begin to participate in the shaping of its political, economical and social life. At this crucial point, the correct choice of objectives and policies for the future have a greater importance than a detailed review of recent achievements and of present developments. It is for this reason precisely that it is not only desirable but also imperative that I occupy myself less with the past and the present state of our economy and more with its future prospects.

The achievements of the Greek economy from 1974 onwards have been analysed repeatedly with clarity and objectivity and with the full support of statistical data. They have, in any case, been recognized by the reports of international organisations such as the OECD, IMF and other such bodies. But even those who are not concerned with statistics can, by looking around them, see the improvement in living conditions which has occurred both in rural areas and in the cities during the past few years as well as important development in the standards of living throughout the country.

However, around the middle of 1979, owing to the vertical increase in the price of oil, an economic crisis of great extent occurred in all the countries which do not produce oil and, as was natural, our own country as well. So, during this year the rate of inflation doubled as did the gap in our current balance of trade position. These two problems are still before us in 1980 because of the continuing energy crisis. To give you an idea of the size of the burden imposed upon us by the energy crisis, I shall mention the fact that, over the past two years, the average price of oil increased by 144.4 percent and the expenditure in foreign exchange for the purchase of oil will reach $2.7 billion. As I pointed out in another recent speech, the increase in the price of oil over these two years has cost the economy of this country $2.2 billion. These unfavourable developments have rendered the problems of inflation and of the balance of trade deficit the most serious inhibitory factors in our development effort.

In order to face and cope with these problems on an emergency basis, the government has adopted a gradually restrictive policy in the social, fiscal and revenue areas with the prime objective of restricting increased consumption demand which was created by the rapid upsurge in the income of all social units over the past few years.

The results achieved by this restrictive policy began to become apparent around the end of 1979 when the economy entered a phase of mild recession. This mild recession had been aimed for and was desirable because without it it would have been impossible to halt inflation and to contain the balance of payments deficit. I should like to stress that, contrary to what has been mentioned from time to time, this recession never assumed significant proportions. It has repeatedly been publicised that we are suffering from a serious financial crisis, a reduction in the national product, bankruptcy in our foreign transactions, an acceleration of inflation and one-sided austerity, a reduction of savings and the increasing threat of large scale unemployment.

These prophecies were, fortunately, contradicted by events. I should, however, like to stress that such gloomy pronouncements which are not based on facts tend to disrupt the psychological climate and are capable of causing panic and undermining social stability, which is a basic requirement of our future development.

Fortunately, the government was not unduly alarmed and insisted on the application of policies which it had already adopted. The subsequent events justified this policy because, to the extent that the unfavourable international economic situation permitted, the national product will register a small increase, inflation will remain at the same levels or perhaps even below levels reached last year, the increase in savings will be maintained and the percentage of unemployment shall not exceed the known and acceptable limits of unemployment. I am in the happy position to assure you that the government predictions have now been confirmed by developments over the past few months.

More specifically, the developments in the cost of living indices over the past two months show an encouraging containment of inflation, bank deposits in drachmas and foreign exchange are increasing at a high rate and the deficit in current accounts and transactions in the balance of payments is being held at acceptable levels.

These developments, ladies and gentlemen, constitute the most valid justification of the government's economic policy, which I announced in my statement of policy and which we have been applying with the consistency and realism which the present difficult circumstances require. After the establishment of controls on excessive consumer demand and the creation of stabilising conditions in the economy the government is proceeding with the taking of measures for strengthening of supply because an increase in the supply of goods and services is synonymous with financial development.

We began with the financing of handicrafts because it not only affects the business world to a large extent but also we believe that the potential for an increase in the contribution of handicrafts is important. I wish to state that, to the extent that the increase in bank deposits permits it, we shall proceed with further financing of other sectors of the economy. Also following a careful study and an exchange of views with the productive classes, the government has taken measures aimed at the creation of essential conditions for the dynamic development of the economy in the future within the wider context of the favourable perspectives created by Greece's entry into the Common Market. With its economic policy the government is aiming at an increase in production and productivity which shall contribute to a reduction in inflation, the strengthening of the economy's competitive potential, the creation of opportunities for employment and the solution of the balance of payments problem.

The government intends to achieve these aims by strengthening the private sector of the economy which is the sector carrying a high rate of productivity, with the increase in productive investments, with the creation of competitive conditions in the market and with the strengthening of the exploratory programmes for the discovery and exploitation of the country's mineral wealth in the shortest possible time.

And now, please permit me to make a brief analysis of the most important financial developments and of the economic measures taken by the government by basic sectors of the economy.

National Product

During the past five years the Greek economy has shown a satisfactory rate of development. The G.N.P. has increased by 5.1 percent as compared with only 2.4 percent in the EEC countries.

The significance of the higher rate of performance of the Greek economy becomes more understandable if one takes into account that our rate of development was achieved with almost full employment whereas in the countries of the EEC unemployment reached very high levels. It is, therefore, obvious that there are no signs that the dynamism of the Greek economy has been reduced.

Recent developments confirm the exact opposite, actually. Because, during 1979 when the additional expenditure for the purchase of oil took up 1.9 percent of the national revenue, we achieved an increase in the national product of 3.9 percent. So as concerns 1980, in spite of the fact that the additional expenditure in foreign exchange for the purchase of oil will take up approximately 2.3 percent of the national revenue in spite of the restrictive policy which has been applied, we anticipate an increase in the national product of 1.5 percent approximately. This bloodletting of the national revenue for the purchase of oil will naturally affect the rate of development of our economy negatively, as it affects the economies of all countries.

Investments

During 1979 total investments increased at the rate of about 5 percent which is about the same level of the immediately preceding years. However, the increase in total investments during 1979 is due almost totally to the increase in productive investments in contrast with what [was] obtained during the preceding years when investments were largely made up of an increase in building and construction. More specifically, investments in machinery and other equipment during 1979, at firm prices, increased by 12.7 percent and investments in industry by 9.6 percent.

I should like at this point to comment on the criticism which has been made recently on the question of the profits of the 100 biggest industrial concerns in this country. I should like to note that, after four years, there were in fact increased profits in 1979. The yield of the same capital investments in the 100 biggest enterprises amounted to 13 percent which, however, after taxes produces a net profit which is about half of the interest earned by savings accounts. It is, therefore, clear that profits are not as high as some quarters maintain. In any case, such profits when invested in industry will increase its productive potential.

In order to ensure the essential incentives the governments of the New Democracy have taken specific measures. More specifically, two basic laws have been enacted--No 289/76 and No 849/78--which completed the network of incentives which existed before and provided further strong incentives for regional development. These laws encouraged investments in regional areas and particularly in border areas in northern Greece and in the Aegean islands. Now, in view of our entry into the Common Market, we have drafted a progressive development law which, I believe, will prove to be much more effective than the previous one because it is based on the utilisation of funds from the community and the European Investment Bank.

A basic feature of the new law is the provision of funds from the programme of public investments, important sums for the critical sectors of our economy--for industry and crafts, for mining and mineral development, for tourism, for the development of new sources of energy and the preservation of energy and for the applied research which is needed for the protection of the environment. A part of these grants will be returned to us from the Community funds.

Balance of Payments

In spite of the extra expenditures imposed [on] our balance of payments which amounted to $900 million for oil, we foresee that the current balance of payments deficit for this year shall only increase by $500 million.

This is because developments in the balance of payments position during the past two months allow us to forecast that the deficit in the balance of current transaction this year will reach $2.400 million as compared with $2.600 million which have been estimated, and $1.882 which they were last year. This favourable development must not make us over optimistic and must not make us relax our vigilance. On the contrary, these developments must strengthen our feeling that the continuation of the policy which we have been following is leading us to the correct results.

Naturally, we shall this year be forced to borrow larger sums from abroad in order to cover the total gap in our current balance of transactions. But I must stress that the country's external borrowing when compared with international criteria, is at normal levels. Also, the ability of this country to absorb credits remains exactly high, as may be proved by the favourable terms which we achieved in recent loans to this country.

In order to avoid the unfavourable consequences of the balance of payments position caused by imports of a speculative nature and by the creation of unnecessary stock-piling, we have stabilised drachma parity against the average parity of foreign currencies.

At the same time, in order to reinforce and encourage deposits in foreign exchange, we have decontrolled interest rates for deposits which are made in foreign currencies which are important to us. The result of these measures was that deposits in foreign currencies increased by $180 million for the four-month period April to July. At the same time, we increased the ceilings for building loans which are granted to importers of foreign exchange and extended loans to those workers who bring with them foreign exchange on their return to Greece from abroad with a view to strengthening investments in handicrafts and small industries.

Inflation

In 1979 inflation increased significantly here as almost everywhere. The main cause of this increase was the considerable upward price adjustment of the price of oil and the abolition of certain subsidies which was dictated by the necessity of bringing into line our agricultural policy with that of the European communities.

As far as 1980 is concerned, we foresee that, in spite of the important increase in the price of oil, the increase of the price index should not exceed last year's levels whereas it certainly shall in most countries.

In these circumstances, stabilisation of inflation at last year's levels constitutes a positive development. This allows us to venture the optimistic forecast that, if the price of oil does not increase significantly, the rate of inflation will be reduced next year.

Stabilising inflation was achieved mainly with our antiinflationary financial policy and with a certain restriction in public spending. Our prices policy was intended to reduce the burden on lower income groups. Thus, we proceeded with the liberation of prices of certain consumer categories which do not significantly affect the cost of living index with a view to achieving the normal function of the market but at the same time keeping stable the prices of services of public utilities which are controlled by the state such as urban transportation, water, telephone, health services, etc. It was, however, inevitable that the additional burden resulting from the increase in the price of oil should be borne by the consumer. This is because such increases of price are the most effective means of achieving economies in oil consumption and in realising the necessary organic changes in the productive sector which will contribute to replacing oil with less expensive fuels. The first positive results for replacing oil with other fuels in industry will be seen very soon, whereas its reduction in other applications has already become felt.

Incomes Policy

A basic aim of the incomes policy which was applied during the government of the country by the New Democracy was the redistribution of incomes in favour of the workers. Thus, during the past five years, the average remuneration of workers increased by 159.1 percent as compared with an increase of 93 percent in the cost of living index. Therefore, the real remuneration of workers in this class increased by 32.3 percent. An immediate result of workers, that is to say the re-distribution of the incomes policy which was applied, was that the share of workers' incomes in relation to national incomes in the non-agricultural sector of the economy increased from 47.3 percent in 1974 to 55.7 percent in 1979.

In this particular year, 1979, for which so much malicious criticism was heard, the average remuneration for work rendered is estimated at 19.5 percent as compared with an increase in the cost of living of 19 percent, average. It, therefore, follows that the purchasing power of average wage levels was in fact secure.

Incomes in the Agricultural Sector

During the past five years and in spite of the relative lack of progress in production because of unfavourable weather conditions, the incomes of the rural population increased by 92.2 percent. Parallel to this, the income of farmers was reinforced with different types of financing which are borne by the general public which will amount to Drs 63.2 billion in 1980 and Drs 251.36 billion for the whole of the six-year period. If we take into account this subsidisation and the reduction in the farm population--which is a result of economic development--one can then estimate that the increase in the average income in the agricultural sector was approximately 140 percent and 25 percent approximately of real earnings. It is, therefore, clear that the increase in farmers' incomes was not basically different from increases received by other workers.

Ladies and gentlemen, I have deliberately left the subject of the favourable consequences from our entry into the EEC until last. This is because, without question, it constitutes the most important factor which will affect our further economic development. It is impossible within the restricted limits of my speech this evening to analyse to any extent these consequences because it is known to all of us that they cover all sectors of the Greek economy.

For this reason, I shall only refer to two characteristic and tangible examples. From 1981 the burden of support for the income of our farmers, which cost Drs 251.3 billion over the past six years paid for by our national budget, will be progressively undertaken by the Agricultural Fund of the Common Market (FEOGA). The same fund will support, through free assistance, programmes for re-organising cultivation, re-orientating the farm populations of problem areas and strengthening the income of farmers living in mountainous or island districts. Thanks to these programmes and the privileged free circulation and distribution of farm products in the common market, the Greek farmer will enter a period of prosperity.

The second example refers to the support by the appropriate funds of the EEC of the major infrastructure works in the agricultural, communication, telecommunications, energy, irrigation, sewerage sectors, the programmes for regional development, for the substitution of imported liquid fuel, for professional training and the movement of the work force as well as for private investment in any given area.

The preparation for the submission of programmes to the various funds of the EEC for financing is being carried out at an accelerated pace by the appropriate government services and public organisations and enterprises (utilities?) [as published], so that the relevant complete programmes may be drawn up and submitted in time. The Ministry of Co-ordination has already submitted programmes amounting to Drs 42 billion.

I am personally confident that we shall in 1981 be able to absorb free aid amounting to $210 million from the various funds and $500-600 million in loans under favorable conditions from the European Investment Bank. The reinforcement of productive investments with such important sums by the European Community will allow us to make available larger sums from local sources for education and health which the government attaches great importance to and which are not financed by EEC funds.

It is obvious that if we wish to succeed in the fulfillment of these programmes and absorb significant finances from the EEC funds the whole state mechanism must make an intense and methodical effort. I should like to repeat what I stated in parliament, that a basic prerequisite for the realisation of the government's aims is an improvement in the performance of public administration. We know that we cannot perform miracles in this sector but a gradual improvement is possible and mainly depends on the public servants themselves.

Ladies and gentlemen, the Greek economy is on the threshold of the most important change it has ever faced in its recent history. 1980 is the last year in a long period of transition and preparation for our accession into the Common Market which started with the application of the Athens Accession Agreement 1962. In a few months we shall formally become the tenth member of this great European Community and we shall begin to participate actively in all its political and economic activities.

Allow me, here, to open a small but useful parenthesis. The 1st of January, 1981, is the starting point of the great change that all of us gospelled during the past 20 years. But, this change is achieved thanks to the clear-sightedness, the insistence and patience of the now president of the republic. Thanks to his efforts a long national dream becomes reality.

I am convinced that if we make the necessary effort in the right direction our accession to the EEC will signify a new period of progress and prosperity for us. It is only necessary that we use the positive elements of our character. Our virtues and not to expect us to be immediately equal with our future partners without making the intensive efforts which they have already made.

There is no doubt that we have much ground to cover. Our future partners possess advanced economies in all sectors, well developed exports and services in established markets and, above all, economic traditions which function freely in a stable, political, democratic climate for many decades with continuous development and adjustment to changing economic conditions.

We are now called upon to cover these gaps in a transition period of approximately five years. If we wish our accession to become the monumental success we all hope for, we must bridge these gaps within this period of five years.

I believe that this aim is totally achievable because I have faith in the ingenuity, the ability to adjust and the inborn disposition of the Greeks for progress and success.

Without wishing to ignore the objective difficulties which exist, I invite you all to collaborate in this effort so that with hard and methodical work we may succeed in making our accession to the EEC--from the very first year--a brilliant success, worthy of the history and the abilities of our people.

PAPANDREOU PREDICTS PASOK ELECTION VICTORY

AT080748 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 7 Sep 80 p 9

[Text of speech by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou on 6 September at the Athens opening of the PASOK youth festival marking PASOK's sixth anniversary: "PASOK Will Win in the Coming Election"]

[Text] Young men and women, comrades and friends of PASOK:

I am deeply touched by the warm welcome you have given me. Naturally I am deeply touched by your mass, militant presence at the youth festival, 6 years after establishment of PASOK.

On this sixth anniversary of our movement we declare that with the love and confidence of the people of Greece we are marching toward authority--that we will celebrate PASOK's seventh anniversary not as the opposition but as the government in the service of the people and nation.

The rightwing in Greece has held power for nearly half a century. It has held authority for the purpose of serving the interests of local and foreign oligarchy. It has held it for the purpose of promoting the interests of "protector" powers--which have turned our country into an advance post for the promotion of their strategic goals in the area of the Balkans and the Eastern Mediterranean.

With the background of the royalist dictatorship of Metaxas the right has erected its one-party state--it has erected it on the ruins and fragments bequeathed to us by civil war. Always in the minority, it has managed to rule for countless decades. It has managed to do so by tricky election systems, by force and adulteration, by bribery and defection, with the help of royalist and military coups, and through intimidation and deception of the people.

Because the moment of the expression of the peoples' will is approaching and because the right cannot avoid this confrontation with the forces of change which clamor for it, the right once again is resorting to deception and intimidation. It is attempting deception through preelection grants in an effort to diminish the people's wrath against the policy of austerity for the many and luxury for the few. Once again it is resorting to intimidation through rumormongering about "secret armies" and the intervention of our country's armed forces.

"Saviors and Messiahs"

All this, however, is in vain because the right has taken off its mask, because it has supplied indisputable proof that its economic and social policy only serves the interests of oligarchy--both local and foreign--and that the consequences of detente and inflation are being borne by the underprivileged Greek--the worker, farmer, wage earner, professional and artisan. The only prerequisite for planned economic development and the worker's just share of national income is that the rightwing relinguish authority.

The extreme right is vainly attempting to return our country to the climate of the "April" period [junta dictatorship]. Our fatherland's armed forces will never again be trapped by "saviors", "messiahs" or "allies". The betrayal of Cyprus by the American-motivated junta of the colonels has left ineradicable marks on our collective memory, the memory of both our people and their conscripted sons. Today the armed forces, in brotherhood with the people, are defending national independence and the territorial integrity of the fatherland. They respect the sovereign will of the people from whom they originate.

In the upcoming election the forces of change will win; they will lay the foundations for progress which will be nationally proud and socially just. PASOK will win in the coming election. It will win and govern; its only criterion will be to serve the interests of our nation and our people.

Completion of Democracy

During the past 6 years PASOK has created a battleworthy organization which is spread from one end of our country to the other--an organization which is able to decisively intervene in mass areas and take an active role in the struggle for workers' demands. As a result of its firm struggles and unshakeable ideological-political positions, during the past 6 years PASOK has won the love and confidence of our people. This is because PASOK's triptych--national independence, peoples' sovereignty, social liberation--responds to the vision of our people for great change, a change which will give the Greek people the opportunity to take an active part in national options.

By forging the national peoples' unity, PASOK has established itself as the political representative of a broad alliance of the underprivileged--the classes and strata which are subject to stark exploitation by multinational monopolies and their agents--the large, dependent Greek bourgeoisie.

The decisive and qualitative difference of PASOK, in comparison with the large spectrum of progressive political forces of our time, lies in its firm goal: To give authority to the people themselves. The slogan which summarizes PASOK's ideological-political character is: The people must have authority.

In order to give authority to the people, in order to avoid the identification of the party with the state, in order to make exploitation of authority impossible by any party bureaucracy, it is essential that the state be rapidly democratized so that democracy is complete. As we have repeatedly underlined, democracy has three foundations: the parliament, the trade unions, and local self government. The parliament, which through its party composition expresses the positions and interests of the social classes and strata, is a necessary but not the only condition for a democratic structure of society.

It is necessary at the same time that all workers in the city, the countryside, and the factories and offices should be organized within free, independent, autonomous, nonparty and nonpolitical associations and organizations so that they can claim an equal share in the national product, so that they can work under conditions which do not undermine their spiritual or physical well-being, and so that they can promote those social reforms which will strengthen workers' control over large national options.

Public Support

Radical decentralization is equally critical for the completion of democracy. This means the decisive expansion of jurisdictions of local self-government (first, second and third stages)--an expansion which will define the institutional limits of decentralized, that is democratic, social and economic planning. At the same time development committees will be established at the base--by the citizens of every village and city quarter--so that they can actively assist local self government in the development of their own local and regional development programs.

I have stressed many times--and I again stress tonight--that progress toward socialist reformation of society is a long term process. It demands--in all its phases--the active support of the people from within the trade unions and the organizations of local self government. Every important step in this direction must have the broad support of the people.

With reference to the active participation of workers in the decisions which affect them we must underline the recent catalytic developments in Poland. Through peaceful means, through unbelievable and calm determination the workers won the rights to organize their own trade unions--without state or party intervention--to strike, and to express their positions freely. This is a milestone in the progress toward socialism in a country of "existent socialism." At the same time we must stress that not only the workers but also the party and the state in Poland handled this revolutionary change with both wisdom and directness. It is a fact that this great change in Poland opens the way for new prospects for all countries of the Warsaw Pact. It opens up new prospects with the condition that the United States and other Atlantic Pact countries do not use the impressive achievements of the Polish workers as a weapon of cold war, a situation which once again is characteristic of superpower relations.

The Kerkira Meeting

For PASOK, the Kerkira meeting [with Eurosocialist leaders] was one of the most important milestones in its 6-year history. This is because the five socialist parties of Southern Europe laid the foundations for long-term cooperation and coordination of their activities in the struggle against the right, in the promotion of the interests of people of Southern Europe, and in active contribution toward detente, disarmament and peace. At the same time, despite its youth, PASOK has established itself in the European area as a dynamic peoples' party which is at the threshold of authority. It appears that what I have often repeated in the past is true: That the great change in Europe will come from the south, that the great change will begin in Greece.

Full agreement was not achieved at the Kerkira meeting. Every party has its own history. Each party establishes its own goals within the framework of the objective and subjective possibilities of its own country. In the political arena, however, all five parties face the coordinated efforts of the international economic oligarchy which motivate the world's capitalist establishment to stop the progress of peoples' movements toward authority. All five parties contribute--each one from its own viewpoint--to detente, peace, disarmament and the liberation of the peoples of Europe from the cold war camp.

PASOK, which has already conducted important activities in the Mediterranean and Middle Eastern areas, is today a bridge between the progressive national liberation movements of the Mediterranean and para-Mediterranean areas and the progressive socialist forces of Southern Europe. In this way it is decisively contributing to the strengthening of the south in the north-south dialogue both in Europe and, more generally, in the Mediterranean area.

Plebiscite on the EEC

Rightist circles often argue that PASOK has already made a turnaround on the question of the EEC. This is not true. Rapprochement with the socialist parties of Southern Europe simply confirms PASOK's position that Greece is a Balkan, a European and a Mediterranean country. PASOK has diligently cultivated its bipartite relations in all three areas and it has played a decisive role in establishing permanent cooperation both among progressive movements of the Mediterranean and among socialist parties of Southern Europe. As of 1 January 1981 it will play an active role in the socialist group of the Europarliament.

It has always been PASOK's position that the accession of our country to the EEC is a mistake of the first order; that our industry will suffer an irreparable blow; that our country's provinces--agrarian Greece--will be deserted; and that it will be extremely difficult--if not impossible--to plan a self-supporting development of Greece.

In place of accession we have proposed a special agreement of the type recently granted by the EEC to our neighboring Yugoslavia, an agreement which would allow us to control our foreign trade and movement of capital.

It has always been PASOK's position that the people must be called upon to judge--within the framework of a genuine plebiscite--between accession and a special agreement.

It has always been PASOK's position that--once we have acceded to the EEC--we must participate in all the organizations of the community; that we should wage a battle to protect Greek interests; that we must reduce losses; that we must protect the interests of our country's workers; and that we must coordinate our efforts with the Southern Europeans.

Entry Into NATO

The right knows that its days in authority are now numbered. This is why it is in a hurry to return the country to the military wing of the Atlantic Alliance. At the same time it accelerates the drafting and signing of a new Greek-U.S. "defense" agreement. It negotiates with NATO, with the United States and with Turkey on our fatherland's sovereign rights in the Aegean in the name of the "prodical son's" return to the alliance.

We inform the government that the Greek people will never tolerate any alteration to the status of the Aegean as it is recognised under international agreements. We inform the government that a return to NATO--with Cyprus still under occupation--is unthinkable for our people. We inform the government that both the agreement on bases as well as the return to NATO come, in accordance to the constitution, under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Chamber of Deputies. We inform the government that the present chamber of deputies has ceased to represent the political will of the Greek people. As a result of this only the new chamber, the chamber which will emerge from the next election, is both officially and fundamentally authorized to rule both on our country's relationship with the Atlantic Alliance as well as on the bipartite relations of Greece and the United States. In conclusion we inform the government that it is in vain that it tries to accelerate both our return as well as the agreement with the United States because the validity of any agreement will have to be considered by the Chamber of Deputies which will emerge from the elections which are approaching.

Income Policy

PASOK will win in the upcoming elections. The message of victory comes from every corner of the Greek land. Change has already become a prerequisite and a condition for national survival.

The people know that PASOK will inherit nothing but ruins; they also know that PASOK is not a miracle worker. Public administration is deeply corroded. Its bureaucratic structure and function, its handouts to its "own," its total lack of coordination and leadership brought the state apparatus to nearly total confusion. With the nearly total lack of economic planning; with the frequent alternation of economic measures which cancel each other out, the country's economy has been led to the brink of bankruptcy.

At the same time we are also faced with inflation which increases at a rate much faster than that of 1979; with a current deficit in transactions in the foreign payments balance which is considerably higher than the 1979 deficit; with a considerable increase in unemployment--particularly for our country's youth--and with a stagnation in productive investments both in the public as well as the private sectors. Our country's workers are faced with a shrinkage of their true income due to the unpopular policy of one-sided austerity.

For this reason it is the primary and immediate duty for a PASOK government to stop the downward trend of our economy, to decisively promote productive investments, to check inflation, to expand the margins provided by the balance of payments for the sake of an upward development trend. An integral part of such a development policy is inherent in the overthrow of New Democracy's income policy. The just sharing of the workers in the product of their own labor will not only fail to create obstacles to economic development but on the contrary it will be a prerequisite for such development.

The Prospect of Elections

It is not a coincidence that PASOK's anniversary coincides with its youth festival--the festival of both the working and studying youth of our country. Many generations fought and offered their youth to our country so that authority may pass to the people--so that national independence can be attained, so that peoples' sovereignty is established, so that the road may be opened toward social liberation for the working Greek. The yesterday's visions now appear to be tangible--they now take on shape and form. PASOK's victory in the coming election will open up the broad horizons for the creative participation of the youth in the just and proud progress of the country into the future.

PASOK's victory will justify the struggles of the mature generation while at the same time it will give the lead to the youth of our fatherland.

Tonight we call upon the youth of our fatherland so that, hand in hand with the proud oldsters, they will wage the great battle for the great victory of the people. PASOK will win in the upcoming election. The people will win so that at long last Greece may belong to the Greeks. Forward to the struggle and to victory.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN DENIES DEMARCHE SENT TO TURKEY

AT081140 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 8 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] A government spokesman yesterday stated that no demarche was sent to the Turkish Government. This was in answer to a report yesterday that in a demarche Greece requested clarifications from the Turkish Government on whether Erkmen's dismissal would mean a change in Ankara's foreign policy particularly in respect of Greek-Turkish affairs.

ERBAKAN ADDRESSES NSP RALLY IN KONYA; INCIDENTS REPORTED

TA061849 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 6 Sep 80

[Text] NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan has said that the struggle waged by his party aimed at eradicating injustices, oppression and the false Western mentality and at restoring the prevalence of truth and justice. Speaking today at a rally organized by his party in Konya, Erbakan said the spiritual and economic struggle waged by the people will be successful in the same way the war of independence ended successfully 58 years ago. Noting that yesterday's ousting of Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen was a historic and important decision by the parliament, Erbakan said the people were today celebrating this historic decision in Konya.

Noting that Israel has been a symbol of imperialism since its establishment, Erbakan said: Jerusalem is the first Qibla of Muslims. It is impossible for any Turkish citizen to be indifferent in the face of the recent attack against Jerusalem because Jerusalem carries special importance for all Muslims. Until 60 years ago our ancestors defended Jerusalem, the 1,400 year old Muslim city, against all possible attacks.

TRT correspondent Kemal Gungordu reports Erbakan as having said: Foreign forces are taking advantage of the "Western club" mentality in Turkey in order to implement the Israeli project. Therefore, our 50 million citizens are struggling in unity against the Western club mentality. Noting that the liberation and strengthening of Turkey depends on a national view, Erbakan said the NSP believes in and is determined to saving Jerusalem.

The rally organized by the NSP in Konya began with the march of delegations which arrived from various part of Turkey. The march ended at the square where the rally was to be held. It is reported that the rally was organized under the banner of "The Day To Save Jerusalem." The MEDITERRANEAN NEWS AGENCY reports that a moment of silence was observed after the march. Then the national anthem was sung. Thousands of participants carried banners and then sat on the ground while the national anthem was being sung.

Government Investigation of Incidents

TA081151 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] The chief public prosecutor's office has announced that it has opened an investigation, based on the political parties law, of the march and rally held in Konya the day before yesterday, which was attended by NSP leaders. In a statement to the TRT, Chief Public Prosecutor Fahrettin Kiyak said: The matter of the rally held in Konya the day before yesterday has two judicial aspects. The first aspect consists of conducting a criminal investigation into persons who are guilty of illegal actions. It has been reported that the public prosecutor's office in Konya has started an investigation into the relevant persons.

The second aspect concerns the political parties law. In our country, which is loyal to Ataturk's reforms and to the principles of a secular republic, the introductory section of the constitution, article 2 and the last paragraph of article 19 of the constitution and the mandatory rules of articles 92, 94 and 97 of political parties law 648 necessitate that the secular system of the state, the principles of secularism and Ataturk's reforms be secured. Our office has started an investigation into this aspect. The necessary information and documents are being requested from the relevant offices. Concluding his statement, Kiyak noted: The matter will be assessed from the viewpoint of the party and the members of the party in accordance with the evidence and documentation and the necessary legal action to be taken.

RPP Statement

TA081908 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] A statement by the RPP Administrative Council expresses regret over reports that during the NSP rally held in Konya on Saturday, slogans against the republic were chanted, the constitutional principle of secularism was violated and the singing of the national anthem was protested by some demonstrators. The statement notes that the investigation being conducted into the incidents will undoubtedly shed light on their dimension and nature.

Recalling that Turkey was experiencing a period in which subversive incidents were spreading and the exploitation of religion and sectarianism were reaching the dimensions of civil strife in various parts of the country, the statement says that it is imperative to safeguard the republic and to support and enhance the principle of secularism which is the basis of the unifying nationalism of Ataturk. The statement continues: For years all rightists parties have raced with each other in exploiting religion and violating the principle of secularism. The responsibility for this cannot be attributed to one particular party, especially if the stand of that party was tolerated while it supported the Justice Party government and was criticized when it withdrew its support.

The RPP statement adds that for years a party that supported the JP and the governments formed by it as well as organizations affiliated to it had plastered the walls of big cities and the capital with slogans violating secularism and aimed at exploiting religion and that the slogans used at the NSP meeting in Konya on Saturday were substantially in the same vein.

The statement accuses the JP of incorporating into its ranks so-called secterian leaders who try to alter the meaning of the Koran for ulterior motives and who incite officials with the aim of changing the national and secular education system, exploiting religion and violating the principles of secularism.

Pointing out that during his election campaigns the prime minister used the Koran for his political propaganda, the statement concludes: In the event that incidents occurred at the NSP Konya meeting which were directed against Ataturk, our republic and the national anthem then those responsible must be punished under the law. All those who really cherish the republic system and secular principles and who are genuinely attached to Ataturk must adopt a united stand against those who are racing to damage the republican system and secularism and against those who violate and erode Ataturk's principles and exploit religion.

NSP Organizers' Comments

TA081654 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] NSP Deputy Sener Battal from Konya, who was on the three-man committee which organized the Konya march and rally, has made a statement. Battal said every measure had been taken to insure that the march and rally would be held in accordance with the law and that order reigned at the rally.

NSP Senator Ahmet Remzi Hatip from Konya, another member of the organization committee, has submitted a petition to the Konya public prosecutor's office asking that those persons, if any, who staged a protest when the national anthem was playing at the Konya rally be punished.

GUNAYDIN: 'UTTER CONFUSION' IN GOVERNMENT AFTER ERKMEN OUSTER

NC080700 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 6 Sep 80 p 5

["The Situation in Ankara" column by Teoman Erel: "There Is Another Possibility"]

[Excerpts] The government has failed to seek a vote of confidence during the interpellation moves in accordance with article 89 of the constitution, and instead has abandoned Hayrettin Erkmen, whose only fault was to implement the foreign policy laid down by the Council of Ministers. What will Suleyman Demirel do now that he has sacrificed Erkmen to the Gods?

It is difficult for Demirel to remain in power without asking for a new vote of confidence. Although some JP members are seriously considering staying in power by sacrificing more ministers just as they sacrificed Erkmen, nevertheless this is an illogical and invalid hope for survival to which they are clinging now because they are in a state of panic.

Following the vote on Erkmen, the government is now in utter confusion. This government no longer has the stamina to arrange an agenda in the National Assembly. There is nothing it can do now but obstruct the enactment of much-needed legislation and the election of the president of the republic.

In view of these developments, no government can operate smoothly, nor can it establish its authority over the state bureaucracy or obtain any positive results from its bargainings with the outside world. Since the possibility of early elections has vanished, Demirel may feign indifference and try to remain in office. However, this would mean his government would melt away rapidly.

As an alternative, some JP members propose that all its members resign en masse to extricate themselves from their present predicament by "resorting to the nation" and by forcing the country into early elections. We do not think they can do this, but Suleyman Demirel may try to revew his vote of confidence by attempting to force Erbakan into submission through various pressures such as luring away some independent deputies and NSP members who are already on the hook.

If he fails to go this route and continues to feign indifference, he will have used up all his power. With a government that cannot make even the slightest gesture to save face and that has pinned its hopes on miracles, the country is bound to suffer greater violence and economic bankruptcy.

RPP PARLIAMENTARIANS PROTEST PARTY'S POSITION

TA081834 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Thirty-one RPP parliamentarians have sent a letter to the party administration and organization saying that the party, since the time it was in power, has been pursuing an indecisive and compromising attitude and requesting that this attitude be renounced. The letter said: The RPP should take a decisive stand and support the side of toil, independence and democracy within the social struggle. The RPP should decisively intervene in the helpless course to which the society is subjected.

The 31 parliamentarians who sent the letter to the party administration and organization on the occasion of the party's 57th anniversary of its establishment said that there are attempts to pull the party toward the right and thus make it center party. The letter then said: An RPP which is being forced toward a line behind the times and society and an RPP more to the right than its current program and position cannot be the leader of society and cannot be a dynamic force.

Criticizing the government, the RPP parliamentarians said that the Demirel administration pretended to fight against terror but it actually wanted to abolish the right to strike, freeze wages and abolish the freedom to secure one's rights. Noting that the Turkish economy, foreign policy, defense system and culture are aimed at linking Turkey to the West, the letter added that there are attempts to secure foreign and domestic guarantees for a system that exploits the masses, who are becoming poorer and poorer.

ACTING PRESIDENT CONFERS WITH DUTCH FOREIGN MINISTER

TA051137 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 5 Sep 80

[Text] Dutch Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw, who left for Istanbul after having concluded his contacts in Ankara, was today received by Acting President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil at the Florya seaside mansion. Van der Klaauw was also ceremoniously received by Istanbul Governor Nevzat Ayaz this morning. In a statement on arrival at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Van der Klaauw said that his contacts in Ankara had been very positive. He said: We have discussed all the problems between the two countries. We have achieved positive results concerning all of them. We shall stand by Turkey and we shall demonstrate our friendship in the future as well.

Van der Klaauw was received by Caglayangil at 1000. In a statement after the hour-long meeting, Caglayangil said that Turkish-Dutch relations have been continuing uninterruptedly for some 370 years. He expressed the belief that this visit will further contribute to the already excellent relations between the two countries. Van der Klaauw said that he was greatly honored by Caglayangil's reception. He added: I am very happy about the good relations between the two countries. The Turkish ambassador in The Hague, Ozdemir Benler, and the Dutch ambassador in Ankara, Hugo Carsten, were also present at the meeting.

CULTURAL SCIENTIFIC TALKS BEGIN WITH VISITING SOVIETS

TA081127 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Text] Turkish-Soviet talks on the cultural and scientific exchange program for 1980-81 have begun in Ankara. The Turkish delegation is being headed by Berhan Ekinci, deputy director of the Bilateral Cultural Relations Department of the Turkish Cultural Relations Department of the Turkish Foreign Ministry Cultural Affairs Directorate General, and the Soviet delegation led by (Vasiliyevich Tollaner), deputy chief of foreign cultural relations of the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs [title as heard]. The talks will continue for 3 days and the new cultural and scientific exchange program to be determined by the end of the talks will be signed ceremoniously on Wednesday.

IRAQI CULTURE MINISTER ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL TALKS

TA091034 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] The Iraqi culture and information minister, Latif Nasif Jasim ad-Dulaymi, arrived in Ankara today for a 4-day official visit. The Iraqi minister was received at the Esenboga Airport by State Minister Ahmet Karahan. In an airport statement Karahan said that he hoped that during talks with the visiting minister progress would be achieved on certain issues existing between the two countries. Karahan said that no issue between the two countries would be allowed to drag. In reply, the Iraqi minister of culture and information said that strong ties based on historic relations existed between Turkey and his country and that as a result there was no issue between the two countries which could not be solved. He added that he was convinced that the period of stagnation in relations between the two countries would soon end. Ad-Dulaymi stressed that his country's relations with all other countries were based upon the principle of noninterference in the internal affairs of others. In the afternoon the visiting minister will be received by Karahan as well as State Minister and Acting Foreign Minister Orhan Eren separately.

GDR SEEKING CLOSER ECONOMIC COOPERATION WITH AUSTRIA

AU091247 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1031 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Michael Kerbler report on Austria-GDR economic relations]

[Summary] In the past months there have been some indications of a more flexible policy in GDR foreign trade with West European countries. "Austria is in the GDR's good books. The loan granted to this East bloc country makes it possible for it to seek intensified commercial activities with Austria in the coming 10 years. Strong interest in an intensification of joint economic activities in third markets was recently shown, on the GDR's part, by State Secretary Gerhard Beil who is in charge of trade with Western countries." In this context the GDR state secretary also mentioned his country's wish to expand exports to Austria.

The GDR's commercial activities are to be stepped up particularly in western Austria, by the establishment in Innsbruck of a GDR trade office as a branch of the GDR trade mission in Vienna. The GDR sees good chances for increasing its exports to Austria in the machinery sector, especially machine tools, but also in the field of electrical engineering, electronics, chemical products and cranes.

The more flexible GDR foreign policy opens for Austria wider possibilities for joint ventures in third markets, the more so as past experiences have shown that Austrian and GDR firms can cooperate very successfully--such joint Austrian-GDR projects have already been implemented in Tunisia, Mauritania, Cameroon and Bangladesh to the full satisfaction of both sides. Like Austria, the GDR sees good long-term prospects in trade with the developing countries. This is why the GDR is trying to interest Austria in new joint projects in north and central African countries as well as in Latin America.

At present, Austria is in sixth place among the GDR's Western trade partners, which is rather good position considering the different sizes of the two countries. The Leipzig fair has again shown how strongly the GDR is interested in expanding trade with Austria: GDR foreign trade enterprises bought more than 300 million schillings worth of Austrian consumer goods, and Austrian capital goods exporters are very optimistic regarding large GDR orders, among others in connection with a steel plant in mid-September during a visit to Austria by GDR State Secretary Beil, and it will be signed by GDR State Council Chairman Honecker personally during an official visit that he will pay to Austria in November.

AUSTRIAN PROPOSALS AT CSCE MEETING PREVIEWED

AU081912 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 6 Sep 80 p 3

[APA report: "Preliminary Talks for CSCE Followup Meeting; Austria To Submit Interesting Proposals"]

[Excerpts] The preparatory talks for the second CSCE followup meeting are to start on Tuesday. As has been learned from the Austrian Foreign Ministry, Austria intends to submit interesting proposals to the second followup meeting, both together with other states, and on its own behalf. Together with Switzerland and Spain a proposal is to be submitted that is aimed at ensuring a better flow of information. In all participating countries the dissemination of foreign periodicals is to be facilitated.

Journalists are to be offered better working conditions in foreign countries. More intensive cooperation of press agencies and of radio and television networks among the CSCE participants is to be sought.

Together with the neutral and nonaligned states Austria will propose an expansion of confidence-building measures in the military sector. A proposal to be submitted by Austria alone provides for cooperation in the energy sector, with the aim of an all-European energy concept and power grid.

The Austrian delegation to the preliminary talks will be headed by Minister Franz Ceska, who played a prominent role at all earlier CSCE negotiations. Undoubtedly it will depend on the course taken by the meeting whether it will be raised to the foreign ministers' level at some time or other. Irrespective of this, however, Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr has decided to participate in the Madrid meeting, and it is to be expected that the foreign ministers of some other countries will do the same.

ITALY'S COLOMBO MEETS WITH AUSTRIAN LEADERS

[Summary] Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo arrived in Vienna on Monday, 8 September, for a 2-day official visit. On Monday afternoon he had his first working talk with Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr, who had welcomed the Italian guest at Schwechat Airport. The topics of this first working talk were questions of the European Communities, including Austria's wishes in the agricultural sector and the financing of the Pyhrn superhighway, the implementation of the South Tirol "package" agreements and bilateral transportation problems. Colombo is accompanied by a delegation including Walter Gardini, director general of the political section of the Italian Foreign Ministry, and Maurizio Buzzi, director general of the ministry's economic section.

On Monday afternoon, Colombo also called on President Kirchschlaeger and Chancellor Kreisky. His talks with the Austrian president were attended by Fausto Bacchetti, Italian ambassador to Austria, and Heinz Laube, Austrian ambassador to Italy. Colombo will continue his talks with Foreign Minister Pahr today.

OPEC'S ORTIZ PREDICTS FURTHER OIL PRICE INCREASES

AU051245 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 4 Sep 80 p 6

[Text] For the time being no end to the oil price increases is in sight. "We must keep increasing crude oil prices until the West finally discovers competitive alternative sources of energy." This was stated by OPEC Secretary General Rene Ortiz (Ecuador) in an interview. The industrialized nations should speed up their efforts to find alternative energy resources. "Until then the oil producing and oil consuming countries must move close together to cope with the crisis," Ortiz declared barely 2 weeks before the OPEC conference in Vienna.

GENSCHER CALLS FOR AFGHANISTAN DISCUSSION AT MADRID CSCE

LD091130 Hamburg DPA in German 1049 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn--According to Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan must be one of the subjects to be discussed at the Madrid CSCE followup conference. In a Deutschlandfunk interview today, Genscher stressed that this is "quite unavoidable," because the policy of detente can only prove itself if it is pursued honestly. "This means that nothing must be swept under the carpet." No one expects the Western states to exclude the subject of Afghanistan.

Genscher also noted that one of the demands of the Polish workers was that the text of the Helsinki Final Act again be published in Poland. This shows that people there have an extremely high regard for the significance of the Final Act. They know that it remains an important document for them, enabling them to better present and justify their interests.

SCHMIDT REPLIES TO CARTER LETTER ON AID FOR POLAND

LD091328 Hamburg DPA in German 1251 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] Bonn--In a letter to U.S. President Jimmy Carter, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has reaffirmed his opinion regarding the need for further Western economic support for Poland. It was learned from Bonn government circles today that the chancellor was replying to a recent letter from Carter in which the President spoke in favor of the Western countries agreeding to help Poland. Carter also communicated his proposals to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

It is said in Bonn that Schmidt's letter to Carter could be interpreted as encouragement to the United States, too, to provide economic aid for Poland. In the letter the chancellor points to the steps already taken by the Federal Republic to assist Poland.

The Federal Government is backing a DM1.2 billion credit by German banks for Poland in that it guarantees DM400 million of the credit.

SCHMIDT CITED ON DETENTE, SALT II, GDR VISIT

LD091310 Hamburg DPA in German 1103 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Excerpts] Berlin--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has appealed to the trade unions to support him and his policy and to oppose attacks on the Federal Government's policy of detente with coll logic. He was addressing the 600 delegates at the 11th conference of the German Railroad Workers' Union in Berlin.

Schmidt said the fact that the United States and the Soviet Union have resumed talks after the two great powers had only communicated with one another in "propagandist statements" following Afghanistan was a success for his and also for French foreign policy. Pointing to the fact that SALT II has still not been ratified by the United States and the Soviet Union, and that there are still no negotiations on Eurostrategic medium-range weapons, the chancellor expressed concern that there could be a new arms race.

Regarding the postponed visit to GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker, Schmidt said there is continuing interest in Bonn and East Berlin in a summit talk. The meeting had been "postponed, not canceled."

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON NATO MANEUVERS

DW091130 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1030 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Excerpt from an interview by reporters Haller and Prinz with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel in the feature "Midday Magazine"--date, place not given--recorded]

[Text] The political situation will not be changed by this maneuver. The whole past decade, the seventies, the decade of detente policy, was simultaneously the decade of the strengthening of the Western alliance and the strengthening of the European Community. Detente policy can be based in the future only on a balance of forces. Only parties with equal rights can conclude treaties with each other, thus making peace more secure. If this is true--and we are deeply convinced it is--exercises are necessary, joint exercises particularly on German territory by our allies' troops stationed here or transported to us. We do this every autumn. It provokes nobody; it only demonstrates our defense capability.

It is one of the great weaknesses of the present agreement that observers of maneuvers can appear only on a voluntary basis. It is up to the respective government or the respective pact. We very much want to get away from that agreement, and there are also suggestions from the East in this respect. It ought to be agreed in the future that the other side will usually be present at maneuvers of a certain size and observe them. This would have two advantages: first, the sides would understand each other better; second, everybody would know that these are just maneuvers--nothing but maneuvers. That would certainly be another element of safeguarding peace in Europe.

HUNGARIAN FOREIGN MINISTER'S VISIT PREVIEWED

LD081328 Hamburg DPA in German 1247 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Excerpts] Bonn, 8 Sep (DPA)--Hungarian Foreign Minister Frigyes Puja will come to Bonn on Wednesday on an official 3-day visit. Puja will meet with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher for two rounds of talks and will also be received by Federal President Karl Carstens and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. Before flying back to Budapest the Hungarian foreign minister will also visit Trier and Mainz. Puja originally intended to come to Bonn at the beginning of this year but the date was postponed because of the clouding of the political climate brought about by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

PRESS VIEWS TASKS FACING NEW POLISH LEADER

DW091038 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Press review on conditions in Poland]

[Text] The Bonn daily DIE WELT writes: The new Polish party chief, Stanislaw Kania, is starting his term under such ominous and mysterious auspices that the obvious question is will this man, who so far has been a largely unknown quantity, find the time and the leeway at all to lead Poland back to a normal path? The pluralization of Poland is spreading in such a way that Warsaw comedians already talk of the establishment of a free communist party aside from the existing state party. How does Kania propose to counteract this if he simultaneously appeals to the fighting spirit of the communists and emphasizes loyalty to the Soviet Union?

KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER notes: Obviously the hope was premature that the agreements of Gdansk and Stettin created a basis on which more codetermination could be implemented in all of Poland and the economy of the country could be cranked up at the same time. The strikes which are flaring up in various factories at the least impair production--but presumably also the political development.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG has this to say: The strikes which continue, and those which break out, probably demonstrated to Gierek heir Kania at the beginning of this week how difficult, and even nearly insoluble, the task is which he must face. We may be allowed to proceed from the assumption that the change was made with the express approval of the Kremlin, presumably even upon the latter's advice, and that the new party chief has been assigned the task paraphrased in Brezhnev's congratulatory cable, namely, to consolidate the position of socialism. Stripped of all the verbose trimmings this means procrastinating, and ultimately preventing the establishment of the independent trade unions, strangling the stirrings of democratization. The strikes show, however, that the Polish workers are beginning to use their power.

The editorial of NUERNBERGER NACHRICHTEN reads in part: The continuing strikes are expressive of a profound distrust in the workers for the Warsaw leadership. Probably nothing has changed in this even after the personnel reshuffle. The plant labor force want tangible guarantees and not nice sounding words. The situation is worsened by zealous orthodox provincial functionaries who apparently still fail to realize that Poland's features have changed in the past 4 weeks.

In this connection SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes: The Kremlin is not hiding its satisfaction at Gierek's replacement by Kania. Obviously the new party chief combines firmness of ideological principles and political reliability with flexibility in methods. Even Lenin recommended detours. provided they lead to the goal being sought. Moscow is primarily interested in seeing Poland calm down, fulfill its commitments in the bloc, and prevent its workers from becoming models. To achieve this Kania obviously has enough leeway.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN, in contrast, advocates this view: The first 48 hours since the reshuffle in the Polish party leadership have already indicated with all due speed how narrow the internal and external leeway is which the new party chief, Stanislaw Kania, has. In view of the officially admitted losses of $1 billion as a consequence of the strikes, losses which are even aggravated by considerable export losses, the hopes voiced by Brezhnev in his greetings cable to Kania that the Polish people can quickly overcome their difficulties under the leadership of the party are hardly attainable.

CHARGES PREFERRED AGAINST IRAQI DIPLOMATS IN WEST BERLIN

LD090545 Hamburg DPA in German 1506 GMT 8 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Berlin, 8 Sep (DPA)--Charges have been preferred today against the two Iraqi diplomats arrested on 1 August for an attempted bombing in West Berlin. A spokesman for the justice authorities announced that the diplomats, who are accredited in East Berlin, are accused in the public prosecutor's charge of attempted murder, an attempted crime involving explosives and the illegal possession of weapons. The two Iraqis remain in custody. According to police investigations, they smuggled explosives from East to West Berlin in a briefcase which was intended to explode at a meeting of a Kurdish student organization.

The Federal Government's efforts to expel the Iraqis were discussed today during a conversation between Governing Mayor Dietrich Stobbe, Justice Senator Gerhard Meyer and the senator for the interior, Peter Ulrich. The Senat apparently does not regard as sufficient Bonn's reasons for wishing to expel the diplomats.

GISCARD OFFICIALLY POSTPONES TRIP TO POLAND

LD091124 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Excerpt] It is now official. President Giscard d'Estaing is giving up his trip to Poland which was planned for the end of the month. On the other hand, Michel Poniatowski may go to Warsaw over the weekend.

GISCARD TIBET TRIP POSSIBLE AFTER PRC VISIT

NC091858 Paris AFP in English 1846 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] Paris, 9 Sep (AFP)--President Valery Giscard d'Estaing plans to make a private trip to Tibet following his state visit to China in the second half of October, informed sources here said today. There has so far been no official confirmation of the projected 48-hour private visit, and many technical details reportedly remain to be worked out. If Mr Giscard d'Estaing does go to Tibet, he will be the first Western head of state to visit the autonomous Chinese region, which recently was partially opened to tourism and foreign contacts after 30 years of Chinese tutelage.

LE FIGARO ON USSR'S STAKE IN POLISH DEVELOPMENTS

LD091347 Paris LE FIGARO in French 26 Aug 80 pp 1, 4

[Paul-Marie de la Gorce article: "The Soviet Union's Satellite Zone"]

[Text] The decisions made by Gierek pave the way for a degree of economic and social development in Poland--these are the results of events in Gdansk so far. Of course these decisions also have political significance--not only because of the government reshuffle which seems to resemble a sacrifice of scapegoats but because of the autonomy promised to the trade unions which may herald the formation of another power within Polish society. In any case the general and, above all, international significance of Mr Gierek's course is clear: They are concessions and changes which, whatever happens, maintain the present government and keep Poland in its present camp. In this respect there is no room for doubt in his intentions or remarks.

This immediately removes the dilemma which the Soviet leaders feared more than anything: having to carry out a tragic military intervention which would have unforseeable results in order to save the government and the regime and keep the country in the "socialist camp"; or witness what they would regard as an unacceptable disintegration process in their sphere of influence in Europe. In explaining the behavior of the Polish leaders, who are deeply aware of the demands of Russian policy, and in explaining Russian policy itself we must not lose sight of the heart of the problem which is, essentially, geopolitical and strategic in nature--whatever the ideological solidarity which might exist between Moscow and Warsaw leaders.

Edoard Herriot [French statesman and author who died in 1957] wrote at the end of his "Souvenirs": "Foreign Policy Is Determined by the Map." The meaning of the East European map is crystal clear: Poland lies between Russia and East Germany. That means that keeping Poland in the "socialist camp"--in other words, within the Warsaw Pact--is the only way of guaranteeing permanent and free communications between the Soviet Union and its former occupation zone which has also become a member of the "camp"; failing this there would be nothing to guarantee the inviolability of ties between the two aside from the East Berlin regime's uncertain future.

This is what is at stake. For the Soviets the point at issue is both the preservation of what they won in 1945, namely, their sphere of influence in East Europe --since their borders proper have changed little since 1941--and the core of their policy and national concerns: the German question. It is important to see things as they are: The desire to permanently eliminate what the German threat had represented to their country's very existence motivated the Soviet leaders after 1945, as it would have motivated any Russian government.

They solved that problem their own way. East Germany's existence enables their army to be right in the center of Europe; it incorporates a country which is the sixth largest industrial power in the workd into the "socialist camp," and it divides the former German power once and for all.

Furthermore it gives the Soviet Union a means of influencing, if not of exerting pressure on, West Europe itself or in any case the FRG. Basically the whole strategic and political order established on the continent after the war depends on maintaining Soviet control over East Germany.

Consequently it also depends on maintaining Soviet control over Poland. The history of the "people's democracies" reveals, directly or indirectly, Poland's vital importance to the survival of the whole system, owing quite simply to its geographic position. Yugoslavia, by comparison, which adopted a dissident stance in 1948, occupied a relatively marginal position though its membership in the "camp" ensured a direct access to the Adriatic and Mediterranean which has since been lost. This is also true of Romania which began to move away from Moscow in 1964. Neither country has had to face a Soviet military intervention.

However, the Hungarian crisis in 1956 came at a time when Poland had just experienced the political upheaval which brought Mr Gomulka to power: The Russian Army's intervention in Budapest showed Warsaw the USSR's cold determination in the face of a regime which had not hesitated to announce that it was breaking its alliance with the socialist countries. The proximity of Czechoslovakia would provide an example for a Poland which had such fragile government that, 2 years later, a new crisis led to Mr Gomulka's replacement by Mr Gierek; that was a risk of contagion which the Soviets were not prepared to run.

Furthermore the disposition of forces in the East confirms Poland's vital importance for the Warsaw Pact's military power. The Polish Army is not the essential factor. Not that it is negligible, but the tasks alloted to it are aimed more at the protection of military infrastructures, means of communication and the control of the huge rear zones necessary to the deployment of the Pact's forces. Some 31 Soviet divisions are targeted on West Europe and deployed in the "people's democracies"--including 20 in East Germany, 5 in Poland, 2 in Czechoslovakia, 4 in Hungary and 3 in the military districts of Leningrad, the Baltic, Belorussia and the Carpathians. These figures speak for themselves. They not only mean that Moscow has forces on the spot which can act in case of a dramatic crisis in Poland; they mean above all that there can be no military disposition of the "socialist camp's" forces which does not have Polish territory at its center.

It would be disastrous for the Soviet leaders to have to resort to armed intervention to save the existing regime in Poland. However, it would be almost inconceivable that they should resign themselves to its disappearance. Rightly or wrongly they regard the maintenance of their sphere of influence in the East as the guarantee of their power in Europe and, consequently, in the world--the precondition of their security and the very basis of their position as a great power.

The time is not right and the conditions not established--if they ever are to be--for them to see things differently. That is enough to determine the direction which is still possible for Poland today.

PERTINI TO VISIT PRC, KUWAIT, HONG KONG, AMMAN

AU092000 Rome ANSA in English 1945 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] Rome, 9 Sep (ANSA)--Italian President Sandro Pertini is set to leave here next week for a state visit to China with scheduled stops in Kuwait, Hong Kong and Amman along the way. His office disclosed today that Thailand was dropped from the presidential itinerary in order to shorten his absence from Italy at a time when the country is going through a "delicate" period.

Accompanied by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, Pertini will be setting out on his travels September 16 aboard an "Alitalia" DC-8. He is due to arrive in Beijing September 18 after two brief overnight stops in Kuwait and Guangzhou and will be off again on September 21 for a tour of Xian, Shanghai and Hanzhou. From there, the Italian chief-of-state will fly to Hong Kong on September 26 for a strictly private visit to the British colony. Pertini is scheduled home at the end of the month, after a visit to Amman on his return trip.

ALGERIA WILLING TO SELL MORE OIL, PRICE UNRESOLVED

[Text] Algeria is willing to supply more natural gas to Italy and to double the capacity of the gas pipeline which is under construction between the two countries. However, the problem of the price of gas has not yet been solved. This is the result of the visit paid to Algiers by Minister of Industry Bisaglia and National Hydrocarbons Agency President Grandi.

PRESS COMMENTS ON RECOGNITION OF MALTA'S NEUTRALITY

AU091855 Rome ANSA in English 1605 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] Rome, 9 Sep (ANSA)--Italy's willingness to guarantee the neutrality of Malta took over the front pages of the nation's dailies today. The reports and editorial comment on the development in relations between Italy and the island republic, lying 58 miles south of Sicily and 180 miles from the coast of North Africa, sprang from yesterday's Foreign Ministry note informing the Valletta government that Italy has been willing for some time to "officially recognize" Malta's neutrality. The note also disclosed that representatives of the two governments have drawn up the terms of an agreement which would involve the island's neutrality and "various forms of diplomatic support, economic, financial and technical aid" along with "other measures of guarantee" from Italy. Press commentators agreed that the Foreign Ministry statement should come as a "satisfactory response" to Maltese Prime Minister Dom Mintoff's request for "guarantees" as a hedge against possible "attacks against the independence of Malta," a request formulated against the background of deteriorating relations between the Mediterranean island republic and Libyan Jamahiriyah.

According to the Milan paper, IL GIORNO, "the neutrality of Malta should now be guaranteed militarily" by Italy and the islands should come under the umbrella of the North Atlantic Treaty Organizations.

Milan's authoritative CORRIERE DELLA SERA took the view that the Italian note represents an official request for Malta to "formally commit itself, like Switzerland and Austria, to neutrality on the international level." Only in this fashion, CORRIERE added, could the "Italo-Maltese pact" be set in motion.

The Turin paper, LA STAMPA, put the editorial accent on "other measures which could be adopted in the case of a threat to or a violation of Malta's neutrality." According to STAMPA, the military steps alluded to in the Italian diplomatic note would be implemented only if "judged necessary" by all the members of the Atlantic Alliance and by prior agreement on the terms of the nation's "neutral status".

Another interpretation of the note came in the pages of the Rome pro-Communist paper, PAESE SERA, which told its readers that Italy has already virtually granted "military guarantees to Malta". The Foreign Ministry statement reads "like a signal sent to the Libya of Al-Qadhdhafi," PAESE affirmed and added, "uncertainties abound, economic relations between Libya and Italy are very close and could be endangered by a diplomatic act excessively weighted to one side".

The conservative Milan daily, IL GIORNALE NUOVO, applauded the development with the statement that "Malta will proclaim itself neutral" and there is already "an Italian commitment to defend it," a commitment which will be applied "just as soon as the government of the islands announces its new juridical status in international quarters. The delay was snapped [as received] evidently by the knowledge that Italy is being offered a chance to erect a real Mediterranean policy".

Another conservative paper, Rome's IL TEMPO, [words indistinct] the report of the Foreign Ministry note with a dispatch from Valletta which underscores the Maltese leaders' "official silence on the communique".

L'UNITA BACKS MINTOFF STANCE ON COOPERATION OF MEDITERRANEAN STATES

LD081041 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 4 Sep 80 p 1

[Gian Carlo Lannutti commentary: "Possible Powder Keg"]

[Text] In an interview granted to our paper on 30 May this year, Maltese Prime Minister Dom Mintoff stressed at some length the need for Europe to have a "Mediterranean vocation," the possibility of building a bridge across the Mediterranean linking Europe, the Middle East and Africa and to develop a policy of peace and cooperation; but he also stressed "a deafness, tardiness and reluctance on Europe's part to make a real commitment in this direction." And he issued the following warning: "To exert real influence Europe needs the other Mediterranean countries' support and cooperation, but it cannot secure such support and cooperation unless it decides to exert an influence." It is partly in the light of these remarks that Dom Mintoff's meetings in Rome acquire their full significance.

Indeed, if the Maltese prime minister's visit to Rome is dictated by immediate specific considerations (the sudden and in many respects unexpected crisis in relations with Libya, the desire to impart a new thrust to economic and political cooperation between Italy and Malta), it also constitutes a reason for broader reflection embracing the role and future in the present international situation of the countries washed by the Mediterranean (or even, as in the case of Malta or most of Italy, immersed in it).

Indeed, if we limit our attention to the Libyan-Maltese dispute over the demarcation of territorial waters (and thus sovereignty over the presumed oilfield on the bank of Medina in the 198 km of sea separating the coasts), we would in fact be limiting our attention to Valletta's dream of achieving economic self-sufficiency after so many years of dependence on Libyan aid or to the "betrayed benefactor" syndrome which seems to be prevailing in Tripoli. And we would see on Italy's part only the somewhat sly ruse of someone taking advantage of a third party's (Al-Qadhdhafi's) misfortune.

There is something more, however, and this is why Dom Mintoff's remarks cited at the beginning retain their full topicality. The crisis between Malta and Libya exploded right in the heart of a Mediterranean which is already experiencing too many crises and conflicts. Let us recall them briefly: The problem of Cyprus, invaded by Turkey, and the resulting conflict between Athens and Ankara; the terrorist subversion in Turkey; the Middle East, with the Lebanese tragedy and the permanent conflict between Arabs and Israelis; the tension between Libya and Egypt, which 3 years ago led to a border war; the conflict between Morocco and Algeria over the latter's support for the Polisario guerrillas; the recent French intervention in Tunisia following the Qafsa uprising. Not to mention, on the one hand, the Iranian events' direct or indirect influence on the "Islamic" coast of the Mediterranean and, on the other, the presence in this sea of a U.S. nuclear fleet and a considerable number of Soviet Navy ships.

Many things can be understood within this framework. For instance, one can understand who might benefit from a definitive split between Malta and Libya--the former loyal to a policy of neutrality and nonalignment (and therefore at least as "uncomfortable" as was Makarios' Cyprus) and the latter a leading element in the "Arab Steadfastness Confrontation Front" (which not by chance is right now trying to strengthen its links with Al-Asad's Syria).

Can Italy help defuse some of these crises? The answer is generally "yes" and especially so with regard to the Libyan-Maltese dispute. We have historical and cultural ties with Malta which there is no need to go into here. In any case negotiations have been going on for some time to guarantee the island's "neutrality" and involving Italy together with Libya, Algeria and France, though hitherto not much progress has been made. As for Libya, it is sufficient to point out that Italy is its principal trading partner (2 trillion lire worth of goods sold last year and 1.8 trillion lire worth of contracts already signed for the next 3 years) and that Libya hosts no less than 18,000 Italians whose remittances (according to calculations by our embassy in Tripoli) total about 18 billion lire a month in valuable currency (Libya being one of our main oil suppliers). And we have only mentioned the purely economic aspects, leaving aside the inevitable value as a "test bench" with respect to the Third World of the state of relations between a former colonizing country such as Italy and a former colonial, emergent and non-aligned country such as Libya. Italian mediation between Tripoli and Valletta would therefore be much more effective than a small-scale gunboat policy.

Unfortunately, hitherto it does not seem that this role has been understood, or at least consistently researched. Of course, Dom Mintoff is now in Rome, 3 days ago Minister Colombo was in Tunis and tomorrow Egyptian Vice President Mubarak will arrive in Rome. But a few visits are not enough to "create" a policy. It is not enough, if one continues to act in accordance with a bloc mentality, if one continues to be towed along by (or to act on behalf of) the United States; if, in short, one fails to understand that the present world situation demands the bold and autonomous decisions that others have already taken. This is shown in an examplary and dramatic fashion by events in Iran, especially following Carter's abortive raid.

The battle for a Mediterranean that is a "sea of peace and cooperation" and not a area of clashes and conflict between the blocs is not an obsession on Dom Mintoff's part or an invention by the Italian Communists. It is the only path consistent with the Mediterranean peoples' interests, the only one that can help build a world based on new and just relations.

RADICAL PARTY CLAIMS ILLEGAL DC FINANCING

AU100905 Rome ANSA in English 0805 GMT 10 Sep 80

[Text] Rome, September 10 (ANSA)--Australia's Nugant-Hand Bank, which is currently under the microscope of investigative journalists trying to find evidence of its alleged ties with the CIA, has cropped up in the news in Italy. The small but vocal Radical Party has announced that it has asked the Rome public prosecutor's office to investigate press reports that the ruling Christian Democrat Party (DC) has received illegal financing from the Australian bank. The radical party said that the report first appeared in the daily THE AUSTRALIAN in its September first edition and that lower house speaker Nilde Jotti has made a point of following the case closely since, "if the Nugant-Hand Bank did disburse funds to the DC, the sum does not appear in the party's accounts and, consequently, its quota of public party financing could be suspended".

The Christian Democrat Party on Monday said the reports of alleged financing are "completely groundless". Recent articles in the British press speculated that Nugant-Hand had been set up by the CIA for channelling funds used for its covert operations in Southeast Asia.

EXPRESSO ON U.S. QUEST FOR NAVAL BASE IN PORTUGAL

LD080913 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 23 Aug 80 p 5

[Miguel Almeida Fernandes report: "U.S. Aircraft Carriers Will Be Able To Stop Over in Portugal"]

[Text] Portugal is prepared to grant the United States a seaport for the permanent supply of its aircraft carriers, provided some demands put forward by the Lisbon government are met beforehand, EXPRESSO has learned from a reliable source.

The Democratic Alliance government, however, is waiting for Washington to make a formal proposal before finally making a pronouncement on the matter.

The Portuguese reply will probably be given in mid-November, during the meeting of defense ministers of the NATO member states in The Hague, in the Netherlands.

It should be recalled in this connection that the possible U.S. proposal follows a study request made by the United States to some NATO countries--specifically, Portugal, France and Britain--with a view to being able to have a naval base on Europe's southern flank.

The demands Portugal has already put to the United States include the setting up of a new naval base, in addition to the one in Alfeite, possibly to be constructed in the Algarve, and the transformation of the Oeiras Comiberlant[Iberian Atlantic Command] into Sicberlant [expansion unknown].

This would mean that the Comiberlant would cease to be a subcommand post and be transformed into a NATO command center, and that its commander would become a Portuguese three-star general or admiral (as is the case in Turkey), instead of a foreign military man with the rank of general but with only two stars.

The Sicberlant should also expand its area of activity to the Azores region, ending the existing situation. That autonomous region currently comes under a NATO subcommand located in the United States and not the Oeiras Comiberlant.

It should be stressed in this connection that the United States has rejected Portuguese pressures for that archipelago to be covered by the Oeiras Comiberlant.

In the meantime a U.S. military delegation was recently in Portugal, where it visited various national ports.

The visit, which took place amidst the utmost secrecy, enabled the United States to gather information so as to be able to opt for one of the ports located on our territory.

Initially, the delegation wanted the port granted to be that of Lisbon--something which the national authorities immediately rejected, stating that the capital's port was beyond any possibility of negotiation. Prominent among the arguments cited is the very location of the port, close to a large urban center, and the fact that this would turn Lisbon into a priority target for the Warsaw Pact. Accordingly, the U.S. delegation visited the ports of Matosinhos, Aveipo, Sines, Lagos and Portimao. Matosinhos was rejected by the United States because of lack of facilities, while that of Aveipo, although it was to Washington's liking, has grave shortcomings. Moreover, the shallowness of that port would entail carrying out a number of dredging operations so that it could serve as a supply base for the aircraft carriers.

In light of this situation, Portugal suggested that the ideal port would be Sines. According to a government source, the advantages for Portugal in granting this port would be obvious, since this would compel the United States to make infrastructure investments in that southern area of the country.

However, the U.S. delegation did not make a pronouncement on Sines or the two Algarve ports which it visited, and it is expected that it will adopt a final stance when it formally makes its proposal.

The benefits which Portugal would gain from the setting up of a U.S. naval base on our territory include the major source of foreign currency which this would represent. In fact a naval base for aircraft carriers will have a contingent of about 20,000 men permanently in the country.

However, one definite point is the Portuguese demand that the port's security be provided by U.S. troops. This demand is connected with the fact that the Portuguese authorities wish to avoid diplomatically embarrassing situations, similar to that which occurred in 1975, with the attack against the Spanish Embassy in Lisbon.

The basic reason which apparently led the United States to request from our country the possible granting of a naval base stems from the delicate situation existing in the Mediterranean area. This is the area of concentration of the majority of the U.S. aircraft carriers, which, in the event of a world war scenario, have in theory only two possible outlets--the Suez Canal or Gibraltar. But according to military experts, both Suez and Gibraltar are areas which offer no guarantees of defense from the military viewpoint, and this, of course, jeopardizes the whole of U.S. naval power. Within this context, a port on the southern flank, near to the Mediterranean, is deemed essential by the United States.

In the meantime it is acknowledged that Portugal could also authorize the passage of U.S. and NATO nuclear submarines in our waters, in addition to considering the transformation of the Beja base into an operational support center for the Atlantic alliance's 7th squadron.

However, Portugal has apparently already informed the United States that the issue of the Beja base depends on Bonn, since it has been granted to the FRG as a training base. It is known that Bonn is prepared to study a possible sharing of the base with the United States, provided that it is given something in return.

With respect to the possible construction in Portugal of a gigantic pipeline, which would link Sines with Leixoes, EXPRESSO has learned that the matter is at a standstill.

It should be recalled that the construction of this pipeline would enable our country to have the use of a more rapid and cheaper fuel distribution network. On the other hand, government sources have revealed that the investment is extremely expensive for Portugal and would have profound effects on the formulation of the medium-term plan.

Political observers point out that the openness displayed by the Democratic Alliance government toward the United States and NATO is due essentially to Spain's possible entry into the Atlantic alliance. Although Portugal, the same observers say, is obliged to officially support Spain's application, the fact is that this will relegate our country to a secondary position on the international chessboard.

It is within this context that Defense Minister Amaro da Costa has publicly supported the strengthening of NATO and that the national authorities seem more flexible with respect to granting the United States naval bases. On the other hand, the alliance member countries are continuing to help our country militarily. The handing over to Portugal of three ultramodern Dutch-made frigates is being envisaged. The vessels, which cost $400 million, of which Portugal has paid only half, constitute a strengthening of our navy.

PARTIES REACT TO NEW CABINET COMPOSITION

LD091218 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] Immediately after the composition of the new government was made known, the PSOE [Spanish Socialist Workers Party] press secretary's office issued a note, the contents of which we now summarize:

First, it says that the new cabinet is one more attempt by the prime minister to seek a way out of the permanent crisis deriving from the UCD's [Union of Democratic Center] lack of a political line.

Second, the changes this time amount to bringing back into the government former ministers who were removed because it was considered that they had made a mess of their activities.

The third point in the note says that the reappearance of the barons of the UCD in the government results from the conflicting pressures which exist within the party, striving to obtain personal power, and that this makes it impossible for the UCD to offer a government team which is coherent and sufficiently authoritative to be able to face up to its responsibilities.

The fourth point is as follows: The way in which the present changes in the government have been made, recalling the May crisis, and the actual makeup of the new cabinet, mean that the latter really has very little credibility to be able to confront the country's problems and offer the people the necessary hope.

Finally, the PSOE says, once it sees what explanations are given regarding the crisis and the program the new government presents in parliament, it will set out its definitive conclusions in the course of the debate on the matter, which ought to be televised in its entirety in order to give the public complete information.

An even tougher reaction comes from the PCE, which will today be making an official statement, following yesterday's meeting of its executive committee. Here is Ramon Tamames [PCE Executive Committee member]:

[Begin recording] This has been a truly exceptional government crisis within the present constitutional framework. It makes one think rather of the changes of government which occurred under the previous regime.

As far as one can judge, the results of it are not going to be novel. It seems to amount more than anything to a redistribution of power within the UCD. The barons acquire more importance within the government, and in this sense the government is a more weighty one.

But the crisis really hinged on the replacement of Abril Martorell, who had lately been advising a way out of the crisis on the basis of an agreement between the UCD and PSOE, something which Suarez would not hear of. Yet the new deputy prime minister for economic affairs is a man from the world of big capital, the world of banking, who hardly seems to offer the prospect of being able to offer any fundamental basis for agreement with the majority social forces in the production sector.

So, as I see it, whatever store may be set by pacts with Catalans, or Basques or other minority groups, this must be a government of transition with no clear way ahead and lacking a goal.

And if they are saying now that they are going to go all out for 5 percent growth in GNP this is simply because they are already thinking ahead to early elections, perhaps in 1981 or at the latest in 1982. This government is a patch-up job which resolves nothing. [end recording]

And now an opinion from the right, from the Democratic Coalition. Here is Jose Maria de Areilza:

[Begin recording] The new government can be regarded as the same government. The five variants of the Suarez government which have been put together in the last 4 years have all been of the same type, that is, a single-party government. This is why I deem it inappropriate to call this a new government. For me it is the same old government.

The fact that some major figures in the party have been brought in, for instance, Martin Villa, Fernandez Ordonez and Alberto Oliart, strikes me as very positive inasmuch as these are men of great experience who are being brought in to handle day-to-day work. [end recording]

Carrillo's 'Radical Opposition'

LD091508 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] During a break in the meetings of the PCE Executive Committee, which continue today, party Secretary General Santiago Carrillo made the following remarks:

[Begin recording] [correspondent] Don Santiago, so this time it is not a government of national unity?

[Carrillo] Come, come, I don't think anybody was expecting a government of national unity, and we expected it less than anybody. What we have now is a UCD government, as we have had all along. It is a UDC government which has some merit and some use for Suarez for restoring, to some extent, unity within his own party. It must be said that this has been made possible for him by the agreements, hitherto kept secret, with the Democratic Convergence of Catalonia and the Democratic Union of Catalonia. And it would be interesting for both Catalan and Spanish opinion in general to know the exact nature of these agreements. So far they have remained a mystery.

This government, although it includes figures of greater importance—because quite clearly Fernandez Ordonez is a much more important figure than was, for instance, Otero Novas, who now leaves the government, and more important than a number of other outgoing ministers--continues in practice to be the same government as the one we have had up to now.

Our attitude to it is one of radical opposition, because as we see it this is not a government which can resolve the problems facing the country, which I would say come down very specifically to two problems: that of the autonomies question, which as far as we can see is not advanced by these secret agreements with Catalan and Basque nationalists; and that of unemployment, which likewise will not be resolved by the mere device of replacing Abril Martorell with Calvo-Sotelo. Therefore, our stance in relation to the government, although we are awaiting its program so as to be able to define things more precisely, will be one of radical opposition. [end recording]

NEW FOREIGN MINISTER AFFIRMS CONTINUITY OF POLICY

LD091412 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] The new foreign minister, Jose Pedro Perez Llorca told journalists at the end of the inaugural session of the preparatory phase of the CSCE session that Marcelino Oreja Aguirre, his predecessor, had been: a magnificent foreign minister, whose example I believe will live on in the work of this ministry.

He said that foreign policy will remain fundamentally the same, since, he said, the government continues to be constituted from the UCD and our aims are therefore practically the same.

FOREIGN MINISTER CITED ON POLAND, CONTINGENCY STOCKPILING

LD091413 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 2 Sep 80 p 9

[Morten Fyhn report: "Sympathy in Scandinavia for Polish Workers"]

[Text] All the Scandinavian foreign ministers understand the Polish workers' struggle for better conditions and express satisfaction with the agreement reached between the strikers and Polish authorities. The ministers have expressed these views both in their respective countries and also at a press conference in Oslo yesterday at the conclusion of the semiannual Scandinavian foreign ministers meeting.

Poland is not mentioned once by name in the comprehensive communique, but in it the ministers stress the importance of detailed fulfillment of all the principles in the Helsinki Final Act and of the effective implementation of its provisions. The importance of settling international conflicts and differences of interest by peaceful means in accordance with the UN Charter's principles, in which respect for the territorial integrity of states and the avoidance of force are central, was also emphasized.

According to Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund, the reason why the situation in Poland was not directly mentioned in the communique was the principle of noninterference in another country's internal affairs. Swedish Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten added that this principle is nevertheless no obstacle to stating that the situation in Poland concerns the relationship between communism and democracy.

Frydenlund said at the press conference that Norwegian plans for the contingency stockpiling of military equipment for U.S. forces had not been discussed by the Scandinavian ministers at the meeting. After being asked several questions on the matter he resignedly explained that it is a misunderstanding when it is claimed that the government had first reached a decision on American stockpiling and had then gotten cold feet. It is only the principle of contingency stockpiling that has been approved by the Storting, not the individual arrangements, he said. Neither Finland nor Sweden wished to make any statement on whether American stockpiling alters the balance in Scandinavia. However, both countries stressed that they have so far been satisfied with Norway's foreign and security policies. Frydenlund added that contingency stockpiling will not take place in such a way that it may have consequences for Norway's neighbors.

GOVERNMENT SEEN AS FLEXIBLE ON DEFENSE BUDGET INCREASE

[Text] "The prime minister appears to be flexible, and the government has not entirely excluded the possibility of the necessary increase in the defense budget."

So said Conservative defense policy spokesman Palle Simonsen after Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen's reply to him concerning the government's attitude to a 1978 NATO resolution in Washington for an increase of 3 percent in member nations' defense budgets. Palle Simonsen had asked if the prime minister shared the view that the government ought to follow decisions at an international level which it has itself taken part in and supported.

In his reply the prime minister said that "the government has at no time stated whether it might be possible to follow this call (from the NATO meeting—BERLINGSKE TIDENDE editorial note).

"On the contrary, it has not only been announced that there will be no increase in defense spending in the present defense agreement period, but reservations have also been expressed with regard to what results already protracted negotiations on a new defense agreement may have. What the Danish attitude to the stated target will be will depend in the final analysis on the political solution the parties in the Folketing find possible and defensible in their common evaluation of the question."

Palle Simonsen said in an assessment that he reads the prime minister's reply as an expression of the government's admission of its responsibility and a desire for an opening with regard to the coming defense negotiations.

In the coming defense negotiations, which Palle Simonsen expects to start very soon after the Social Democratic Party Congress, the Conservatives will attach great importance to clarifying what sort of a defense force it is that the government wants. "It will need more money, but first let us discuss what standard our defenses are to be. But there is nothing in the present situation that makes it possible to for us to reduce the defense forces' strength targets," Palle Simonsen stressed.

PAPER SEES MOSCOW ACCEPTING 'TACTICAL RETREAT' IN POLAND

LD091033 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 2 Sep 80 p 10

[Editorial: "Skepticism in the Soviet Union"]

[Text] No wonder the Soviet Union's communist leaders look with the greatest skepticism on the agreement between the Polish Government and the Gdansk strike committee that led to the resumption of work in the Baltic ports yesterday. Taken at face value and in good faith, it could liberalize extremely important parts of Poland's national life, and the Soviet leaders are obviously as unsure as the strike leaders in the Silesian coalmines whether it is to be taken seriously. Everyone on all sides, and all with good reason, is suspicious of the new men in the government and party leadership and of their intentions.

The workers in Silesia have a lapful of bad experiences with promises from the party leaders. They were disappointed after the strike in 1971, and they were disappointed again in 1976. They have every reason to fear that the promises of great reforms that their Gdansk colleagues have obtained will turn out to be just as hollow and perishable. It is as if too much has been promised: higher wages; more meat for the home market; the abolition of party functionaries' privileges; limits on censorship; the release of political prisoners; religious services on television; and, first and foremost, the right to strike and to form self-governing trade unions. And perhaps the promises are so abundant precisely because they have carefully built into them the reservations which can be used to annul them. Many of the promises are declarations of intent, and before the intentions can be turned into actions they must be shaped in regulations and draft laws by institutions set up for the purpose, but which are opposed to them.

The Russians have several reasons to be suspicious of the agreements from Gdansk. It is true that the general principle has been established that the workers will in all ways respect the Communist Party's leading role in society, so that the Soviet Union will thus have been given a guarantee against an incipient change of political system. The more politicized reforms are, however, so critical of and subversive with respect to the system that every communist dogmatist must shudder at the thought that they will reach full development. If the Soviet Union has approved the need for concessions to solve the immediate strike situation, it must at the same time be obliged to make public the fundamental Soviet skepticism about and dislike of them, in order to bar the way to reformist policies elsewhere. And if the Soviet Union accepts the fact that a tactical retreat is justified, Moscow must at the same time feel the deepest distrust of the new men appointed to lead it.

They are all spokesmen for internal opposition within the party, once carefully removed as too flexible and politically unreliable individuals. Edward Gierek still at his post guarantees a loyal and unfailing Polish attitude to the Soviet Union, but how long his authority will survive must be an unanswered question for the leaders in Moscow after this summer.

POLISH SETTLEMENT SEEN AS 'STEP TOWARD A HUMANE EUROPE'

LD091501 Helsinki HELSINGIN SANOMAT in Finnish 2 Sep 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Interpretations Will Determine Strike Outcome"]

[Text] The settlement reached in northern Poland's industrial center is not a final solution to the Polish crisis. Only the coming months and years will show in what direction the present situation will develop. The solution will lie in how the results of the recent negotiations are interpreted. From the viewpoint of the striking workers history does not suggest a favorable interpretation, since the promises won in the struggles of 1956 and 1970 were very quickly annulled.

The present situation is in many respects different than before. The embryonic self-governing trade unions are already functioning and the strike committees, now transformed into workers' committees, are watching over the implementation of the settlement that was reached. During the strike the workers demonstrated their political strength, and a new wave of strikes would be easy to start if the government tried to water down its promises.

The workers also have behind them an achievement unique in post-World War II Europe--the government of a socialist country has never before been forced to make such great political and economic concessions in a negotiating situation which had led to a labor conflict.

Furture developments depend on three basic political questions: First, can a socialist society really endure a free trade union movement, a real expansion of the freedom of speech, and a real right to strike? Or will those in power see that the heresy is pulled up by its roots as soon as possible, because the freedoms mentioned above conflict with the supremacy which the Communist Party stipulates for itself?

Second, will the Polish workers stop here or will they start to use the results they have already achieved as a springboard to even more demands? It is obvious that all the country's workers want to have the same benefits as the workers in the north. Third, will the movement and its concomitant demands spread to the other socialist nations?

The agreement's economic aspects are also problematical; Poland's economy is on a very weak footing, and the fulfillment of the workers' demands will mean a noticeable increase in the burden placed on it. For example, easing the housing shortage needs large resources of which Poland has no more after the strike than before.

The agreement, reached without the use of force, is in any case historic. It bears witness to how Europe has changed in the last years and decades. We must examine the Polish labor crisis as a part of developments since World War II. In this period things considered essential by Europeans--like the basic freedoms--have grown in number. At the same time, the use of force has become more difficult than in the past. The basic trend has been for the better, although there have been obvious cases of backlash.

The 1980 events in Poland have proved, at least up to the present, to be a new step toward a humane Europe.

ARBEIDERBLADET ON SIGNIFICANCE OF POLISH SETTLEMENT

LD091423 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 2 Sep 80 p 4

[Editorial: "New Epoch in Poland"]

[Text] "We did not achieve everything, but we pushed through a great number of our demands. We have won what was possible in the present situation, and the rest will come little by little, for we have gained the most important thing, the right to form our own independent trade unions." So said the striking Polish workers' leading elected representative Lech Walesa Sunday [31 August] when together with Deputy Prime Minister Jagielski he signed an agreement forged in tough open negotiations. The agreement put an end to a 2-month-long wave of strikes involving several hundred thousand workers.

Both the strikes and the agreement represent something new in the communist-ruled part of Europe. There is every reason to believe that a new epoch has begun in Poland, regardless of the outcome of the next round in the tug of war. Poland will be changed no matter what.

The coming days, weeks and months, when the agreement's principles will be put into effect, will be as exciting as the last few weeks have been. Through their united action in the face of the ruling communists (who claim that they rule in the people's behalf) the striking Polish workers have succeeded in getting those in power to promise also to soften their dictatorship over the working class, which has felt that it has been deemed incapable of looking after its own affairs. If the agreement is faithfully followed by the state, the Poles will have rights that have always been denied the citizens in communist-ruled states under the Soviet Union's control: they will, among other things, have workers organizations governed by their members outside the party's control. They will have a considerable degree of freedom in national debate and of openness in the state-controlled media.

The workers' negotiators showed for their part that sense of reality that consists in respecting the enforced framework for the existence of the Polish state. The workers promise that the new self-governing trade union movement will not act as a political party; they recognize the Communist Party's "leading role in the state," society's rights of ownership of the means of production and "the existing international alliance system," which is to say Poland's membership in the Soviet-controlled power bloc.

The binding promises of freedom of organization, the right to strike and the relaxation of censorship that have been given to the Polish workers have until now had little room in the East European communist regimes' raison d'etre. Thus the agreement between workers and authorities in Poland includes elements that until now have stood in opposition to one another. To unite these opposing elements the Polish regime must be prepared--without being hindered by Moscow--to adopt a considerably softer interpretation of "the Communist Party's leading role."

There is much that indicates that all this will happen, and that despite all the difficulties the agreement will be honored by the regime. For what is the alternative?

On previous occasions the regime has broken promises to the workers and been able to turn the clock back without any major problems. But it is hardly likely that the remarkably well-organized and disciplined workers who staged this summer's strike would passively accept those in power breaking the agreement and simply abandon their demands.

If those in power go back on their promises they will be risking much more than on previous occasions. Both the authorities and the strikers have shown that they are aware of this. They are also aware that today's Poland is a powder keg that does not need much to detonate it. Unlike the conflicts in 1970 and 1976, the workers have not taken part in street demonstrations, nor in attacks on party offices and police stations. And on the other hand force has not been used against the strikers.

This gives us reason to hope that those in power will not hit on the idea of disrupting the game, even though a faithful implementation of the agreement with the workers could be humiliating for a ruling party which the people regard with deep suspicion. But might not the implementation of the agreement mean a chance for the party to begin a dialogue with the people, in that the people are now being included in the discussions of how Poland is to get out of its deep economic impasse? We have seen a clear demonstration in Poland that economic reforms not supported by the people are of little use.

PAPER REVIEWS GIEREK'S RISE TO POWER, FATE

LD091349 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 7 Sep 80 p 2

[Editorial: "The Change in Poland"]

[Text] In Stanislaw Kania the Soviet bloc gets its hitherto most anonymous leader figure.

Personnel changes at the highlest levels are rare within the Warsaw Pact countries. The last time a change took place was in East Germany, the GDR, in 1971 when Erich Honecker succeeded Ulbricht. The lack of routine in such changes fans the fire of speculation in the rest of the world. Nor in the case of Poland is it a question of a well and long prepared change. It has rather been improvised by a party apparatus under pressure.

It is a bitterly ironic fate that has befallen Edward Gierek. Revolutionary events once brought him to power as the man the situation demanded. Revolutionary events have forced him out as a man without a convincing personal capacity to master a critical situation.

Outwardly Gierek has played the role of spokesman for the Polish nation in recent weeks. As far as we have been able to see, he has enjoyed the stable confidence of the Kremlin's men of power. But he has also been remarkably well though of in the West.

Both sides have made use of his services when making contacts to further detente. It was, typically enough, Gierek who was host when Presidents Giscard d'Estaing and Brezhnev met in the spring despite the Afghanistan crisis--a meeting which made it easier for Federal Chancellor Schmidt to visit Moscow.

The West based its good opinion on Gierek on the impression that he was by communist standards a liberal who through his style of government kept pure repression out of Poland. Gierek has most often been seen as a practical politician with a sense of realities, not least economic realities.

It is not doubt true that Edward Gierek has been opposed to the idea of keeping Poland's millions in check through the use of tough measures. Many members of the opposition and intellectuals and not least the Jewish population fragment have nevertheless been persecuted. But Gierek's basic notion seems to have been to keep the vast majority of people in a good mood, not through reforms but by offering them a gradual increase in living standards. Before he became party leader he had been successful as a good housekeeper in the southern industrial region of Slask.

But as a national housekeeper Gierek did not have a real plan to manage the economy when conditions became drastically worse in the mid-seventies. Almost like a ghostly reminder of his predecessor Gomulka, he seems to have relied on his old public relations tricks and suppressed a reality which made increasing demands for practical action. The many confessions toward the end and the removal of leading functionaries must not be allowed to make too strong an impression, since such actions have long been part of the rhetoric of those in power in Poland.

Perhaps Gierek really became seriously ill on Friday morning. But it had been said for several days that his days as a party leader were numbered. Normally the party would have waited to see how the illness developed before a successor was appointed. The swift course of events could even have taken Moscow by surprise. At any rate it took a strikingly long time before the Soviet Union officially noted the Polish change.

History repeats itself. Unrest in communist Poland has led to several changes of party leadership. But both Gomulka in 1956 and Gierek in 1970 were nationally known figures even before their accession to power. Gomulka had been party leader once before, in the years after the war. Gierek had been considered the future party leader from the time when the 1968 Czechoslovak crisis created tensions in the Polish party. Now in 1980 we are faced with a name unknown to the general public.

Without knowing how the arguments went among a split party leadership we can, however, note that no one dared bet on Stefan Olszowski, a controversial figure with perhaps somewhat unjustified reputation for being a liberal. Instead a politician who has been responsible for the security service has been chosen--not usually a post associated with an enlightened outlook.

How Stanislaw Kania will attempt to meet the demands for changes will be decisive for future communist developments even outside Poland's boundaries. Gierek wasted the whole of his capital of popular confidence--and now one of his close colleagues has also been unmasked as a swindler on a grand scale. Kania is without popular confidence in a time of great adjustments with regard to whether the party will or can be allowed to keep its promises. Calls for real influence have been raised in the Polish parliament. This sounds revolutionary, but they occurred in 1956 too.

Poland's workers have not fought for and won the right to elect their country's leaders. If this was the case the new party chief would not be called Stanislaw Kania. But with their demands for a better, more worthy society they have for the third time driven the country's leading politican out of power. No one in power in Poland can ignore than any longer.

UK EMBASSY IN TEHRAN SHUT DOWN

LD091256 London BBC Television Network in English 1145 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] Britain closes its embassy in Tehran as the deportations begin of the Iranian students arrested in London. The announcement from the Foreign Office came only a few minutes ago. It does not mean breaking diplomatic relations, but closing the embassy follows weeks of harassment and demonstrations outside the building. Several times there work had to be suspended altogether. Relations with Iran deteriorated rapidly after the arrest here of Iranian students during demonstrations in London. This morning as deportation orders were signed on three of them, the four remaining British diplomats in Tehran left Iran. They were flown out before dawn this morning in what was virtually a cloak and dagger operation.

A statement from the Foreign Office said: We have considered it advisable to withdraw our representation in Iran during the present difficult and unpredictable period in our relations with Iran.

Behind the Foreign Office's diplomatically worded statement lies a story of some drama. The decision to pull out our remaining diplomats and close down the embassy was taken at the end of last week. But information reached Whitehall that if the Iranian students arrested in London were deported, the embassy might be occupied and the diplomats there taken hostage.

There have already been almost daily demonstrations outside the 4-acre embassy compound in central Tehran fuelled by reports in Iranian newspapers that the students held in London were being tortured by police and prison authorities. One allegation was that a woman student had been given urine to drink when she asked for medicine. In London, too, Iranian students were stoking up anti-British feelings and demonstrating outside Parliament in support of those detained and turning up outside the courts when they were appearing.

The Foreign Office, even had it wanted to, could not have intervened. Once those arrested had refused to give their names and been recommended for deportation for that, not for their original offense, the law states there must be a 3-week period to allow an appeal. At any time the students could have given their names and would in all probability have been released. Those who indicated they wanted to, were persuaded by others not to do so.

Iran's new Prime Minister Mohammed 'Ali Raja'i warned at the end of last week that unless Britain stopped what he called "this cruelty toward the students," appropriate but unspecified actions would be taken. Sir John Graham, our former ambassador in Iran and himself a target for accusations that he's organized a spy ring there, recommended, as the senior Foreign Office man keeping an eye on developments, that the point had been reached at which the remaining staff were in danger. The decision to pull out was taken. The problem was that if the Iranian Revolutionary Committee, who in effect run the country whatever the government might say, heard about the decision, they would probably have laid siege to the embassy.

First to be brought out at the weekend was David Reddaway, the diplomat who had acted as spokesman for the embassy and was a particular target for the Iranian demonstrators' anger. That left three diplomats and two wives and they still had to cross the most difficult area--getting past the revolutionary guards who run Tehran airport. The 90 Britons remaining in Iran were told of the pull-out decision last night. If news of that decision had leaked out, those five would probably have been stopped at Tehran airport this morning. As it was, the secret was kept and they're due to land at Heathrow about now.

The decision to pull out was not taken lightly by the Foreign Office because there are still four Britons held by the Iranians and facing the possibility of a trial as spies.

Jean Waddell, secretary to the Anglican bishop of Iran, was detained by the Revolutionary Committee in Esfahan at the beginning of August when she applied for permission to leave the country. Earlier this year she was tied up by gunmen and shot at pointblank range. British diplomats have been refused access to her. Missionaries Audrey and John Coleman were detained a few days later and their plight is even worse because the British Embassy had been unable to find out even where in the country they were being held. Then came the detention of a helicopter pilot Andrew (Pike) by the autonomous revolutionary committee in Tehran as he was trying to leave the country. He is believed to be held in Tehran.

The Foreign Office felt that they've been unable to make any headway despite daily efforts to obtain the release of, or even see these people. And if British diplomats were added to the list of those held, the situation would be even worse. The Swedish Embassy will continue the attempt to get those people home. As for the rest of the Britons in Iran, they've been repeatedly advised to leave and have chosen not to do so. Now the deportations of the Iranian students have started, they seem certain to be the target for the anger of the Iranian mob.

And this morning the home secretary, Mr Whitelaw, signed deportation orders for the first three of the Iranians to be sent home. There are more than 40 altogether. It is thought that the three will leave the country on an Iran Air flight which takes off from Heathrow Airport in just half an hour.

REFUSAL TO EXPORT SHIP TO IRAN TO BE ADJUDICATED

LD091936 London BBC Television Network in English 1825 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] A separate disagreement between Britain and Iran is expected to come before the courts in London shortly. It is over the naval supply ship, the Kharg, built at Swan Hunter on the Tyne, originally for the shah's navy. The Iranian Government has paid 40 million pounds for her but she cannot be delivered because Britain has refused an export licence. The argument is over whether the Kharg, which has a 76mm gun in her bows, is a warship as Britain claims or merely a supply ship as the Iranians maintain. Though the Iranians are planning legal action they seem to have accepted that they have a long wait on their hands. The 186 crew are putting the ship in mothballs and are returning to Iran later this week.

Details of Dispute

LD092254 London BBC Television Network in English 2000 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Excerpts] There is another source of disagreement between Britain and Iran. It is over a naval supply ship ordered by the Iranians in the shah's days, now completed and fully paid for. But Britain has refused an export licence and so Iran is seeking redress through the courts. This report from Prakash Mirchandani at Swan Hunter's yard on the Tyne.

[Begin recording] [Mirchandani] The Kharg is one of the most sophisticated supply vessels built, and that is part of the problem. The Iranians say its single 76mm gun, and even that is untested, is there for the ship's own protection. However, apart from fuel and ammunition the Kharg can carry missiles and have a launch pad for antisubmarine helicopters. The whole issue revolves around whether this can be described as a warship or not. The British Government says it is, the Iranians say it is not. They say it is a supply ship, and therefore it does not need an export licence. But until this and other delicate issues are cleared, it will be sometime before Captain (Ashtary) can sail his ship into the sunset. Captain (Ashtary) excorted me at some length around the ship, but there were certain restricted areas we could not enter. He and his crew are angry. After waiting around for 4 months at the cost of 300,000 pounds a month, they have been ordered back to Iran. The entire 186-man crew will have left by the end of the week. There are reports that not all of them are happy to return.

[(Ashtary)] We are at the end exactly of the packing, and I think the program will go ahead, according to the instructions that I have received from naval headquarters at Tehran. We go ahead but [word indistinct].

[Mirchandani] When do you think you will be on that bridge sailing the ship back to Iran?

[(Ashtary)] God knows.

[Mirchandani] The Kharg, carefully wrapped in covers and oilcloth, will then be deserted. The Iranians say they were deceived into making the final payment of 10 million pounds last April. The evidence they say lies in two documents. The first is a letter from the Iranian supervising officer to Swan Hunter. He had asked for confirmation whether the British prime minister intended not to hand over the Kharg before the American hostages were freed. The reply from the Ministry of Defense was that our prime minister had not declared any such intention. However, on the 25th of April, hours after the Iranians took delivery they were told an export licence was not going to be issued.

[Commander H. Hosseinzadeh, Iranian naval delegate] I was shattered to tell you the truth because from the beginning they told us that it was only purely a formality that they want an export licence, and even a few weeks before handover when we heard the rumor that they may not hand over the ship, I wrote to the shipbuilders and asked that we heard that the British prime minister intended not to hand over the ship to us. Could you please advise.

[Mirchandani] Swan Hunter wants the ship to be moved. The Iranians say they will not move it without an export licence. The Board of Trade says an export licence will not be issued until the American hostages are freed, and now the case is going to court. This is another reason why relations between Iran and Britain are going to be strained even further. [end recording]

CP PAPER REAFFIRMS SUPPORT OF POLISH TRADE UNIONS

LD081515 London MORNING STAR in English 8 Sep 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Poland--New Agreements the Key"]

[Text] Friends of Poland will be expecting that the changes which have now taken place in the leaderships of the Polish Communist Party, government, and trade unions, will facilitate the speedy tackling of the problems which gave rise to the recent critical situation in the country.

As the MORNING STAR has indicated previously, in our opinion the way to do that is to ensure the extension and consolidation of democracy throughout society, and in particular, to assist the trade unions to develop as self-governing bodies, independent of the state, and with the unfettered right to strike.

The statement made to the Central Committee of the Polish Communist Party by its new first secretary, Stanislaw Kania, indicates his concern to see this type of democratic development in Poland.

Undoubtedly, the way in which the leadership of the Polish Communist Party and the trade unions got out of touch with the feelings of the Polish people was a major factor in the development of the recent crisis.

It is only natural, of course, that for a very long time after socialism has been established, there will be those who do not accept the socialist basis of society.

But it would be wrong to see the strikes of the past few weeks as a product of the work of such anti-socialist elements, or to label all opposition in that way.

And, in any case, as British Communists have maintained, anti-socialist opinion can only be defeated by political argument.

This calls for everyone, irrespective of their opinions, to have full democratic rights, and to be accorded the opportunity to be fully involved in the decision-making process.

Fundamentally, what socialism is all about is the participation of ever wider sections of the working population in conscious political and social activity aimed at constantly improving the total quality of life.

Achieving this is the crucial task which faces the Communist Party, the trade unions, and the left as a whole, during the building of a socialist society.

Understanding of that was shown in the debate within the Polish parliament this weekend when deputies stressed the paramount role which must be played by the representative institutions of the Polish state.

Also important was the stress they placed on the need for more open reporting and discussion of problems in the press.

For if the people are to play an active part in building socialism, they must know the facts, including the unwelcome ones, so that they can form valid judgments on their own about what needs to be done.

The agreements reached at Gdansk and elsewhere provide the basis for strengthening democracy and developing socialism along these lines.

They need to be carried forward and realised in the activities of the Polish workers and their trade unions.

The MORNING STAR, as we have said before, will do all it can to win understanding and support among the British people for the efforts of the Polish workers and their Communist Party to work out the implementation of these measures.

In particular, one point should not be missed. Poland is heavily dependent on trade with the capitalist world. A key economic factor underlying the difficulties facing Poland has therefore been the capitalist crisis itself.

We can make a big contribution toward helping the Polish workers to solve their problems, as well as our own, by mounting a wide-ranging campaign in our country for the sort of alternative policies advanced at the TUC [Trades Union Congress] conference, which were aimed at overcoming Britain's crisis in the interests of the people.

KIPRIANOU GOVERNMENT RESHUFFLE ANNOUNCED

NC100610 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0330 GMT 10 Sep 80

[Text] President Kiprianou made an extensive government reshuffle last night. Mr Kiprianou appointed six new ministers and one deputy minister.

The newly appointed ministers are:

Minister of Education Nikolaos Konomis
Minister of Communications and Works Yeoryios Khatzikostas
Minister of Commerce and Industry Konstandinos Kittis
Minister of Agriculture and Natural Resources Nikos Pattikhis
Minister of Labor and Social Insurance Yeoryios Stavrinakis
Minister of Justice Andreas Dhimitriadhis
Deputy Interior Minister Mr Petros Stilianou

Mr Stelios Katsellis, former deputy interior minister, was appointed minister to the president. Mr Yeoryios Tombazos, former agriculture minister, was appointed minister of health.

The following ministers retain their portfolios:

Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis
Minister of Interior and Defense Kristodhoulos Veniamin
Minister of Finance Avxendis Avxendiou

The post of deputy education minister has been abolished. The members of the Council of Ministers will be sworn in at 1700 today.

KHARAVYI Criticism

NC100715 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 10 Sep 80 p 8

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou disregarded the people's feelings and announced at midnight last night the famous Council of Ministers reshuffle. The new government includes seven new ministers, who have no support whatsoever from the people.

The Education Ministry was assigned to Mr N. Konomis, who was seriously criticized for holding university positions in Greece during the dictatorship. The deputy Education Ministry post was abolished.

Mr Katsellis' appointment as minister to the president means that Mr Kiprianou has definitely removed Mr Y. Ioannidhis from the Council of Ministers. He had temporarily left this ministry when he was appointed interlocutor.

I SIMERINI Opposition

NC100846 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 10 Sep 80 p 8

[Editorial: "The Midnight Government"]

[Text] After a year of pregnancy and five minutes past midnight last night, a new government was born. There was no doubt at all that the new government would not satisfy the public. It was certain that the new government would be worse than the outgoing one. The time at which it was formed and the way in which it was announced shows the degree of responsibility and seriousness with which the president acted.

A year of preparations was enough to give the people the impression that a government would be formed to meet the circumstances.

It is clear that the new government is weaker than the outgoing one. It is even clearer that the people will not be satisfied with the new composition of the new government; on the contrary, they will deplore the way in which its midnight formation was decided upon.

In critical times, when the need for a strong government is obvious, and after a year of studying all the relevant needs and problems, a council of ministers was concocted that creates, to say the least, hilarity. It has once again been proved that the country is not governed correctly.

Under other conditions and after having followed the new government's work, we would have thought for hours, days or weeks in order to decide whether we should help the government or not. However, from the first moments after midnight it has been obvious that there was no margin for thought on our stand toward the new government.

DEMOCRATIC FRONT STATEMENT ADMITS 'CERTAIN DIFFICULTIES'

NC090625 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 9 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] The ruling Democratic [Front] Party of President Kiprianou yesterday described as "wishful thinking" reports that the party is disintegrating or going to disband.

However, it admitted that it was facing certain difficulties, which it failed to name.

"Like every party, the Democratic Party, too, faces difficulties of its own, but there can be no doubt that it will emerge strengthened to continue its services to the country and the people", the party said.

The statement was issued after reports in yesterday's weekly papers that various trends are developing in the party.

"The reports may be due to incorrect information or gossip, but in others it is obvious that the reports reflect wishful thinking and intentional undermining", a party statement said.

It added that the party bases its existence not on persons, but is the vehicle of national and public interests and that it is determined to continue its role under President Kiprianou. The systematic "dreaming" of its dissolution is of itself evidence of the significance they attack to the party, it said.

The statement also denied that certain members had presented conditions to the president of the republic, and said these reports are figments of the imagination.

The statement indicated that the party would not seek to retain members that would wish to enter politics. "It is a part of the democratic system for any one who has the right to enter politics to form any political groupings he wishes, and it is the right of the Democratic Party or any other party to react in the way it considers right to any movements, guided by the interests of the people and the national cause", the party said.

Earlier the House President Mr Alekos Mikhailidhis, deputy leader of the Democratic Party, had issued a statement through the office of the house denying reports that he had allegedly issued a manifesto about principles for formation of a new political movement.

The Greek Embassy on the other hand issued a statement denying any involvement in moves for a reshuffle of the Cyprus Government.

"As repeatedly stressed, the Greek Government is in no way involved and does not intervene in the internal affairs of the Cyprus Republic", the embassy said.

NEWSPAPERS CITE EFFECT OF ERKMEN'S OUSTER ON NATO, BASES

TO VIMA Report

AT091335 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 9 Sep 80

[Article by "TO VIMA" Correspondent Yiannis Kartalis: "Turkish Crisis Makes Return to NATO More Difficult"]

[Text] Ankara's political crisis after the dismissal of Foreign Minister Erkmen by the National Assembly is also expected to have repercussions on Greece's return to NATO's military wing.

Erkmen was accused by the opposition of being "conciliatory" toward Greece because he allegedly agreed on discussion of the details of Aegean operational control after Greece's return to the alliance. After this it is expected that Demirel will appear less "flexible" on this issue by citing the danger of his government's overthrow to the Americans.

It remains a fact that the proposals of General Rogers which were due for submission to Athens by the end of August have already been delayed and as of this moment Foreign and National Defense Ministry officials remain in ignorance as to when they will be submitted.

On the other hand it appears that Washington is in a hurry to start negotiations for the signing of the new Greek-U.S. defense agreement on bases. U.S. Ambassador McCloskey is due back in Athens tomorrow and according to existing reports available to TO VIMA he will bring Washington's proposals for the commencement of these negotiations.

It is, however, questionable whether at this moment the Greek side will proceed to negotiations on the bases--in other words before the Rogers proposals are accepted--since it has publicly declared that the bases issue is directly related with its return to NATO.

In the meantime Athens has received assurances from Ankara that there will be no change in Turkey's position toward Greece. The acting Turkish foreign minister stated yesterday that the Turkish Government will implement no changes in its foreign policy, and added: "Nor will there be a change in our position toward Greece but we will continue to settle our problems with Greece through bipartite negotiations."

At the same time Erkmen stated that he did not think his successor at the Foreign Ministry would implement any changes in his country's foreign policy.

Ankara's "intentions" will become visible during next Monday's meeting in Athens between the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries, Theodhoropoulos and Turkmen, who will appear for the meeting between Mitsotakis and his Turkish counterpart in New York on 5 October.

'Prospects for Deadlock'

AT061557 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 6 Sep 80 p 5

[From MESIMVRINI Director P. Lambrias' column, "Political Developments Diary": "Heavy Clouds are Gathering Over Our Neighboring Country"]

[Excerpt] Although the time has come--as this columnist had predicted a long time ago, assisted by statements from responsible people--for the final "clarification" of the twin problem (return to the NATO military wing and preparation of a Greek-U.S. defense agreement), yesterday's developments in Turkey have created prospects for a deadlock.

The fact that Erkmen, foreign minister in the Demirel government who repeatedly had expressed provocatively intransigent (and chauvinistic) positions on Greek-Turkish issues, was voted out--and expelled from the government--due to his...yielding to Greece(!) shows clearly how hotheaded--to the extent of absurdity--the political leadership (and the atmosphere) in Ankara is toward us.

It is also characteristic that Erkmen fell as the scapegoat in Demirel's effort not to have his entire government fall. When such things happen in Turkey--where victims of political violence every day outnumber the victims of traffic accidents and where currency devaluation, because of galloping inflation, competes with the regularity of the weather report--one wonders whether or not one has before oneself a "credible interlocutor." One has before oneself an explosive mixture of fanaticism, displeasure, deep social crisis and political incoherence.

Of course those people who do not want to view things so tragically try to find some pallid arguments: That the criticism of Erkmen's surrender to Greece was only one of the four points of the censure motion against him, the first and primary criticism being against his policy toward other Muslim people, and that Erkmen was the victim of internal rather than external political disputes. But even so and regardless of how well-founded these arguments are considered to be, they do not refute the fact that Demirel--who chose to sacrifice Erkmen--will not even be able to show the same nonexistent "conciliatoriness" that Erkmen had allegedly shown toward us.

Accusation of Turkish 'Sloganeering'

AT061506 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 6 Sep 80 p 4

[From the "Political Diary" column: "The Turkish Parliament"]

[Text] The headlines of only two newspapers say everything: "Anti-Hellenic Fury in the Turkish Parliament--Demand for Intransigence in the Aegean," and "Censure Motion Accuses Demirel's Government of 'Yielding'--Erkmen Voted Out Because of Surrender to Greece." Of course nobody could expect greater moderation or conciliatoriness from a "national representative body" which for 2 and 1/2 years has been endorsing, every 2 months, the imposition and retention of martial law in half the country....

However, every one of us who lives on this side of the Aegean has a right to express the wish and demand that the Greek national representative body not follow the Turkish representatives on their slippery course toward intransigence and tension. The Greek parliament must maintain its equanimity and avoid the slippery road of sensationalism and hypocritical sloganeering....

The Turkish deputies compete in intransigence and toughness and resort to anti-Hellenic explosions because they thus disorient the bleeding Turkish people, channel public fury into different outlets and try to shift their immense responsibilities for the common, legalized violence that is convulsing their country....

Some day the representatives of the Turkish people may understand that problems cannot be solved through cunning and oriental deviousness just as--and with greater reason--they cannot be solved through intransigence or recourse to violence. Then they will appreciate the extent of their disservice to their country and to the cause of peace--which the Turkish people most direly need in order to bind their wounds and organize their lives on a new basis....

IRAQI MINISTER BEGINS OFFICIAL CONTACTS WITH GOVERNMENT

TA091841 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Sep 80

[Text] Iraqi Culture and Information Minister Latif Nasif Jasim ad-Dulaymi, who arrived on an official visit to Ankara today, has begun his meetings. At 1500, Ad-Dulaymi visited State Minister Ahmet Karahan. In a statement before the meeting. Karahan said Turkey is also in favor of solving its problems with its neighbors and other countries through negotiations and according to civilized standards.

In his statement, the Iraqi culture and information minister noted that relations between Iraq and Turkey have not reached the freezing [donma] point and expressed the belief that the existing problems will soon be solved.

The visiting minister was received by State and Acting Foreign Minister Ekrem Ceyhun at 1600. In a speech during the meeting, Ceyhun expressed the conviction that the friendship between Turkey and Iraq will be further strengthened through this visit.
